Azpi- who has been in New York for the past ght on a business mission for the Cuban rnment. Secretary Azpiazu has been n for many years among his intimates as e wire." Now, due to the close alliance een Cuba and the United States in de- e and commercial activities, Secretary izu is much in the public eye, and is im- ing his kinetic and efficient personality all with whom he comes in contact.

is an attribute of General Mario Garcia cal which students of Latin-American af- have noted for many years, that the Presi- has a genius for selecting as his aides the persons in the right places. The construc- achievements of the various Cuban Govern- departments are not alone to be credited e Cabinet of Cuba, but are the lengthened ow of General Menocal himself.

hen it is realized that much of the bur- of the execution of Cuba's mammoth na- l programme has been assumed and borne ecretary Azpiazu, a fair idea is afforded is scope and capacity for doing big things, g them quickly and doing them right. As ral Menocal is known as much for his evements in engineering and the sugar in- ry as for his statesmanship and wisdom as a's executive, so his private secretary simi- is well versed in the technique not only of ernmental affairs, but of the sugar industry other big business undertaking with which ral Menocal has so long been identified.

rior to his incumbency in the Presidential ce, Secretary Azpiazu served as confidential and private secretary to General Meno- when the latter was the active administrator he Cuban-American Sugar Company on the d republic. He knows sugar and the sugar stry as do few men of his age. The same city which he puts into the execution of his for the Presidencia has enabled Secretary iazu before his twenty-seventh birthday to l up some strong personal investments in sugar industry, which, his friends believe, eventually align him with that class of an planters who have gained wealth and e in the markets of the world.

ecretary Azpiazu, while a Cuban, received education in the United States, and speaks nish, French and English with equal . His friends sometimes wonder whether he ot think simultaneously in three languages ell. Certainly his duties fail to reveal any dicap in his use of one language or the r.

st as President Menocal expects and in- ably obtains from his aides a full measure ervice, so, as is usually the case with men arge affairs who possess his fortunate fac- , President Menocal rewards his subordi- s in kind. Youth has been no handicap to etary Azpiazu in rising to his present posi- tion. If the achievements, as has been stated, of the Cuban Government in the past five years are the lengthened shadow of General Menocal, Secretary Azpiazu, through his close relations with the Presidencia, is almost a human shadow of General Menocal himself.

While many of the weighty problems of the Cuban Presidencia are, of course, handled by the courtly and capable "Grand Old Man" of Cuba, Dr. Rafael Montoro, the Secretary of the Presidencia, the work of Secretary Azpiazu nevertheless is of the highest importance. He has the faculty more than any other Latin-American in the public eye of sensing the heart of a business problem and getting it disposed of with the greatest possible dispatch and efficiency.

His reports and his official correspondence are classics in graceful Spanish or brief English. Secretary Azpiazu is a gifted writer, and his contributions have appeared in many media, both in Cuba and in the United States. He is also known as a trade and technical authority on sugar, but when he is transacting the business of his office his concise and capacious methods waste neither verbiage nor time. It is then a case of:

EUSEBIO S. ASPIAZU
Secretary to the President of Cuba

"Sir: say it: stop."

Secretary Azpiazu has never affected the posture, so common in Latin-America, of deep statesmanship. He prefers to be known through the achievements of his chief, and certainly there could be no fairer criterion in passing judgment upon this extraordinary young man.

Secretary Azpiazu, who has been stopping at the Ritz-Carlton, was accompanied on his most recent trip by Senora Fausta Azpiazu, who is known as one of the most beautiful of the younger matrons in Havana society. There are two little Azpiazus—a son and a daughter. Secretary and Senora Azpiazu this year occupied a summer cottage near Harwichport, on Cape Cod, and he will shortly occupy his new residence near the country club in the environs of Havana, which has been in the course of construction.

To one who comprehends today the marvelous development and still greater opportunities in the Pearl of the Antilles, prescience is not needed to read in Secretary Azpiazu's future a great and full measure of success which he has deservedly won. As in other countries, so in Latin-America, this is the age of the young man. No greater incentive to youthful ambition could be cited than the record and the achievements of Senor Eusebio S. Azpiazu.

Indianapolis Items

Indianapolis, December 20.—Christmas being but a few days off, the Retailer here is straining every point to obtain his usual allotment of holiday trade. With much larger stocks than ever before on hand his prospects are not too encouraging. The tremendous amounts paid out, and justly so, for Liberty Bonds, Saving Stamps, Red Cross, all more important than cigars, are compelling people to do away with their usual donations to their employees, friends, etc. The big raise in prices for all necessities also has a tendency to remind people that economy must be exercised, and that the cigar retailer must abide by the inevitable, considering the loss of his regular holiday trade as another little bit done for his country. His immediate loss will, no doubt, be made up after the holidays by better business, since smokers who receive cigars as gifts will not stop smoking, but will buy their own cigars in a regular way. When the year is up, Mr. Retailer will find his cash receipts as large as usual for December.

Jobbers in this city, after loading the retailers up with tremendous stocks, preaching advances in price of all cigars, tobaccos, pipes and cigarettes, have made unusual efforts to sell their goods to the consumer, which has not been taken to very kindly by the retailers, and the jobbers no doubt will feel the effect of their actions in the near future. Considering that this eventful year was better than jobbers anticipated, it is surprising that Mr. Jobber is not content.

In closing this year, both jobbers and retailers may look forward to good business next year. Fort Benjamin Harrison, our Senators maintain, will be the camp for over forty thousand sodiers during 1918.

The cigar store windows this year have certainly been treated well, and have not been outdone by any department or other stores, particularly the chain stores of the Deschler Co. House of Crane and the Schatz Importation Co. carry magnificent displays of holiday cigars, pipes and smokers' novelties.

The Liberty Guards (Home Guards of Indiana) are now forming at the request of our Governor. Cigar men who have enlisted so far are Max Schatz and Fred Pixley.

The Cinco cigar, under the able management of William Eisenlohr, a resident of this city again, is meeting with great success as a "six cents" proposition.

Antonio & Cleopatra in fine holiday packings, Tuval of Marcelinow Perez & Co. Perfecto Garcias, Corinas and other sterling brands, are well represented in windows and fine cases.

Traveling men are evidently off the road at present.

News of Mr. Lasker's connection with the house of Perfecto Garcia & Bros. was received here with pleasure by the friends of both. We hope that Mr. Lasker will include Indianapolis in his territory and that we may see him here.

A KINK IN THE LAW

Makes It Advisable to Have a Special Factory for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

In line with the remarkably generous response to appeals made by "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" is the patriotism displayed in the recent announcement that the various tobacco companies will prepare a special factory to aid the movement.

This move is made necessary by the law which prohibits the packing of tobacco and cigarettes in the same building. After long negotiation with the officials at Washington arranagements were made to establish the factory under the supervision of internal revenue officers. The rent and overhead cost of the "tobacco fund plant" are being borne entirely by the various tobacco companies. The salaries of the government officials devoting their attention to the necessary revenue work are also paid by the "smoke-makers," among whom are the American Tobacco Co., Liggett and Myers Tobacco Co., P. Lorillard Co., R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., and Tobacco Products Corporation.

A SIX MONTHS RAILWAY RECORD.

"Approximately complete statistics of freight movement during the first six months after the United States entered the war, hat is, April to September inclusive, which have been compiled by the Bureau of Railway Economics for the Railroad War Board, disclose that in that period the railways not only handled far more traffic than in any earlier six months of their history, but also as much as in any entire year prior to 1907," says the Railway Age Gazette in its current issue. "It will be recalled that the years 1906 and 1907 marked the climax of a long period of rapid increase of railroad business which resulted in the longest and most acute congestion of traffic and 'shortage' of cars ever known until recent months. It is therefore not without significance that in the first six months of 1917, after the country entered the war, the railways handled as much freight as they did in the entire year 1906.

"In 1915 the railways handled only 30 per cent more freight than in 1906, while in 1917 they are handling approximately 100 per cent more than they did in 1906. These facts illustrate not only the enormous increase which has occurred in railway freight business during the past 11 years, but also how swiftly the bulk of the increase has come within the last two years.

"The total number of tons of freight handled one mile in the six months April to September by Class I roads, handling about 95 per cent of the freight traffic of roads of that class, was 204,702,861,865. This in an increase of 14 per cent over the freight business handled by the same roads in the same months of 1916. The increase in the average tons hauled per car was from 24.8 tons to 27 tons, or 9 per cent and the increase in the average tons hauled per train was from 626 tons to 675 tons or 7.8 per cent.

"It is interesting, as indicating the increase in the efficiency of railroad operation which has occurred since 1906, to note that in that year the average freight trainload was only 344 tons as compared with the record of 675 tons per train made in the months April to September. If the railroads had moved the traffic of these six months of 1917 in the same average trainload as they handled the freight of 1906, they would have had to render in these six months about 96 per cent more freight train service than they actually did render. They ran freight trains 330,000,000 miles in that six months. On the basis of the trainload of 1906 they would have had to run them about 645,000,000 miles.

SALESMEN OFF THE ROAD?—ADVERTISE!

Lessened trade in those lines affected by war conditions, and temporary complete cessation of trade in some lines, due to the difficulty of obtaining deliveries, lack of raw materials, etc., has caused many sales managers to reduce their forces. In a number of lines traveling salesmen have been recalled to the home office.

Under such circumstances some sales managers have questioned the advisability of advertising, when there was "no business." The advertising manager who finds this attitude prevailing, in spite of his well-grounded belief in correct advertising principles, oftentimes is allowed to continue his trade paper schedules under protest, with the possibility constantly present that cancellation of advertising contracts will be ordered at any moment, even though he should advise against it. In such a situation it may well be contended, and with good reason, that business conditions of this kind make the continuation of trade paper advertising even more necessary than usual.—Class.

EDWARDS ANSWERS

Questions Concerning the Payment of Internal Revenue Taxes—Things that Shouldn't Be Ignored.

Collector of Internal Revenue Edwards has proposed this catechism as an aid to income tax payers:

Am I required to render a personal income tax return for the year 1917? A. Yes. If unmarried, with an income of $1,000 or more; if married with an income of $2,000 or more.

Where should my personal return for the year 1917 be filed? A. With the collector of the district in which is your legal residence.

When may my 1917 return be filed with a collector? A. Any day after December 31, 1917, and not later than March 1, 1918.

Will failure to file my return within the time prescribed make me liable to the penalty? A. Yes, to one of not less than $20 or more than $1,000, and you will be liable to 50 per cent. additional tax.

May an extension of time beyond March 1, 1918, be obtained? A. Yes, if you are unable to file because of illness or absence from home you may, on request, get a thirty day extension.

Would a personal return rendered by an agent be accepted? A. If a taxpayer, because of illness, absence or non-residence, is unable to render a personal return, he may appoint an agent. The agent then assumes responsibility for making a correct return.

May a husband and wife, living together, and each receiving independent incomes, render separate returns? A. Yes; if each receives an income of $1,000 or more. If the income of either is less than $1,000, and the combined income is $2,000 or more, a joint return should be rendered.

If husband and wife render joint return, is the additional tax assessed against that return based upon the aggregate amount of income shown? A. No. The normal income tax will be assessed the aggregate whether separate or joint returns are rendered, but the additional income taxes are only assessed against the separate income of each.

Is a married man entitled to a personal exemption of $2,000 and $400 additional exemption on account of two dependent children, whose total net income does not exceed $2,400, but does equal or exceed $2,000, required to render a return? A. Yes. While he is not required to pay a tax, he is required to render a return if his net income equals or exceeds $2,000.

TO USE DUTCH SHIPS

By Agreement the United States Acquires 88 Merchant Vessels Which Will Be Employed Immediately.

WASHINGTON, December 23.—All Dutch ships in American ports since last spring will be taken over immediately by the Shipping Board and sent to sea. Most of them are in the North River at New York.

An amicable agreement to this effect has been reached by the Netherlands mission, the State Department and the Export and Shipping Boards.

In anticipation of the speedy signing of the agreement the steamers strung out along the North River have been coaled.

They will take their grain over to Belgium. Another part of the Dutch fleet will be sent to Java for sugar. Some of the ships will be loaned to England.

The addition of the Dutch fleet in American waters to American shipping constitutes, according to officials of the Shipping Board today, the largest quota of ships, with one exception—the German and Austrian—acquired by the United States since the shipping programme got under way. The Dutch fleet totals 88 ships, with a tonnage of about 350,000. The German and Austrian ships taken over, repaired and put in service total to date 45.

Taxes on 3 for 10 Cent Cigars

The perplexing question as to whether cigars retailing at 3 for 10c. or 10 for 35c. should be taxed under Class A at $3.00 per M, or under Class B at $4.00 per M has at last been definitely settled.

In the official decision, handed down by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it is said:

"If the only actual retail price in the case of cigars sold only in packages or bundles is for the lot, the nearest approach to the actual price of a single cigar is the price of the package or bundle divided by the number of cigars therein.

"If there is no retail price of a single cigar, the law does not permit the Government to substitute a hypothetical figure or price therefor. It must accordingly be concluded that the regulations are incorrect in this respect, and that the rate of tax on cigars which are sold at retail only at the rate of 3 for 10c., or 10 for 35c., and which are not sold singly, is $3.00 per thousand and not $4.00 per thousand.

"However, if cigars are not put up in packages or bundles, even though they have an established price per lot, it may be assumed that they are also sold at retail singly, and the price of a single cigar may be determined by dividing the price of the lot by the number of cigars therein and adding such fraction of a cent as will make a price in integral cents."

The Commissioner thus modifies his former decision reported by us in our Bulletin No. A of December 10 in which he held that

"cigars which are sold only by the box and never retailed in less quantities, the rate of tax is to be determined by dividing the box price by the number of cigars packed therein."

Under the present decision the cigars need not be packed in boxes. If they are done up in lots in the form of packages or mere bundles, the $3.00 tax will apply.

In issuing advices to the trade, regarding the Commissioner's decision, Secretary Dushkind of the T. M. A. said: "We must apologize for the one day's delay in issuing this bulletin which is inconsistent with the high standard of efficiency that we are endeavoring to live up to, the delay being due entirely to the poor railroad facilities. The decision was signed by the Commissioner on Friday at about 5 P. M., but the train bringing our Secretary from Washington instead of reaching New York about 7 A. M. Saturday, did not arrive until Saturday afternoon, and hence this Bulletin could not be issued until today."

CIGARETTE MANUFACTURING IN HONGKONG.

George E. Anderson, American Consul-General at Hongkong, reports that there has been a steady development of cigarette making in Hongkong this year. The industry is chiefly represented by the large modern factory of the Canton Nanyang Bros. Tobacco Co., which has steadily enlarged its plant and output, and during the year has occupied a large additional building. Its consumption of American leaf tobacco has increased from about 450 tierces and hogsheads of tobacco monthly a year ago, to about 500 tierces and hogsheads. The amount was 400 tierces and hogsheads two years ago, and 300 three years ago. It is now consuming about 11,000 pounds of Chinese tobacco a month, compared with 10,000 pounds monthly a year ago, and is turning out 5,000,000 cigarettes a day, compared with 4,500,000 a day a year ago.

"The concern is making its own cigarette tins, and is giving every attention to equipping its factory along the most modern American lines. Ever since the beginning of the war it has had more or less difficulty in obtaining suitable paper for cigarettes, but at present this difficulty is less insistent than it has been.

"The success of this Hongkong factory is in some respects unusually significant. It has been built up as an independent concern, has had to face the competition of a large organization, has gone through the usual cigarette 'war,' and has steadily developed in spite of all opposition. It is at present manufacturing 10 grades of cigarettes. Its chief line is a paper packet containing 10 cigarettes and a bamboo holder which is retailed for 5 cents local currency or about 3.4 cents gold at present exchange."

The Danville, Ky., tobacco market sold a total of 453,000 pounds of tobacco during the opening week at a floor average of $31.59 per hundred. This is the highest average ever made in Danville.

When Carroll's Luck Came

Though Pittsburgh may boast of being his birthplace, Earl Carroll is not identified with steel production. Neither is he associated with the manufacture of stogies. His name does not appear on the roster of multimillionaires who were proteges of "Andy" Carnegie. No oil, coal, coke or iron ore "interests" acclaim Carroll as a captain of industry. He is not a master of transportation, a genius in engineering, nor a wizard in the application of electricity. Only rivals, awed and envious, would assert that Carroll was implicated in any development of natural gas. Having, perhaps, a typical Pittsburgher's thirst for adventure, not lacking courage nor capable of being intimidated by adversity, he faced the music and eventually bracketed romance with finance high enough to attract great attention. Making himself a celebrity, proving his right to consideration, he was in the position to live in the midst of great comfort. Then, voluntarily, he forsook luxury, he exchanged ease for the privations of the field, he thrust aside opportunities to earn $100,000 a year, preferring instead to take the pay of a private in the ranks.

When Earl Carroll was a youngster, he had an idea that he could be a playwright. But his folks thought that he had better be a carpenter or anything that would enable him to cross the threshhold, Saturday night, with a pay envelope in his pocket. Hoping to settle the argument, Earl started to write a play. However, with the play half finished, young Carroll compromised with his parents by taking a job at six dollars a week as a program boy in a Pittsburgh theater.

Such identification with dramatic art was not entirely satisfying. The allurements of program peddling were outclassed by a desire to travel. Having developed wanderlust, Carroll soon was "on his way," going West.

Not having the cash requisite to make traveling swift and comfortable, Carroll worked along the lines of least resistance for a time, and finally he found himself in San Francisco. To the youthful newcomer whose ambitions yet were vague and indefinite, California seemed to be void of opportunity. But, through the Golden Gate, beyond the ocean, was the glamor and the lure of the Orient. Crossing the Pacific in a manner cheap rather than prideful, Carroll arrived in Manila. Almost, so soon as he landed, he tried to induce a capitalist to erect a vaudeville house.

Thus attempting to promote a theatrical enterprise, the young Pittsburgher wasted time and breath. Whether the man of money was timid or the arguments presented did not appeal strongly, one need not state, now. Suffice to say that Carroll ascertained, later, that there wasn't the ghost of a chance of putting the deal through.

Discouraged and hungry, he sought employment in an odoriferous restaurant in that part of Manila known as Quiapo. "Slinging hash" and washing dishes, kept busy about 16 hours a day, he had no high thoughts concerning the nobility of toil. He hated menial labor. But, the one redeeming feature of the situation was an opportunity to eat. The restaurant owner took notice. Not as a generous host who deems that an extra quantity of food consumed is a sincere compliment, attesting the excellence of the table. Rather did the proprietor argue that the new employe was eating up profits. Following a discussion concerning the value of victuals and service, Carroll found himself out of a job.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Carroll in Camp

Less enthusiastic regarding Manila then, he was tempted to ascertain if fame and fortune were waiting for him in Hongkong. Working his way, occasionally averting wrath by singing ditties to the ship's cook, he made the voyage. In Hongkong he was offered the position of reporter on an English journal that accused itself of being a daily newspaper. The pay was scant and the tenure of office very uncertain. Few read the daily and scarcely anyone advertised in it, so in a short time it happened that Carroll was at liberty to obtain work elsewhere.

Reaching Shanghai, he entered the Chinese Imperial customs service. Assigned to duty temporarily, he contrasted the smallness of the pay with the exacting nature of the work required of him. He was promised a raise, but he failed to appreciate the possibilities of "squeeze," of the kind practiced on the China coast, in the old days. Others obtained "good money." On Carroll, besides additional labor, was thrust advice that he didn't care to take. Consequently an unimportant vacancy occurred in the Chinese Imperial customs service at Shanghai. Earl Carroll had stowed himself away on a steamer bound for Manila. His provisions for the voyage were in a small satchel that he carried.

Without a ticket, or the money to buy one, he was discovered aboard the vessel, the second day. The captain of that steamer had no pity on stowaways. Chased down into the fireroom, Carroll had to pay his way by shoveling coal. How near sheol, the fireroom of a steamer in the tropics is, only those who have been there can tell. Carroll endured the ordeal.

As the steamer came to anchor in Manila Bay, Carroll leaped overboard and swam ashore, preferring the peril from sharks in the water to the torment of the fireroom.

From the Philippines, eventually, he got back to the United States. After many adventures Carroll landed in New York. He still had the idea that he could be a playwright. He finished a play, took it to several managers, yet none would give him a hearing. Playwriting ceased to look like profitable business, so he decided to write popular songs, having heard of fortunes that others had made in a short time. He composed one hundred songs. No publisher wanted them. Persisting, he started on his second century. Needing help, a New York publisher gave Carroll a job at ten dollars a week.

Carroll surprised the publisher by writing "Isle D'Amour." Encouraged and placed in the way of becoming rich, Carroll collaborated with Enrico Caruso and wrote the words for "Dreams of Long Ago." He followed this with "Dreaming."

In spite of a thousand setbacks, Carroll made good. Oliver Morosco heard of him and gave him a chance to write the songs for "So Long Letty." What Carroll did for the show is common knowledge. With "So Long Letty" playing to packed houses, Carroll set to work on "Canary Cottage" and turned out a second winner. He wrote words and music, although he cannot tell one note from another. He hums tunes to his pianist who jots them down.

When "Canary Cottage" was on the road for several months, Carroll's royalty amounted to $1,000 a week. Taking some of his wealth he built a bungalow on top of the Godfrey building, at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue, New York. The cozy home, perched on the roof of the skyscraper cost upwards of $30,000.

Prior to building the most expensive bungalow in New York, Carroll was married to Mlle. Marcelle. In the great moving picture entitled "A Daughter of the Gods," Mlle. Marcelle had an important part. Also she was an admired member of the company that produced "A Successful Calamity."

Happily married and practically assured of earning $100,000 by his work during the year, Earl Carroll didn't make excuses or wait, when the nation needed fighting men. He volunteered, enlisting as a private in an infantry regiment. Afterward, he was transferred to the aviation service.

His wife, who has been active in Red Cross work, plans to go to France, there to do what she can to aid in caring for the wounded.

READY FOR A ROSE TIP CAMPAIGN.

Harry Noble, the new sales manager for the Themelis Bros. Co., is planning a campaign, both active and extensive, to begin after the first of the year. New arrangements make it practicable to increase greatly the manufacture of the famous Rose Tip cigarettes and special efforts will be put forth also on the new Themelis brand which will retail for 20 cents the pack. Noble will take charge of eastern territory, while George Themelis will be busy developing trade in the west. The demand for Themelis Rose Tips never was better, and now that it becomes possible to supply distributors with greater quantities, the outlook is indeed roseate.

A Revolutionary Suit

"The suit brought against Colgate & Co., the well-known manufacturers of soaps, etc., goes further than any other suit I know about, which grows out of an effort on the part of a manufacturer to keep his product from being cut," writes the editor of the Modern Merchant. "Colgate & Co. are being attacked in Virginia because they refused to sell their products to firms whom they knew would cut the price. This the Government contends is illegal interference with competition.

"The importance of this suit is in the fact that apparently through it the Government is endeavoring to revoke the fundamental rule of trade, several times affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, that a seller of ordinary merchandise such as soaps, can choose his own customers. The Government now wants the courts to tell Colgate & Co. that they cannot, after all, choose their customers, in that they must not refuse to sell solely for the reason that the would-be buyer will cut the price. Of course, if a manufacturer is forbidden to refuse, he is obliged to sell, but unless the rule is laid down that a seller must sell everybody who comes forward with the money, how could a verdict such as the Government asks for in this case, be enforced? Suppose the court upholds the Government's contention and tells Colgate & Co. that they must not refuse to sell a buyer merely because he would cut the price. As long as any vestige of the old rule allowing choice of one's customers remains, Colgate & Co. would simply need to say: 'Very well, we won't refuse for that reason any longer. We will refuse to sell this concern not because it would cut our price—oh, no!—but because we don't like the paint on its store front. Or because we don't like the name of the street on which it does business.' And so on and so on. There is only one way to get around this, and that is to abolish the rule of choice entirely and say to every dealer with goods to sell, 'You must sell to anybody who offers the money.' Will the Government or the courts do that? Never in this world, and that is why I predict that this case, so far as the part of it above discussed is concerned, will never get anywhere. Of course, if Colgate & Co., in addition to refusing to sell cutters themselves, have also compelled their distributors to refuse to sell them, that is a different proposition, and two recent cases have been decided that that is illegal."

MISS ELLEN MACGREGOR

A Scottish Lassie Who Smokes Cigarettes

Of the thousands of British women who have volunteered for war work in France, not a few are driving ambulances. The Scottish lassie shown in the picture is one of the most skilful and daring of these drivers. To get the wounded away to places of safety, she takes the risks of battle quite as quickly as any man driving an ambulance in that sector. Several times, almost miraculously, she escaped being blown to pieces by exploding shells. Twice, recently, she has been "cited" for especially brave and devoted service.

Not Comic for Hotel Men

After a generation of prosperity, during which the hotel man was urged to contrive everything expensive and artificial in his service, the American public, now suddenly converted to economy over night, turns upon him and blames him for his waste and extravagance.

This is rather comic. But not for the hotel man. He finds himself a pivot in the sudden right-about-face on food conservation, and with so many problems of his own that it is not fair to make him the scapegoat for the public's own extravagance.

Pointing out food waste in the average hotel is easy, and everybody's doing it. There are some unmistakable stupidities, such as serving both wheat bread and corn bread and permitting guests to fill themselves with white rolls before the corn bread is passed around or providing corn bread and then compelling the waiters to be stingy with it when there is plenty of corn, and true conservation consists in letting guests eat all they possibly can, thus automatically cutting down on other food. But these inconsistencies are often due to difficulties with hotel workers, who are scarce and green. Another form of waste which is being pointed out in hotels everywhere is that of the garbage can—plates going back to the kitchen with uneaten remnants of nourishing food. The public sees that happening every day and criticizes the hotel man and seldom stops to think.

Two bodies of experts are now at work upon this problem of correctly gauging the public appetite, so that it will order no more than it can eat, and eat all that it orders. The hotel men are trying to gauge it, but can only strike averages. The public itself must furnish the best standard, each individual ordering his lunch or dinner with the knowledge that food is really scarce, and that his saving is a direct contribution to winning the war. Nor is the hotel man the only pivot in this great national transformation from extravagance to economy. The grocer, the butcher and the baker find themselves confronted by the same difficulties and subject to criticism. As food conservation develops the public must be brought to see its shortcomings, an explanation job—a job for writers and editors. JAMES H. COLLINS.

WALTZ KING PLAYS SANTA CLAUS.

Frederick Knight Logan, composer of "Missouri Waltz," played the part of Santa Claus to about twenty-five poor kiddies in the Majestic Hotel on Christmas morning. In the ballroom he distributed clothes, shoes, toys, and baskets of food. At the end of the ceremony, Mr. Logan on discovering one little fellow weighted down with more than he could carry with comfort, tucked a kiddie kar under one arm and a basket under another and led the urchin to the car.

In the afternoon Mr. Logan journeyed to Coney Island with a party of friends, where he acted as judge for Stauch's annual dancing contest, which was won by Private E. Beck and Miss M. Murray. Throughout the contest the orchestra played Mr. Logan's "Missouri Waltz."

The Governor General Signs the Decree

In 1781, Vasco, the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, decreed that the government should have control of the production, manufacture and sale of tobacco. By this decree a monopoly was created which remained in operation a hundred years. Due to the strict enforcements of regulations, especially in the earlier period of its operation, the monopoly secured for Philippine tobacco an enviable reputation for quality throughout the world.

Careful supervision of the industry by the American government in the Philippines, together with the enterprise and the business sagacity of Manila manufacturers and importers, is building anew a splendid reputation for Manila cigars.

SOLDIERS' PAY COMPARED WITH DEALER'S PROFITS

Calculations and Accounts from Up State.

December 24, 1917.

Ivan Russiavitch gets a penny-a-day for his soldiering service. No matter whether Czar Nick Romanoff or Lenine-Trotsky pays the man, he only has 32 cents coming to him each month when the Treasury is solvent!

And, in Austria, where business is better, each private in the ranks gets 73 cents a month! This is 2½ cents daily is only half as bad as Jean Franco's $1.50 per every thirty days.

But Jean's French Government really allows something more than this nickel each day when the soldier is on active duty.

While Germany, where you're supposed to be shot for $1.65 each month, is almost as liberal as its ally, Turkey, who think $11 the year is enough for common troopers!

Japan, though, makes a dollar go even farther. For she pays $8 annually to each private. But in Italy they think $5.83 is what they can afford to pay monthly.

Tommy Atkins seems happy with his $7.60 every four weeks. Though on foreign service Tommy gets just a trifle additional, besides more liberal allowances in grog, tobacco, an' extrees.

So what do you know about the American Soldier? Because, even an ordinary private receives $33 monthly while on the trench front. And, if he's got a first-class badge, he gets $36.60 instead!

That's $41 a year more than a Russian colonel gets! Well, well, well! Uncle Sam appears to have a bunch of high-priced men on the line, but they're worth it, you bet, else why would they collect, individually, just about twice as much as all the other fighting men put together?

But the point of the matter is this: When all the various units of the Rainbow, Sunset and the thousand other divisions arrive in France they spend money.

It has even been estimated that they'll spend an average of $500 per man per year. Something like five billion dollars, if you please!

Sure, a mere bag-o-shells. Still, that same bag-o-billions, spent abroad, is exactly what's worrying lots of merchants in the good old U. S. A. These business men, patriotic to the core, want the boys to have it, and they want the boys to spend it.

But they hate like the deuce to see so much good money going Over There when the ninety million folk still at home are strainin' their eyes an' backs to cheer up the diminishin' business Over Here!

Do you think it would be all right to ask the overseas brigades to buy nothing but American made goods Over There?

Labor unions demand much loyalty. Why shouldn't the Union of the United States of America demand similar support?

Even the retail trade would eventually prosper under such conditions of purchase. For, with the help of the big quality-brand manufacturers, through distribution to jobbers and retailers, the home boys would soon become mail-order buyers from their old favorite town store.

It's no more trouble to parcel-post to France or England than it is to deliver around the corner. Montgomery-Ward-Sears-Roebuck do it all over the world. And your tobacconist can just as easily ship his cigars, cigarettes, tobacco and pipes.

If he doesn't, the Sheriff of Nottingham, or some other neighborly fellow from Robin Hood's barn will shortly put a jazz band in his establishment to play a No Sale accompaniment on the dusty piano keys of the N. C. R.

Two new chain systems are soon to open shop in the Capitol District, it is announced. Albany has been selected as the wedge for at least two branches of the A. Schulte cigar stores.

One of the links will be on Broadway, and the other on South Pearl street. Openings will will probably occur in the Spring, just so soon as leases can be arranged for the two sites now indicated in the retail business center.

No one seems to know much about the other chain's details. But it is apparent that the Owl Drug Co. is getting ready to do business in this State's hub.

Newspaper advertisements of the Owl's trade-mark have recently appeared in local papers. And some dealers say the big Pacific Coast concern will open retail stores in this vicinity very shortly, with their customary lines of cigars and drugs.

Retailers here who subscribe for the Mutual-Profit Coupon Corporation certificates and coupons were glad to get a big batch of specimen posters for soldier kits and holiday display.

In their letter on the subject, the Mutual people remark: "Lack of adequate poster service is one of the worst handicaps the average dealer has to contend with. Snappy posters are the life of trade, but how can an independent dealer compete with chain stores when ten posters would cost him as much as a thousand posters would cost his competitor?

"So we are pleased to announce that hereafter we will be able to supply our customers with Schulte posters in addition to the regular Mutual posters. Some of the Schulte posters announce special deals, and not all of these deals may suit your purpose, but we believe most of them can be used to your advantage, and that many of them will help to bring you extra business."

When Fred Friday filed his petition in bankruptcy last week, he admitted liabilities of $18,805. For assets, Friday claims a $1,000 equity in his hotel property. Also $2,000 worth of fixtures in the Amsterdam hostelry.

Among the varied creditors are the B. Payn's Sons Tobacco Co., of Albany, and Aschoff Brothers, of Amsterdam, who have a $162 account. Papers were entered in the Federal Court at Utica.

"How much hay do you want to buy at $25 the ton?" briskly invited Gil Thompson, the Clinton Square cigarist, Albany. "Because I have a barnful to sell at the market price. No samples to show, for it's just grass hay, to be delivered, as Francis Bannerman always quotes, 'as is.'"

Some big Christmas, what? With all the slippery snow carefully removed from the roof, chimney wide open, socks, in five sizes, dangling from the proper pins on the mantel shelf!

Five sizes is right! Look yourself! For Mike Connors has got to play fat-man-in-a-red-suit for all five of his kids, else there'll be right there in the Connors' household exactly what Hashimura Togo calls an "Hon. Holiday."

You can bet your red-topped boots that's why Mike has been seen considerably, of late, in the Albany stores on Pearl and State streets, where things are sold besides cigars—perhaps they're toys!

Anyway, business around the Hampton Hotel has lately been such that the cigar stand could reasonably let Mike off for an hour or so, while he shopped about for those amusin' boats an' trains an' animals, which even a cigar manager has been known to show little boys an' girls the clock-and-key ideas to make 'em work!

"All out Owls" announced Paul Wessels, the Capitol District book-and-grip man for the General Cigar Co., New York. "Boxes appear to be the difficulty. Transportation has been ragged, too. But I have all my orders rushed through by express, so the delay there is only occasional. Quite likely our M. A. Gunst branch will be in better shape on packages after the holiday commotion."

In another week Albany will permit its local affairs to be dissolved from the tobacco business for the first time in several years.

For it was just about eight years ago that James B. McEwan first became Mayor of Albany. And the late Senator-Mayor was associated with the Payn Tobacco Co., on Broadway.

Then, after a term in the Common Council as Alderman and President, Mayor Joseph W. Stevens succeeded McEwan. So, for four years more the town has been governed by the State street tobacconist.

Now, to signalize his retirement from the city service, Mayor Stevens has given a dinner, at his Lake avenue home, and then various officials of his administration, including several political friends, assembled at the Mayor's residence to regretfully part from their colleague.

After January fist, Mayor Stevens will devote his attention to his Commissionership on the Catskill Condemnation Board of the Schoharie watershed. Manager C. J. Shaxby will continue to operate the retail and wholesale business in cigars at State and Broadway.

"Merrie Christmas," greeted Sir Arthur Dixon, K. C. B. "This is my final trip for the year on the Falk Tobacco products. However, it is not yet too late for the shipment of your additional holiday requirements on Tareyton, Vintage, Serene, or any of the other tobaccos of our New York and Richmond factories. Express delivery will arrive in season for your last minute business."

Department stores pay their window dressers excellent wages, as a rule. For these big business houses realize the importance of tremendous display.

Cigar stores, on the other hand, frequently permit the window work to go to grass. Even here in the Capitol District, where modern cigar retailers are numerous, the druggists usually surpass the real cigarmen in their cigar displays.

But there are exceptions. And the most conspicuous of all are the two immense windows of the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., South Pearl and Division streets, Albany.

Now, for the holidays, the Dearstynes have presented windows which every cigar dealer should see. They are wonderful!

In the South Pearl street front, Manager Will Dearstyne has assembled pipes. Pipes! PIPES! Probably never before in this vicinity have so many gross and varieties of pipes been displayed together in one spot!

On the bottom, shelves, sides, extensions, wherever you look, you see pipes in shapes and styles you never before thought of! And every single line in the lot is marked. Marked plainly with just the thing the buyer looks for —the price!

C. P. F. pipes, especially the war-kit packs, are featured. While, to remove the monotony of the showing in just this one line of goods, the Dearstynes have arranged for the suggestion of a few cigar brands here and there.

Also cigar and cigarette holders. Cigar and cigarette cases. Pouches. Every accessory for a smoker is on view, all attractively and seasonably contrasted with the red and white of winter's colors.

Then, in the corner window, the Dearstyne display is banked from floor to roof with cigars! All the brands you ever heard of! In decorated packages of tens, fortieths, twentieths, tenths, and every other way, including the boite nature souvenir assortment of Que Placers for $6.

Merely to indicate the extent of the line up, suppose you glance over this list of offerings in the Dearstyne window:

Admiration, Muriel, Gato, La Muna, Gerad, Rocky Ford, Roig, Body Guard, Seal Skin, Rex Armas, Dearstyne Perfecto, Pigaback. And all piled up to the tin roof, remember, in sufficient quantity to stock an ordinary jobber!

Inside, the retail forces commanded by Ed. and Will D. have been increased, for the week, by Fred, Frank, Charlie, Al. Gunn and even the boys from the wholesale shipping room.

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching.
Cheer up, comrade, and be gay!"

Do you hear them coming? Our army? Don't you hear the ground tremble? And don't you feel the cheer?

You should. For all the general, colonels, majors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, privates, even the cooks, of Colonel Fred Well's big Republican Army are on their way to the Capitol District!

It's the Col. Wells' brigade from the 17th Kings district, somewhere in Brooklyn. For the Colonel has been re-elected to the State Assembly.

And he brings with him, to Albany, not merely the title of a military command, but the actual record of 41 years' service as private-to-lieutenant-colonel of the 23d Regiment, N. G., N. Y.

Disqualified from active field soldiering, Colonel Wells still has a patriotic duty to perform in the approaching Legislature.

Because, from his past performances in that body, his fellow members know that Fred never allows a slur to be cast upon the Flag. This, last session, was a frequent occurrence from one of the socialist members.

And the Army? Well, that tramp you hear of the oncoming comrades is the quite natural result of Fred Wells' business. Which, you ought to know, is cigars. While the rank and file of generals-to-privates are right there on the boxes—front marks!

Everything was frozen! Even the fire-whistle! And the hydrants! And the firemen, too!

That's why Bill Powers, over in Ilion, had a $7,000 fire last Sunday night, which almost completly destroyed his building.

Hot ashes in the cellar were the direct cause of the blaze. But the frosty condition of the alarm, water, men, and so on, resulted in the destruction of the cigar business, the restaurant, and the homes of two families overhead.

"After to-day," confided George Thompson, while looping up that $10,000 fur and astrachan coat of his, "I hope I won't see a time-table or a train of cars for two weeks! For I've been on the double trot trying to straighten out Fatima and other Liggett & Myers brand shipments to jobbers for the last several busy weeks. And I'm now going home to New York just to see what the holiday vacation will do for me in the way of change in the subject."

From their New York office, at 212 Fifth avenue, the same Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. writes the trade about the transportation delay on Piedmonts, Chesterfields and Fatimas.

They also say: "We are now ready, and are gradually distributing the new 5, 10, 15-cent packages. It is not our intention to make any exchanges of old stock, but you will have no trouble in disposing of your present 10s and 20s if you will establish 6, 11, and 16-cent prices.

"These prices will enable you to be on even terms with any sort of competition, and will tend to preserve your volume, and foster the growth of the business.

"We are sure that it is not your wish to create any impression with your retail trade that any advantage is being taken of an unusual situation, and we know your influence will be exerted on the side of that which is right and fair."

It is understood that Jimmie Horan is sitting up in bed occasionally. He has been on the hospital pneumonia list since he was obliged to quit his Broadway, Albany, store with a severe cold.

Social, athletic, political, fraternal, religious, and all sorts of Capitol District organizations composed of the younger men are going out of business 'til the end of the war.

One of the latest to go is the Matthew P. Flood Association, of the South End, Albany. This club was named for Mat Flood, who used to sell cigars and things in his store downtown.

Now, however, Mat and his brother Will are both at Camp Devens. Johnny and Jimmie Flood are still here, but may put on their war paint any day.

So many members of the association have also gone into service that the organization has decided to suspend, like many others.

THE SMOKER.

Tampa's Cigar Industry

Described by a Woman

Cast your glance southward until it rests on Tampa, a town that was a few years ago a sleepy hamlet sprawled in the sands of the gulf coast. It is now a progressive little city of 70,000 population half of which derives revenue directly from a single manufacturing interest.

"The city that makes all the rest of the world smoke!" This was the significant slogan on Tampa's last civic post cards.

Something over 300 cigar factories are now located in this Florida town, with more than 20,000 Latins, that is, Spaniards, Cubans and Italians engaged in them. A quarter of a million dollars is the weekly payroll of these factories, a million cigars per diem the output—sufficient annually to belt the globe, with enough fragrant perfectos left over to give a smoker, inviting the entire fourth estate of America.

Tampa's big industry was indeed snatched bodily from another country. These are "clear Havanas" and par excellence, that the Florida factories produce—Spanish handmade "cigarros," fashioned from start to finish each by an expert craftsman.

It is pleasant to record that no class of manual laborers on the globe perform their daily work under more sanitary and agreeable conditions than the cigar operatives in this semi-tropical American city.

Again, no class of workers whose occupation involves so little of personal hazard receives wages to compare with those prevailing in the Tampa factories.

The miner, toiling in subterranean midnights, with danger dogging each step, earns from a half to two-thirds the wages of these easy-going cigarmakers. The printer's work presupposes, besides his technical training, a good rudimentary education and a far higher grade of native intelligence than that required in this manufacing. Yet the printer works for much less money than is paid to the Tampa operatives, among whom—alas!—illiteracy prevails in the rank and file.

The average pay drawn by the skilled craftsman, under whose nimble fingers the finest Havanas evolve, is from $25 to $40 per week, while that of the least skilled, whose work is confined to cheaper grades, runs from $12 to $20.

For the individual records established by expert, topmost grade regalia workmen, well, it suffices to say that many a shirtsleeved man on the bench today is earning more than the average run of college "professors." As the work is altogether "piece work," the craftsman is absolutely master of his hours, also, and many of them scorn to spend more than six or seven hours per diem in the factory. A perquisite worth taking into account is the allowance of of eight cigars a day to each workman for his own smoking—or, perchance, bartering!

Many of the girls and women on the benches acquire wonderful skill also. In the majority of cases the women work only three or four hours per diem for Latin women are not noted for persistent industry. Their wages run exactly as the men's in proportion to skill and output. The banding is done wholly by girls and is aesthetic and easy work, remarkably well paid.

The cigar factories are not located in Tampa proper, but in the suburbs, West Tampa and Ybor City, each a little Havana itself, where, on the streets, in the theaters, coffee houses, as well as from the porticos of the cottage homes, you will hear only Spanish spoken.

For foreigners, these people have remained, not only in political allegiance, but in speech, customs, mode of living, even their diversions, a gayety loving people. Undeniably craving constant excitement and pleasure, they spend their money as easily as they earn it. They support many clubs, owning the handsome edifices in which they house, and so liberal in their patronage of the theater, that there are more playhouses in Ybor and West Tampa than proportionately in the city itself. Lovers of music, color and motion, they crowd their clubs in the evenings, attired gaily and expensively, dancing and singing and playing games far into the night.

Exactly 98 years ago the grandfather of the present King of Spain sold us this tight little peninsula for $5,000,000. If it were still on the market at that price the Florida cigar manufacturers who have remained Alfonso's subjects might buy it back for him by parting with but one-fifth of one year's income from the industry.

But indeed the Spanish monarch did receive a few months ago quite a wonderful gift from these people of his in the far land once ruled by his fathers. One of the leading houses of Tampa, Cuesta, Rey & Co., sent him a box of their famous brand "White Heather." The cigars all made by the hand of Manuel Ferrer, the prince of cigarmakers on this continent, were of an especially fine size and each had its special brand bearing the royal initial. The box itself was a marvel of inlaid work in wood, every variety of wood in Cuba being used and each bit at highest polish and some quite marvelously hand-carved.—Leonora Beck Ellis in the Utica Globe.

Does Early Closing Pay?

Drug stores keep open longer hours than other stores. They are expected to do so. In the cities there is no thought of their reducing the open hours to any great extent. Perhaps the public would object if they did.

But in the average town and in the smaller villages there is a more or less constant agitation in favor of the earlier closing of all stores, including the drug stores.

There is more jealousy among the various stores in the smaller town, and the grocer who has some cigar trade hates to close up evenings and leave the drug store open and likely to get some of his cigar customers away from him.

The jeweler sees fountain-pen trade that he wants going to the druggist if the latter keeps open evenings and he does not. The cigar store will not close up and leave the drug store open. The result of all this is that the business men in all lines may bring pressure to bear upon the druggist, claiming that he is the obstacle standing in the way of early closing all along the line.

The druggist's clerks perhaps think they are having it a good deal harder than clerks in adjoining stores because they have to work longer hours. The poor druggist gets it from all sides. —Bulletin of Pharmacy.

U. S. Industrial, Commercial and Financial Record of 1917

The changes in industrial and commercial conditions in the United States resulting from war activities are illustrated by a series of statistical statements, compiled by the National City Bank of New York, showing conditions of production, industry and commerce in the United States in 1917, compared with the preceding years and especially with 1913, the year which preceded the war. These compilations are, wherever possible, official figures, those of the year just ending, 1917, being necessarily estimates for the closing months of the year, but based upon official figures for such part of the year as are available in governmental or other official reports.

In foreign commerce the year 1917, of course, far exceeds in value of merchandise imported or exported, that of any earlier year. Total imports for the full calendar year 1917, according to the bank's statement, are 60 per cent. greater in value than in 1913, and exports of domestic products 150 per cent. greater in value than those of 1913. The total foreign trade of the country is estimated in very round terms at $9,000,000,000 in 1917 against $4,250,000,000 in 1913, the total of imports and exports combined being thus more than double in 1917 that of 1913.

In manufacturing materials imported and manufactures exported the growth has been even greater than that shown by the figures of total trade. Imports of raw manufacturing material in 1917 are more than double those of 1913 and exports of manufactures are three and one-half times as much as in 1913. Foodstuffs imported are nearly twice as great in stated value in 1917 as in 1913, and foodstuffs exported are two and one-half times as much in stated value as in 1913.

That these large increases are due in a considerable degree to higher prices is evidenced by the fact that the raw stilk imports of September, 1917, were at the rate of $5.59 per pound, against $3.43 per pound in September of 1913; raw cotton, chiefly Egyptian, 42c. per pound in September, 1917, against 17c. in September, 1913; manila hemp, $322 per ton, against $210 per ton; cattle hides 27c. per pound, against 19c.; goatskins, 42c. per pound, against 26c., and clothing wool, 46c. per pound, against 24c. in the corresponding month of 1913. On the export side the contrast is equally striking, wheat exports in September, 1917, having averaged $2.32 per bushel, against 94c. in September, 1913; corn, $1.96 per bushel, against 78c. in the corresponding month of 1913; steel billets, $84 per ton, against $21; sole leather, 59c. per pound, against 26c.; raw cotton, 25c. per pound, against 13c., and refined sugar, 7c. per pound, against 4c. in September, 1913.

Trade with the grand divisions of the world shows equally startling changes. Imports from Europe dropped from 865 million dollars in 1913 to 560 million dollars in 1917, while those from South America increased from 198 million dollars in 1913 to 580 million dollars in 1917, and those from Asia increased from 281 million dollars to 740 million dollars, and from North America from 390 million dollars to 860 million dollars. Exports to Europe jumped from 1,500 million dollars in 1913 to 4,110 million dollars in 1917; to North America from 601 million dollars in 1913 to 1,210 million dollars in 1917; to South America from 147 million dollars in 1913 to 310 million dollars in 1917.

Imports from Europe are actually less than those from North America, South America or Asia, while prior to 1916 Europe always headed the list of grand divisions supplying our imports.

Production of the staple articles of food and manufacturing materials shows also large increases with a very few exceptions, notably wheat and cotton, and even in these the value of the 1917 product is, by reason of high prices, far greater than that of 1913. Corn production is more than 3 billion bushels against less than 2½ billion bushels in 1913; sugar, 2¼ billion pounds against 1¾ billions in 1913; coal approximately 650 million short tons against 560 millions in 1913; pig iron over 38 million long tons against 31 millions in 1913 and copper more than 800 thousand long tons against 546 thousands in 1913. The total value of mineral products is set down at approximately 4 billion dollars in 1917 against less than 2½ billion dollars in 1913, and the wealth production on farms in 1917, according to the Department of Agriculture figures, 21 billion dollars against slightly less than 10 billion dollars in 1913.

The result of this tremendous increase in production, and especially in the value of the product, is shown in the fact that the total money in circulation increased from $3,363,738,000 July 1, 1913, to $4,880,560,000 on July 1, 1917, an increase of nearly 50 per cent., and individual deposits in all banks, national, state, savings and trust companies increased from $17,745,764,000 in 1913 to about $26,000,000,000 in 1917.

The Cleveland Retail Cigar Merchants' Association plans to raise $50,000 for the Red Cross war fund. The association has 250 members, but efforts will be made to induce a majority of 1,370 dealers in the city to join. A dance and a series of smokers will be used in raising funds.

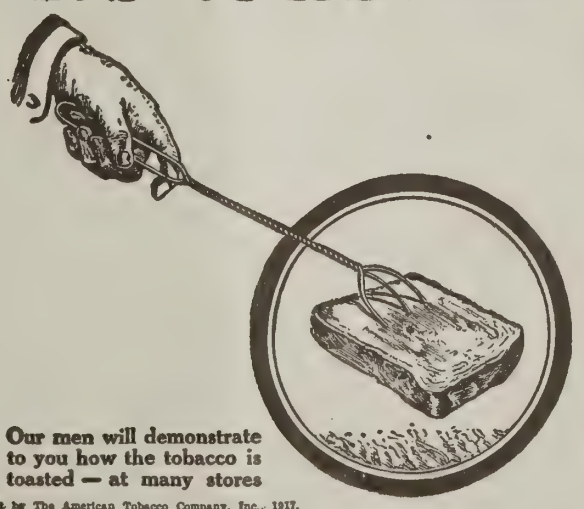
Here, sir, is the new "toasted" cigarette



LUCKY Strike, it's called. And just exactly as you prefer 95% of your food cooked, you will now prefer your tobacco toasted.

Cooking (toasting, broiling, roasting) makes things delicious, appetizing, and savory, because it develops flavor. You don't eat raw steak or drink raw coffee. You like toast better than bread—especially fresh buttered toast.

We toast the Burley tobacco for Lucky Strike cigarettes to develop the utmost Burley flavor and seal it in, so it's always there for you. That's what toasting does.

You're in for a new flavor when you join the Lucky Strike Smoke circle—with the real Burley cigarette.

It's toasted

Our men will demonstrate to you how the tobacco is toasted — at many stores

Chicago Jobbers Are Flooded with Orders

Unexpectedly Large Demands for Cigars Received During Christmas Week—Retailers Report Good Holiday Trade—Many Policemen Detailed to Guard Cigar Stores—Hansel & Gretel Representative Resigns to Enter the Suit and Cloak Business—The Freight and Express Situation Has Everyone Guessing—Mystery Associated with the Death of Lucius B. Berdan, Millionaire Grocer of Toledo, Who Died Suddenly in His Room in the Auditorium Hotel.

CHICAGO, December 21.—The cigar holiday business is now in full swing. While it was slow in coming, it is now on for fair, and everybody is kept on the jump. Owing to the small supplies of special holiday packings, such as 40ths and 80ths, the jobbers had to do a lot of cutting down on orders to supply their trade, even regular packings of 20ths are short and no order is being delivered to retailers in full. The country trade got busy the last few days and flooded Chicago jobbers with hurry-up orders which, of course, had to be turned down. They are working hard on the 6 cent cigars, but, so far, outside of a few popular brands that formerly sold at a nickel, very little headway has been made. There are still on the market many brands that are selling for a jitney, and until these are boosted in price, the 6 cent seller won't amount to much. General conditions are only fair. Collections are poor, and all the jobbers and local factories are tightening up on credits. Next year, it is reported, no dealer will be allowed credit over thirty days.

Those two Americus boosters, C. W. McFarland and Frank Patton, of Francisco Torre y Cia, are now at Tampa headquarters.

A. M. Goehring, western salesmanager for Balbin Bros., Inc., left December 20, for Tampa to confer with the "higher-ups" at headquarters, for his 1918 campaign.

None other than Jack W. Dunnet, manager of Noyes Bros. & Cutler's cigar department, paid Chicago a visit early in the month. His house sells a world of Garcia Grande cigars.

Jose Garcia has returned from a visit to the Perfecto Garcia & Bros. factory at Tampa. Jose has just closed the biggest year in the firm's history.

Jacob Sutter, of Jacob Sutter & Sons, Chicago leaf dealers, has returned from a business trip to New York.

The next meeting of the Chicago Cigar Dealers' Association takes place the first week in January and meetings will be held regularly the first week in each month.

Walter Webb, the Mozart factory man, has left us until after the holiday season. Walter will spend the Yuletide at his home in Philadelphia.

Another cigar man has joined Uncle Sam's fighting force. Ned Berriman, son of Ed. Berriman, left last week for Columbus Barracks. He is going to get the Kaiser.

The Tampa-Cuba Cigar Co., of Tampa, is placing two new 5 cent cigars with the drug trade. A short smoke called "Little Sammies" and a Cuban smoker under the title of Big Sammies, are the latest from this factory.

The Clayton Cigar Co. have added a line of Dutch Masters at their five retail stores. The brand has started off well.

Several hundred members of the first ward's "winter colony" rushed from saloons, lodging houses and flops a few days ago, and engaged in a free-for-all scramble when $15,000 worth of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco, representing the holiday stock of the United Cigar Store 501 South State street, was destroyed by fire. That portion of the stock not consumed by the blaze was picked up by the "hobo" element of the ward, who turned out at first call of the fire department.

The United last week turned over to the Daily News tobacco fund a check for $563.95, which brings the total contributed to the fund by patrons of the United Cigar Stores up to $6,247.79. The money received from the United Stores comes from coupons and certificates deposited in boxes in the stores by the patrons.

"Porkless Saturday" starts in Chicago tomorrow. Last week all the big clubs cut all pork products from their menus. Someone has suggested "tobaccoless day." We hope not, for out in this wild and woolly west we enjoy our weed.

The Mi Favorita brand is sold by the Hotel Brevoort and the Marco Cigar Co.

Sig. Meyer is expected back from Tampa in a few days. Dealers here are looking for some new sizes to be put out by F. Lazano Sons for next year. Lozanos are staples in this market.

First Deputy Westbrook has made a special detail of 125 policemen to protect United Cigar Stores from robbers. The men are to report to the different stores in the different police precincts. The action of the first deputy was taken following a report that he received from a secret source that holdup men were planning a big raid on the United Stores. One of the company's stores at State and Congress streets was held up last Thursday night.

"The ideal wife and the ideal husband are two of a kind that never make a pair," Harry Gray avers.

The big Christmas Fund benefit in the Schulte chain of nine loop stores took place on Monday, December 17; 5 cents out of every dollar taken in was given to the Chicago Examiner's Fund to be sent for food and good things for Chicago's poor children.

In Springfield, Ill., the patrons of the Illinois Traction System are receiving change in postage stamps instead of coppers. A scarcity of pennies is given as the reason.

Harry L. Harris, of Harris-Schwarz & Co., is getting ready to leave for his annual visit to New York headquarters. Romeo-Garcia mild Havanas get a big play here and are sold in all sections of the city.

Van Bibber, the little gem in packages of 10, is selling well at 25 cents.

Our popular jobber and retailer, Sol Bernstein, of Bernstein & Schey, is going to help Uncle Sam. Sol was presented with a bouncing baby girl recently. He is going to make a Red Cross nurse out of her. He has two sons whom he is going to break in as soldiers. Congratulations, Sol., you are doing fine.

The Mission Bar on Madison street has a swell Melechrino display in its window. Ed Rutz, who owns this well-known buffet, does a big cigar business and carries a large line of the best known brands.

A great many window displays of Union Leader tobacco are now brightening up the windows of the west side cigar dealers.

In the Best & Russell stores a miniature pipe factory has been on display. It shows several pipe machines showing how the celebrated "Chesterfield" pipes of Kaufman Brothers & Bondy are made. Small machines run by electricity with metal figures of men at work on each machine.

Cohn & La Vella, the owners of the Astor Bar on Clark street, do well with the Gato brand. Fred Oakes, of E. H. Gato & Co., is the reason for it.

Many dealers are selling Charles Denbys at 6 cents. While the price is still $37.50 some have figured it out that they will go into the $43 class soon, so they beat their competitors to it.

The freight and express question has everybody guessing. It takes weeks now to get goods from eastern points and all you hear is kicks and more kicks. There are a lot of cigarette, tobacco and cigar brands that are big sellers here and are hard to get on account of the delayed delivery and it does not look as if matters will improve any for some time to come. "Tough Luck."

Mortimer Scanlan, pioneer confectioner of Chicago, died at his home a few days ago. He came to Chicago in 1851 when the city had a population of only 34,500. He was the first traveling salesman out of Chicago.

Lucius B. Berdan, millionaire grocer and partner of Berdan & Co., of Toledo, Ohio, passed away at his room in the Auditorium Hotel last week, while visiting Chicago. Much mystery is attached to the death of Mr. Berdan, who was 57 years old.

John Dolan, popular cigarist and owner of the Dolan Segar Shop, has done his bit for Uncle Sam. His two sons, John, Jr., and Clarence, have both enlisted in the Quartermaster's Department, and are now with the army. John, Jr., for many years was connected with his father in the cigar business and is very well known to the trade.

Paul Alberty has resigned as general representative for the Hansel & Gretel factory. He leaves the cigar field January 1 to enter the ladies' suit and cloak business.

The Christmas packing of Fatimas, 100 in a fancy enameled tin box, were sold by a number of dealers. They sold for 80 cents the box.

Seth Laycock, who represents J. C. Neuman Co., of Cleveland, sported around town. Seth was smoking 60 cent Demitrino cigarrettes, the imported kind. Just finished an extensive selling campaign through Iowa on his "John Carver" 7 cent cigar, which is handled by Warfield Pratt Howell Co., of Des Moines, for the state. Judge Wright and El Baton cigars are now 6 cents. S. L. was handing it out strong to our friend Fred Oakes when I saw him.

Steele Wedeles Co. run a page ad in the evening papers this week on Tom Keenes.

The boys are "all in" and the heavy rush has not come yet. They will be glad when the 24th has gone by.

The Twentieth Century Limited was late; $3.24 was refunded to each of the passengers one day this week. They turned the money, $437.56, over to the Red Cross. For mercy's sake, oh, Weatherman, a little more snow on the Century's tracks. H. L. H.

A Question of Time Saving

Roy Stewart, Triangle western star, and Bill Patton, a "regular" cowboy, who is included in the star's supporting cast, were having a neat argument one day last week, about the value of a closed and open face watch. The argument started when Stewart found it took him a second and a half to get the time and return the watch to his pocket. Stewart owns a closed face time indicator. Patton, owner of an open face watch, performed the operation in half a second.

Said Patton: "Now, in using your watch you lose at least twelve seconds a day, 84 in a week and—well, figure it out for yourself." As the argument subsided, Stewart drew out a ready-made cigarette and Patton took out the "makin's" and started to roll his own. A loud laugh was heard from the people who had listened to the argument on time saving, but Patton doesn't yet realize the joke was on him.

Big Increase in Exports of Cigarettes

The Most Noticeable Feature of United States Tobacco Trade with Other Countries —Fluctuations Attested by Statistics—Shipments Dispatched and Received During September—The Official Figures.

WASHINGTON, December 22.—The returns of the Department of Commerce, covering the domestic and foreign commerce of the United States for the month of September, show total importations of 236,196,898, as against $164,038,614 for the same month in 1916. On the other hand, the exports show a decrease from $514,924,134 in September, 1916, to $456,005,947 for September last. For the nine months ending with September the import values were $2,282,794,503, as against $1,831,174,503 for the corresponding nine months of 1916 and the exports an increase from $3,950,426,079 in the first nine months of 1916, to $4,607,377,085 for the nine months of the present year.

Imports of tobacco show marked increases as compared with the corresponding importations of 1916. For example, in September of last year the quantity of leaf suitable for cigar wrappers imported was 324,389 pounds valued at $378,093; in September last it was reported as amounting to 646,801 pounds at $878,512. For the nine months, however, there was a decrease in quantity from 5,447,500 to 4,821,037 pounds, accompanied by a decrease in value from $8,067,172 to $6,210,453. The returns for the month show no importations from the Netherlands, from which source we received 266,791 pounds in September of last year. The receipts from Canada and Cuba remain practically the same as last year, with 637,198 pounds imported from "other countries" at a total value of $859,773.

The importations of all other leaf tobacco increased from 3,649,643 pounds at $1,400,343 in September, 1916, to 4,443,181 pounds at $2,098,292 during last September. The importations from Greece increased from 501,141 pounds at $186,144 to 1,168,098 pounds at $854,820; the United Kingdom, from which we received 39,147 pounds in September of last year dropped out this year. Mexico, also, is practically eliminated, the receipts from that source only amounting to 834 pounds at $1,175, as compared with 361,512 pounds at $36,196 in September of last year. Cuba showed a decrease in quantity from 1,437,193 to 1,235,910 pounds, accompanied by an increase in value from $918,821 to $973,539. From "other countries" the importations were 2,038,339 pounds at a value of $268,758, as against 1,310,650 pounds at $242,897 in September of last year.

Cigars, cheroots and cigarettes totaled 367,477 pounds at $582,170, as compared with 191,270 pounds at $398,589 in September, 1916. The figures for September last included 332,322 pounds of cigars and cheroots at $361,842 from the Philippines and 1,376 pounds of cigarettes at $1,263 from the same source; 32,574 pounds of cigars and cheroots at $214,168, and 1,205 pounds of cigarettes at $4,896 from all other sources.

In addition to the foregoing we imported $17,096 of other classes of manufactured tobaccos, as against $5,001 in 1916. The foregoing figures show total import value for manufactured tobaccos of all kinds imported during the month of $599,266, as against $403,590 for the corresponding month of 1916. The total value of manufactured tobaccos imported during the nine months of the present year is reported at $5,206,046, as against $3,745,974 last year.

Turning our attention to the exports we find that those of unmanufactured leaf tobacco show a decrease for the month, as compared with 1916, from 49,414,890 pounds at $6,601,551 to 21,789,103 pounds at $3,687,350 The greatest decline was in the exports to Great Britain, which only amounted to 2,522,324 pounds at $640,405, as compared with 318,074,944 pounds at $2,994,885 last year. This threw France into the lead as a source of consumption of American manufactured leaf, although it was a reduction from 13,281,716 pounds at $1,336,113 for September, 1916, to 9,181,632 pounds at $1,220,141 in September last. The second largest market was found in Spain, to which we exported 2,522,324 pounds at $374,471, and was a marked increase over that country's importations in September, 1916, of 1,685,024 pounds at $165,299. Another market which is showing rapid improvement is that of British West Africa, to which we shipped 2,253,739 pounds at $373,175, as compared with 1,295,761 pounds at $170,839 last year. Other markets showing an increase are Portugal, from 83,570 pounds at $9,688 to 113,500 pounds at $19,211; Switzerland, from 22,590 pounds at $3,762 to 639,411 pounds at $92,518; Argentina, from 52,141 pounds at $7,006 to 108,285 pounds at $14,525; China, from 738,535 pounds at $81,857 to 760,642 pounds at $163,776; French Africa, from 442,874 pounds at $33,448 to 459,178 pounds at $81,478.

The most marked decreases for the month, in addition to those already referred to, are Denmark, which has dropped entirely out of the maket; Italy, with a decrease from 1,751,216 pounds at $177,740 to 1,106,186 pounds at $138,593; The Netherlands, to which we exported in September of last year 5,827,301 pounds, and to which we did not ship a single pound during last September; Norway, from 706,130 pounds at $84,504 to 34,905 pounds at $6,224; Sweden also drops out, as against almost half a million pounds in September of last year; Canada from 884,952 pounds at $181,839 to 579,242 pounds at $154,880; Mexico, from 336,546 pounds at $32,016 to 10,376 at $3,741; Hongkong from 927,814 pounds at $182,545 to 310,334 pounds at $97,300.

Our exportations of stems and trimmings are conspicuous by their entire elimination for the month, as compared with exports of 1,254,279 pounds in September of last year, and a decrease for the nine months from 5,002,566 pounds at $161,041 to 221,380 pounds at $13,874.

Our exportations of cigarettes are steadily on the increase. For the month there is an increase from 441,011,000 at $740,815 to 502,637,000 at $987,804. For the first nine months of 1915 the total exports of cigarettes amounted to 1,617,468,000 at $2,550,490, for the nine months of 1916 there was an increase to 2,691,879,000 at $4,596,766, and for the past nine months to 4,684,934,000 at $9,034,065. The exports for the month included 10,226,000 at $22,309, as against 6,025,000 at $16,936 to Panama; 395,728,000 at $793,609, as against 96,000,000 at $201,103 last year; other countries, 28,383,000 at $72,290, as against 10,336,000 at $25,637; the countries showing up with decreased importations of American cigarettes are Straits Settlements from 230,000,000 at $325,660 to 56,850,000 at $78,733, and Siam, from 97,750,000 at $171,479 to 11,450,000 at $20,863.

Cigars and cheroots exports show a decrease from 303,000 at $6,424 to 96,000 at $2,356; plug tobacco also shows a decrease from 510,312 pounds at $136,926 to 241,900 pounds at $72,309; smoking tobacco exportations were only reported at 122,315 pounds at $67,685, as compared with 437,023 pounds $175,672 in September, 1916, and all oth manufactures show a decreased export valu from $43,417 to $11,426.

The total value of all manufactured tobacc exported during the month was reported $1,141,580, as against a total of $1,103,254 f September, 1916.

THE CRY OF "WOLF."

From various parts of the country the cr has gone up that retail cigar dealers are e deavoring to "hold up" the public, by reaso of the advance in prices right after the wa tax went into effect. The public seems t think that the tax was the only reason fc an advance in prices, and as the tax was b a fraction of the advance, they cannot se the justification for the increase. For thi condition of the public mind the retailers hav in many cases themselves to blame. Perhap the retailer's clerk is more to blame than th "boss." But it was so easy when a custome asked for a reason for the advance in price to lay it to the war tax, without further ex planation, that many did so, and let it go a that. As a matter of fact, as we have hithert pointed out, the war tax was but an inciden Manufacturers had been waiting for month for Congress to fix the tax, in order to rear range prices which would have been increase without the tax, owing to the advance in th cost of everything entering into the produc tion of tobacco products. Instead of waitin until the tax was decided upon, they shoul have made one advance several months ag and a second advance when the war tax wa added. If they had done this, the main ad vance by the retailer would have been mad last July instead of in November, and the there would have been another advance i November. But most retailers stood losse themselves rather than "make two bites of a cherry," and for weeks sold cigars whic formerly cost them $35, but which had bee advanced to $37.50, at the old price of fiv cents. But when the price went to $43 it wa no longer possible to continue the old price Certainly no fair-minded man would expect a retailer to pay four and three-tenths cent for a cigar and sell it for five cents. The re tailer is today getting only a legitimate mar gin of profit, and if all would take the pain to explain the situation fully to the customer instead of contenting themselves with the idl remark that "it is the war tax," there woul be less "hollering."—Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

LA VIGNE BUSY AGAIN

Agent of American Fair Trade League Causes Arrest of a Department Store Proprietor in Washington.

WASHINGTON, December 22, 1917.—Moses Goldenberg, proprietor of the Department Store at Seventh and K street, Washington, and responsible for the conduct and management of the business conducted under the name of Goldenberg's, was arrested and gave bond in the sum of $500 today on a charge of violating the Act of Congress approved May 29, 1916, to prevent fraudulent advertising in the District of Columbia.

The complainant in the case is C. E. LaVigne, field representative of the American Fair Trade League. Mr. LaVigne made his complaint to United States Attorney John E. Laskey. Mr. Laskey placed the matter in the hands of Assistant United States Attorney Ralph Given, and the warrant was served by Detective E. W. Boyle.

This is not the first arrest to be made under the false advertising law, but only continued activity in the national campaign of the American Fair Trade League against the use of misleading and deceptive statements to foist inferior merchandise upon the consumer.

A Dozen Facts and Suggestions From a Successful Cigarette Manufacturer to the Progressive Retailer:

1. As the Turkish cigarette has now become one of your principal assets in the retail business, always feature Quality.
2. Be convinced that QUALITY has proved itself in the brand you intend to feature.
3. After you have selected a winning brand, concentrate on that brand, and talk it to your customer.
4. By satisfying your customers with QUALITY, you not only please them, but also hold their trade.
5. Cigarette sales are not "secure business" for the retailer when based only upon the medium of advertising.
6. Every package of MELACHRINO cigarettes sold by you, sells many more for you—gratis.
7. MELACHRINO cigarettes have the acknowledged approval of QUALITY from all experts of Turkish tobacco.
8. MELACHRINO quality will always live—when advertised brands cease to sell.
9. MELACHRINO cigarettes, unlike any other brands, are big sellers in all the markets of the world.
10. Measure your profits by QUALITY—the same as you will measure your volume of cigarette sales by featuring MELACHRINO.
11. Keep your MELACHRINO cigarettes attractively displayed at all times on your shelves and counters and in your windows and watch your cigarette sales grow.
12. All retailers crave high class custom. MELACHRINO cigarettes will bring it to your store.

The Greeters Meet in Springfield, Mass.

Elaborate Program Arranged for the Hotel Clerks' Convention—Holiday Business in Boston Exceeded Expectations—McCarthy Anticipated a Sugar Shortage—No "Advance Dope" on Cigar Prices—Drug Stores That Didn't Succeed

Boston, December 22.—Having expended $300,000 improving the Hotel Brunswick, Manager L. C. Prior announces that the formal opening will be held New Year's eve.

War will not put a damper on New Year's celebrations in the various Boston hotels, if the plans already formulated are carried out. Many of the leading hostelries have sent out invitations for New Year festivities.

Many Boston "Greeters" are planning to attend the New England convention of that organization in Springfield, December 28 and 29. Headquarters will be at the Kimball, but there will also be meetings and entertainment at the Worthy. The elaborate program includes a typical Greeter banquet.

Emile F. Coulon, proprietor of the Hotel Victoria, plans to install a cafe in his hotel, to be known as "The Cave." He does not state that the new restaurant will resemble those used by primitive man, but does say he will have a grill in sight of all guests.

While J. J. McCarthy of the Quincy House was traveling through the beet sugar country during the early autumn, he wired his brother to buy a large quantity of sugar. The result has been that McCarthy has been able to not only help individuals to get sugar during shortage, but has also assisted several Boston hotels in their time of need. McCarthy bought the sugar long before there was any indication of a shortage in this section of the country.

L. C. Prior, of the Lenox and Brunswick, has been appointed by Louis K. Liggett, chairman of the hotel division of the Red Cross 10,000,000 membership drive.

It is safe to say that holiday business in Boston will exceed expectations, going ahead of 1916.

Cigarettes and tobacco in large packings were demanded. Pipes ran second, and cigars were a poor third. The real rush did not start until Saturday, and Monday. Then it came, and came fast.

Popular brand cigars in 40's were cleaned out practically before Saturday. This was on account of the factories being on a strike.

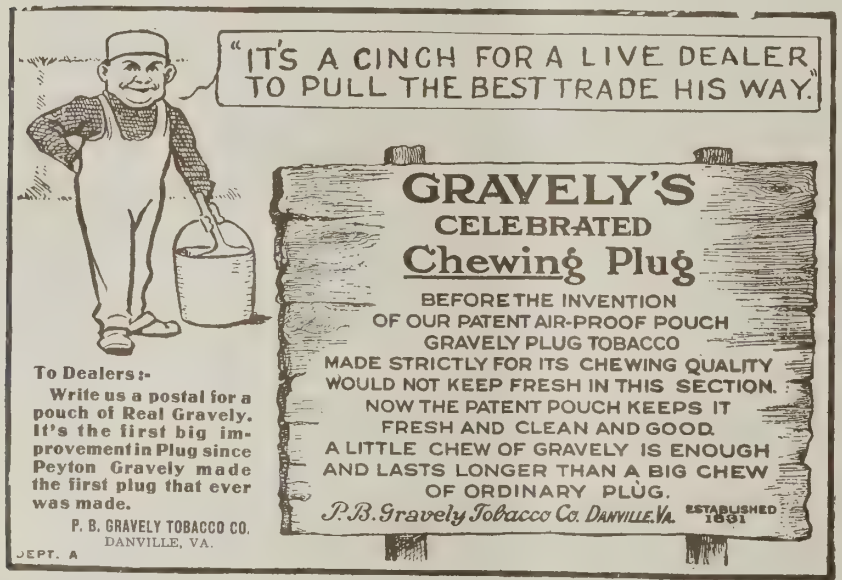
This was a fine year to clean up odds and ends, and I cannot remember when the trade, both retailer and jobber, was so cleaned up as they are at present.

Now the next important topic in our section is what is the local manufacturer going to charge for their brands since the new schedule of labor went into effect. Much speculation and wild guesses are being indulged in, but we will know what will be done when these firms send out their price lists. No real "advance dope" on this situation can be obtained.

Quite a few drug stores in and around Boston have gone out of business, being unable to continue at the small profit now shown in merchandise handled the past month.

Report is that the jobbers are trying to get all their accounts on a ten day basis, not 30-60-90 and 120 days. How this will succeed is problematical; it's a fine arrangement if it works, but as Bobby Burns says, "I hae my doots."

Department stores went into the tobacco game strong this fall and all did a land office business.



James Armisted, of the Commonwealth Cigar Co., left this week for a visit to his home state, North Carolina.

John A. Lappen, New England representative for the Havana-American Co., who resides in Boston, is visiting headquarters in New York City.

Frank Swick, whom Boston boasts of having for a resident, is calling on head office in New York. Frank had a big year on the Philip Morris Cigarettes.

Fred Suss of R. Steneke & Co., New York City, another that votes here, joined the happy gathering.

Charles T. Ellis, representing the American Exchange Cigar Co., will be among those present in New York City this week.

KEEPING CIGARS IN CONDITION

By H. G. PETERMAN, Director of the United Training School

The illusions and suppositions surrounding a cigar are numerous; the pet theories in the mind of the average smoker about the color, the feel, the smell, the appearance and where the cigar is made, must all be forgotten in the light of experience. The theory that, perhaps, is the most general, is to the effect that "the greater the cost, the better the cigar."

That neither the latter nor the former theories are essentially the determining factor of a good cigar, it is the object of this paper to demonstrate—as it is also the intention to show why good cigars are good, why bad cigars are bad, and why the choicest cigars cost so much money.

True, the higher the price the more likelihood that the cigar will be good; that is to say, made from expensive tobacco by expensive workmanship. Nevertheless, fine tobacco can so easily be spoiled by the careless salesman that a cigar, perfect in every respect when made, will smoke like a piece of "rope," all because the dealer did not know the nature of the leaf, or neglected to keep the cigar in the proper condition. That is why a 10-cent cigar from one dealer is sometimes better than a 20-cent cigar from another dealer.

One of the most important details of the cigar business is that of keeping cigars in good condition. Tobacco is a sensitive leaf. It will take up any foreign odor or impure air in its vicinity and will absorb moisture like a sponge. If subjected to heat or dry cold air it will throw off the moisture just as quickly. If the cigars "dry out" the essential oils in the leaf, that give to the smoke the bouquet and flavor, evaporate with the moisture and cannot be put back into the cigar by remoistening. Remember that!

When cigars are sold that are too dry or too wet it follows that complaints are made against the quality of a brand, when the fault is not with the brand, but with the dealer, who has not kept the cigar in proper condition. Unfortunately, it is impossible for the average smoker to tell, by looking at them, if the cigars have been properly kept; in appearance the cigars have not changed, he can't tell by squeezing them. The only way to find out is by smoking them.

It may be said that all cigars cannot be treated alike—some require more moisture than others. The high-grade clear Havanas require very little moisture. The domestic cigars need to be fairly moist—just enough so as to be agreeable to hold in the mouth. The Porto Rican and the Manila cigars are a very different proposition. These should be kept as green as possible. A Porto Rican or Manila that is dry will smoke and taste badly.

In smelling an open box of cigars, one usually gets more fragrance from the cedar box than from the cigars, yet some smokers think that because the box of cigars has a pleasant scent, the cigars must be good. It is impossible to judge cigars in this way, as some of the cheapest domestic cigars will emit a better aroma (unlighted) than the choicest Havana or Porto Rican.

It is also wrong to condemn the quality of a cigar if it burns with a dark ash, in spite of the popular belief that the whiter the ash, the better the cigar.

Still another popular delusion is that a spotted cigar is better than a cigar that is not spotted. As a fact, these spots on the wrapper of a cigar mean nothing so far as quality is concerned. They are caused by rain drops on the growing leaf acting as lenses and the sun's rays burning the leaf, or due to sand being spattered by the rain and clinging to the leaf, making bleached spots.

Another very popular delusion is that a dark cigar must necessarily be a strong one. This is not so; nor is a light cigar necessarily a mild one. You cannot tell the strength of a cigar by the color of the wrapper. Its strength or mildness depends entirely on the quality of the filler.

The cigarmaker uses but one strength or blend of tobacco for filler in making a certain size, but different colored leaves are used for wrappers. The wrapper leaf is about one-tenth of the cigar, so you will understand how little it affects its total strength.

There's only one way to determine the strength of a cigar and that is to smoke it. When you want a mild cigar you must depend on the brand and size.—United Shield

For Armenian "war sufferers," approximately $3,800 was raised in Frankfort, Ky. J. W. Hughes, Jr., and G. C. Wise contributed 20 pounds of tobacco, which was placed on sale at the warehouse Friday and brought $20 for the fund. After the announcement was made that the tobacco would be sold for the Armenian sufferers, spirited bidding ensued and the tobacco quickly sold for 50 cents a pound. T. N. French, buyer for the American Tobacco Co., was the purchaser.

Marcelino Perez & Co. are working like beavers on their orders. The firm is not putting out any specials this year, owing to the high prices, and the desire of most folks to get all they can for their money. Those who sent in their orders early in the season, however, got some specials.

"It's Up to the Consumer" in San Francisco

So Many Cigar Dealers Think and Say—When Knubel "Dusts Off" His Desk—Conditions Excellent in Seattle—A Notably Increased Demand for Philadelphia Hand Made—Harry Green Receives a Shipment of Hawaiian Tobacco—Judell's Business Double the Trade of Any Previous December—The Twelfth Link in the Bercovich Chain

San Francisco, December 19.—"It's up to the consumer!" If a vote of every cigar dealer in San Francisco—manufacturer, importer, wholesaler, jobber agent or retailer—could be taken today on the trade situation in this city, they would be unanimous in that statement. All the distributors report exceptional business, retailers buying all they can get of the cigars which have not yet advanced in price, but are scheduled to do so on January 1, or soon thereafter, and the consumer buying ahead by the box as never before. Many of the distributors are practically cleaned out of ready stock and practically all of them are oversold. This is so in spite of the effort made to hold down orders as much as possible. It hurts to have to refuse a good order from a man who offers cash, but it has been done and will be done until the advanced prices go into effect. Speaking of cash offers, the distributors report that collections have been exceptionally good and cash receipts far in excess of normal. Now all the substantial retailers are stocked up as never before and many of the "little fellows" are carrying a stock they never before dreamed of having. The scene is set, and "it is up to the consumer." What will he do when he finds his favorite smoke advanced a cent or more over the price he has been accustomed to paying? That is the mystery which is keeping many cigar dealers awake nights. One of the best known and oldest men in the trade predicted that at first the consumer will protest, will shy off and perhaps stop his cigars—for a time. Then after two or three days of pipe or perhaps abstinence, he will come back to the fold again as a moderate smoker—that is, one who smokes fewer cigars than he previously enjoyed. But, inside of three months he will be at the counter again, once more enjoying himself in the same old way, and paying the increased prices like a little man. If this is right the cigar trade will be in a better condition than ever. But as said above, "It is up to the consumer."

"Charles The Great" Knubel says he is a resident of San Francisco and he maintains an office here. Two months and a half ago he started on the road to cover his territory—everything west of the Rocky Mountains. Yesterday he blew into town, dusted off his desk and tomorrow starts for New York. He says that he will be in San Francisco again in time to dust off his desk once more about St. Patrick's Day.

I. I. Hess, Optimo man, has just returned from Seattle. Mr. Hess says that Seattle's business conditions are the best on the Coast. He attributes this to the shipbuilding on the Sound and other Government business, of which the northern city has such a large share. He was well pleased with the business he did, and his only complaint was that he could not get enough goods to satisfy his customers.

While in Seattle, Mr. Hess received a call that brought him back to San Francisco ahead of his schedule. His little daughter Charlotte, only 4½ years old was taken suddenly sick and although her father was wired at once she died before he could reach her side. The trade in general are extending condolence to the bereaved parent.

There has been a notable growth in the demand for the 6 cent Philadelphia Hand Made cigar, and the claim is made that it is maintaining all the popularity it had when sold for a nickel.

All the distributors have called their salesmen off the road and will give them from ten days to two weeks vacation.

The Little Bobbie is now being packed in boxes of one hundred. This is done in an effort to cut expenses so that the price of a nickel can be maintained.

Frankel, Gerdts & Co. were busy this week trying to supply late orders. They have oversold their factory output and are apportioning the goods as equitably as possible. El Carmine Real has recently picked up wonderfully in its sales.

S. Bachman & Co., Inc., says that the past has been a record breaking year for them. They carry very large stocks of all the cigars they handle and until recently were able to supply all demands.

Harry Green, who represents H. Duys & Co., Inc., and controls the output of Hawaiian tobacco on his own account, has just received a shipment of wrappers and stripped fillers from the islands.

Nathaniel H. Green, son of Harry Green, has joined the army and has been assigned to the adjutant general department at the Presidio.

Capable Watchmen?

General Manager Mallalieu, of the National oard of Fire Underwriters, recently said: The subject of watchmen opens a big field for onsideration. The prevailing custom among anufacturers, warehousemen and others is that f engaging as night watchman some superanuated employe who is no longer physically able o earn a workman's pay. Such a watchman ay make his occasional rounds of clock staons in a purely mechanical way, but the mount of real protection which he furnishes, specially in war time, is very small. Generally e can be avoided with ridiculous ease by anyne who is in the place with hostile intent. Or, f not avoided, his overpowering is a matter of ittle difficulty.

"Some of you know of a recent test in a very arge grain elevator, where inspectors were sent nto a plant at night time, without the knowldge of the aged watchman. These inspectors pent six hours within the plant and made drawngs of many of its important features, but their resence was never once detected. As a conseluence the owners were given the alternative f engaging a sufficient number of young and igorous guards or of having their plant taken ver by the State authorities.

"The big Baltimore fire of October 30 is a triking example of insufficient watchman servce. Here was a pier, 900 feet long, containing uch a valuable accumulation of freight as 50,000 bales of wood pulp, 150 carloads of flour, 20 cars of tobacco, 30 cars of bark extract, 40 ars of lubricating oil, 25 cars of spelter, 23 ars of roofing paper, 15 cars of miscellaneous freight in the portion of the pier that was destroyed. Pier 9 contained 29,000 bales of wood pulp, 7,000 cases of imported liquor in the bonded end, 300 crates of earthenware, 100 bales of oakum, 100 cars roofing paper, 50 cars of linseed oil cake, 20 cars of tobacco, 23 cars of miscellaneous freight. Think of leaving these stores in the sole charge of a single watchman in a time such as the present!

"There are really few subjects in fire prevention so important as the abrogation of this time-honored custom of inefficient watchmen. To make the safeguarding of our production of supplies depend upon those who can furnish only nominal safety, during the hours when darkness brings the greatest dangers, and to do this in a period of extensive hostile activities would be ludicrous if it were not so grave. It is equivalent to locking the windows and leaving the front door open.

"Watchmen are charged with extraordinary responsibility. They should be picked men, not derelicts. They should be intelligent, courageous, and physically active. They should be sufficient in number to furnish real protection. They should be armed. They should receive special training for their important duties, and this training should include knowledge of fire alarms, fire prevention and fire protection. They should never be engaged except upon unmistakable evidence of character, and they should be paid the salaries that will command such qualifications."

"UP TO THE CONSUMER"

Fred Rothchild, formerly with Eugene Vallens & Co., Chicago, and later with the Waldorf-Astoria Cigar Co., New York, has been appointed manager for Harry Green.

H. L. Judell of H. L. Judell & Co., reports that his December business is double that of any previous month since he has been in business. Also that he has received more goods by express during December than he normally receives in a year. While the demand for 6 cent goods is as good as could be desired, he says that the Little Penn and Little Tom, which have not yet been advanced, are, undeniably, in especial demand.

H. Bercovich Cigar Co., opened the twelfth in its chain of stores in the California theatre last Saturday. Souvenirs were given to all customers and a steady string of people entered to purchase. The new store is located on one of the busiest corners in the city and is destined to do a big business. The soldiers and sailors are indebted to Bercovich for the inauguration in San Francisco of the red, white and blue barrels maintained all over the city for contributions of smokes for the boys at the front. Since its successful operation here the plan has been adopted in many other cities throughout the United States.

Milton Esberg is in New York to attend a general conference of the General Cigar Co. to determine on 1918 plans.

Charles Poar, vice president and manager of S. Bachman Cigar Co., of Los Angeles, paid a flying visit to the parent house here this week.

FREEMAN'S "GREETINGS" FOR 1918.

Doing things right is a regular habit of Sidney J. Freeman & Son. And rather well worded is their greeting for 1918, which reads as follows: "Accept with sincerity our best wishes for a Happy and Prosperous New Year and our heartiest thanks for that invaluable, if intangible, asset, Good Will, which you so kindly bestowed on us in the past. May we hope for a continuance of that implicit confidence?"

DRAWBACK ALLOWED POULIDES BROS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 24.—The Treasury Department has notified the Collector of Customs at New York City that drawback will be allowed on "Mignon (Aero)" brand cigarettes manufactured by Poulides Bros. of New York City, with the use of wholly imported Turkish leaf tobacco.

THE STORE WINDOW.

The store window is one of the biggest advertising assets which the retailer possesses. Through it he calls attention to his store and the goods he has for sale. It plays its part in making a profit or a loss for the merchant. It is an expense, as a proportionate rent is paid for the space it occupies; in addition to that there is the time and money spent in making the window display attractive. All this has to be paid by the class of goods shown.

These things being granted, then why continually show merchandise in which there is no profit? It may be said that the manufacturer is paying for the use of the window. Even so, is it good policy to allow the use of the window for the purpose of showing goods which do not bring the dealer one cent of profit? Every such display is a detriment to the dealer's general business through calling the consumer's attention to unprofitable goods and making it harder to sell goods on which there is a profit.

Cigar and tobacco dealers are continually saying that they cannot do business on a 20 per cent gross margin, yet judging from displays that are to be seen all over the city, and no doubt in every city in the Union, one would naturally come to the conclusion that 20 per cent, or even less, was an ample profit upon which to conduct business. To say that the manufacturer is paying for the display is simply begging the question. When one sees such valuable space as the store window given up to the use of showing goods the sales of which do not cover the cost of doing business, the natural conclusion is that the dealer either overestimates his cost of doing business or is in business for the fun of it. Where such conditions prevail dealers cannot expect to get better costs.

There are some who abuse the window to the injury of their business. There was recently seen a display of a certain brand at 15c, yet when one went in the store to purchase this brand he was told the price was 18c or 2 for 35c, and that the price in the window was a mistake. One can easily imagine the opinion the would-be purchaser would form of the merchant. It is all very well to have leaders, but it's an imposition to have one price in the window and another in the store for a certain piece of goods. Such a dealer would be classed as a faker. Use the window in a right and legitimate way, and it is one of the most profitable investments the dealer has.—Smoke.

AKRON CLUB BENEFIT SATURDAY.

Next Saturday evening a fine benefit for the N. Y. Sun tobacco fund will be given at the Plaza by the Akron Club. There will be an entertainment, the big feature of which will be the original three act musical farce "One Minute, Please." The play was written by Ralph G. Engelsman, one of the members of the club, who also contributed to the lyrics. Richard C. Rodgers wrote most of the lyrics and composed the music. The performance will be staged by M. J. Bender. The cast includes Miss Retta Erdman, Miss Mathilda Mitchell, Miss Beatrice Rothchild, Ira R. Shattman, Abraham Rosenstein, Robert Cassell, Ralph G. Englesman, Julian Jacobs and Howard J. Strauss. All have made successes on the amateur stage.

Ray Treize will direct the orchestra of six pieces, with Mr. Rodgers, the composer of t piece, at the piano. Julian M. Jacobs is a ranging the dance specialties.

The Akrons' zeal for the welfare of the s diers is personal as well as patriotic, for Har Phillips, Jr., for four years president of t club, is a corporal with Uncle Sam's forces France.

After the play a dance will be given, o specialty of which is a number, "On to Berlin dealing with the good accomplished by the T bacco Fund. All the net receipts from the e tertainment and dance come to the fund.

WAR SAVINGS

"War Savings Stamps mark an epoch our national life."—Secretary of the Treasu McAdoo.

Many a successful business man has said th the saving of his first dollar was the most in portant single act of his life; that it marke the beginning of a habit and a course of co duct to which he attributed his success.

Something very analogous to this, it is be lieved, is going to be the effect on the America Nation of the War Savings campaign. Not onl are millions of individual citizens going to b gin to save, but this habit of economy and sa ing is going to be a collective movement, movement not of individuals but of the Natio

The habit of saving formed now has a deepe incentive than ordinary. We are saving no not alone for selfish reasons, we are saving no from patriotism, saving not alone for ourselve but for our country. The combination of patr otism and thrift is, indeed, going to make th War Savings campaign an epoch in our na tional life. It is not only going to be a thin of tremendous benefit to millions of citizens, is going to be a thing of tremendous advantag to the Nation as a whole.

Proud of a Record Breaking Output

TAMPA, December 23.—Despite the rord rush of recent weeks, which ins:es the smashing of all former output rords by a margin of thousands, a njority of the factories were unable t fill all their Christmas orders, on vich large forces are working at the "eventh hour." The unusual demand i expected to continue throughout the ening year, in case of which the estab-hing of another record is certain.

The matter that is claiming the prin-cal attention of the manufacturers and t ir sales forces at present is that of i reasing prices to meet material price i reases and the war tax, and an-nuncements of increases are expected t be made by practically all factories t New Year's Day.

Aside from the war, the principal t pic of conversation in Tampa for sev-al weeks has been the proposition to ld Hillsborough county for $875,000 vth which to extend the brick road stem of the county to the lines of the ate and national highway systems, all which have been built, are being lilt or have been provided for by bond ues in Florida. After a hard fight the ld advocates won by a majority of 17 tes. Among the principal routes that ll be completed—paved with material the highest class—by next winter will the Dixie Highway, branch, extend-ig from Thomasville, Ga., into and rough the east coast, central and uthern sections of the State; the amian Trail," connecting Tampa th Miami on the Atlantic coast, and e highway between Jacksonville and nsacola, which will connect the At-ntic with the Pacific. When Hills-rough added $875,000 to the million ent in 1913, Florida reached a total about $20,000,000 of bonds for good ads within four years. Branch lines numerable, as well as main lines, have en provided for. The materials most-used are vitrified brick, wire-cut lug ick, cement grouted and asphalt blocks. ampa, it seems, is practically certain be designated as a site for the loca-on of a convalescent camp at which ousands of soldiers will be cared for, d the belief is steadily growing that will also be designated as the site of e Gulf naval base. The Naval Base ommission is expected to report its lection early in January.

A. L. Cuesta of Cuesta, Rey & Co., ho has just returned from Cuba, dis-ayed characteristic thoughtfulness by oviding cigars for the Christmas din-r of inmates of the county jail. Im-ediately after arriving from Havana, r. Cuesta dispatched the cigars to heriff White with this note: "By the arer I am sending you a package of ree boxes containing 25 cigars each. , in accordance with your rules, I will preciate it if these are distributed at e Christmas dinner of those who are your charge on that date." Mr. P. ey of the same firm was active among e leaders of the successful movement bond the county for $875,000 for the rpose of extending the good roads stem of the county.

Every attache of the Regensberg fac-ries, from the doorkeepers to the ghest officials, showed patriotism this week by sending cigars to the enlisted and drafted men of Tampa and nearby cities and towns who are in training at Camps Wheeler at Macon, Ga., and Jackson at Columbia, S. C.

Bustillo Bros. and Diaz have received another Government order for 10,000 high-grade cigars, which will be shipped to the American cantonments in France. Other firms are expected to send a lot of "smokes" abroad for the solace of the Sammies.

Francisco Arrango of Arrango, Villa-zon & Co. has returned from a buying trip to Cuba. The firm has done the best business of its history during the present year.

During the six days ended Saturday Tampa turned out a total of 8,000,000 cigars. Internal revenue receipts amounted to $41,933, only $200 less than the receipts of the corresponding week last year.

IN CONNECTION WITH LEAF TOBACCO.

WASHINGTON, December 23.—The Director of the Census in his annual report to the Secretary of Commerce today has the following to say about the bureau's work in connection with leaf tobacco held by manufacturers and dealers.

"During the fiscal year the Bureau issued, in the form of post cards, three quarterly reports relating to stocks of leaf tobacco, classified according to principal types, held by manufacturers and dealers. Under authority contained in the act of April 30, 1912, the Bureau has issued reports on this subject at semiannual intervals; but in compliance with the terms of the act of May 10, 1916, these reports have been published quarterly, beginning with that for October 1, 1916. At the close of each calendar year there will be issued a bulletin presenting the statistics contained in the several quarterly reports for the same year, together with data as to acreage, production, imports, exports, consumption, etc." In connection with "needed legislation" the Director has the following to say about tobacco statistics:

"The law providing for the collection of quarterly statistics of stocks of leaf tobacco held by manufacturers and dealers requires that the blanks be mailed 10 days before the date to which the report relates and gives the persons reporting 10 days after that date in which to prepare and forward their returns. The time elapsing between the date on which the blanks are received and that on which they are filled out and returned to the Census Bureau—almost three weeks in most cases—is thus so great that many of them are mislaid or lost, with the result that the receipt of the returns and consequently the publication of the reports are delayed.

"The law requires an affidavit, which compels a needless expense in places where there is no deputy collector of internal revenue, who is required to administer the oath without charge. This at times occasions delay, since some wait for a visit from the deputy collector in order to save the expense of making the affidavit before a notary public or other official.

"It is recommended that the law be amended (1) to provide for mailing the blanks 5 days, instead of 10, before the date to which the report relates, and to allow only 5 days, instead of 10, after that date in which to prepare and forward the returns; and (2) to empower and require the postmaster or assistant postmaster to administer the necessary oath without expense."

GARCIA GRANDE'S undeniable mildness is associated with the distinctive quality of Vuelta Abajo tobacco.

When we originated the Garcia Grande, we gave the world a real mild Havana, a large cigar, a good cigar that could be sold for a moderate price. The Garcia Grande represents the triumph of a new idea.

The Garcia Grande has attained a national distribution, not through extensive advertising, but strictly on its merits. It has developed continually increasing sales in all parts of the country. The fact that it appeals to everyone who likes a mild Havana, makes the Garcia Grande a brand that both the jobber and retailer may depend on for steady business.

Lincoln Bros. salesmen are in town. The First Consul factory is so rushed with orders that people employed there have become telephone shy, fearing every time the bell rings it means that some one wants to send in another rush order. Last Friday Lincoln Bros. received more than fifteen rush orders over the wire. Chester A. Lincoln has eased up for a while looking for business, knowing that it would be impossible to handle any more for the present time.

P. J. Mooney, of Edgerton, manager and buyer for the Haskins & Swartz Tobacco Co., of Janesville, has been looking over the situation at Prairie du Chien, Wis., for some time trying to get the citizens interested in having his firm establish a warehouse for the curing, stripping and packing of tobacco. The company expects to employ from 75 to 150 people for six months in the year and part of a crew the year round. It is estimated that the territory tributary to Prairie du Chien would furnish about 12,000 cases each season.

Herman Baum, one of oldest established manufacturers of cigars in New York, stated that he had found business very good during the entire year, with a large increase of sales, but owing to the high price of raw material he had not made money. He stated that at the present time $4.50 is the price asked for Connecticut shade-grown wrappers, with the prices still going up, as well as the cost of labor. And as a result he cannot see where a legitimate manufacturer can make an honest profit, unless he increases prices considerably.

In keeping with the country-wide move for conservation of foodstuffs the big New York chefs composing the membership of the Societe Culinaire Philanthropique have decided to discontinue their yearly expositions during the continuance of the war. Henri Ribordi is president of the Societe, which includes practically all of the best known chefs of the big hotels and clubs; Edouard Panchard, of the McAlpin Hotel, is managing director of the annual exposition, which is usually held in the Grand Central Palace in March of each year.

A high record price for new Burley tobacco was made on the Louisville market December 20, when a hogshead of leaf brought $41.50 per hundred pounds at the Planters-Central house. This price is $1.50 per hundred pounds above the previous high mark reached by Burley on the breaks in Louisville. The prize hogshead was one of twenty shipped to market by W. S. Thomas, of Anderson County. The whole lot of twenty was disposed of at prices ranging from $28.50 to the record of $41.50. Two hogsheads in the group brought $40.50 each.

"German and Austrian cigarettes are being smoked by the American Expeditionary Forces. There are two varieties being sold in the army commissaries and they are known to the soldiers as 'Boche smokes.' One variety bears the name of a Berlin firm, while the other was made by a concern in Sarajevo," says a cablegram from Paris to the New York Herald. "The appearance of the cigarettes caused considerable speculation until it was learned they had been turned over by the French when they discovered the American cigarette supply was running short. The French captured the cigarettes in the early days of the war."

A patent has been granted to M. T. Diaz for a non-repackable cigar box. The chief object, of course, to prevent the improper use of cigar boxes for repacking cigars. The new invention consists in having different walls of the box composed of a number of pieces held back by paper edgings, the walls being strengthened by means of straps adapted to fit in an opening in the bottom of the box. When the box is opened the straps are first removed, the cigars are withdrawn through the side walls, whereby the box becomes unsuited for again being used in packing cigars.—Southern Tobacco Journal.

A long conference between representatives of the 550 striking cigar makers in New Haven and a committee of the employers on Friday, a week ago, failed to result in progress toward ending the walkout. The manufacturers through the committee told the workers that the demands made two weeks ago entail increased cost to them of from $1 to $4 a thousand for cigars and that the employers could not stand the extra expense. It was stated that there were enough goods on hand to care for the trade for a considerable period and that the closed down plants would not be reopened nor would the makers attempt to import labor on the open shop plan.

G. A. Northcott, chairman of the New Industries committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Huntington, W. Va., says that the factory now being built by Liggett & Myers in Huntington will represent an investment of a half million dollars and will employ a thousand people at the start. It will manufacture both cigarettes and chewing tobacco. So closely guarded have been the intentions of the Liggett & Myers representatives that this announcement came as a surprise to the business men who had not been aware of the magnitude of the industry newly located. The tobacco market this season will sell 13,000,000 pounds and yield $4,000,000 to the growers, said Mr. Northcott.

Byron R. Newton, Collector of the Port of New York, announces that the total exports from New York in November had a value of $268,539,883, compared with $218,702,112 in October and $240,843,750 in September. Last month's shipments of munitions, foodstuffs, clothing and general merchandise exceeded the November, 1916, movement by $36,254,008. The most spectacular gain was that of England, which moved supplies overseas from here worth $75,395,974, whereas in October that country's exports amounted to only $46,513,494. In November, 1916, England's purchases shipped to destination were $64,113,538. Additional tonnage allotted to Italy by the United States Government marked November as the banner month of the year, as exports of foodstuffs and military supplies jumped to $25,048,533, against $15,044,480 in the month before.

In Prosperous Key West

KEY WEST, December 22.—Key West is just finishing the most prosperous year in its history. One or two minor strikes for just a few hours have occurred during the year. The only real labor trouble during the whole year has been and can be expressed in one word—Lack. There has been the great scarcity of workmen, caused by the increased business and the draft. A few workers have left for Cuba to escape it or they did until stopped.

The E. H. Gato Cigar Co. has just shipped its third Government order since the war began, making a total of almost a million cigars. It took quite a bit of hard pushing for the company to finish this order before Christmas, as they are chock full of holiday and after holiday orders. The new factory to be built by the E. H. Gato Co. will be started soon after the first of January, and when completed will increase their output.

The M. Perez Ca. reports that they are working on Government orders, proving that the famous Pinzon brand of the M. Perez Ca. is a nationally popular cigar. Shipments have increased steadily every week and the orders continue to pour in.

The Cortez factories report that they have been working night and day and Sundays in order that as many orders as possible might reach their customers before the holidays. These factories have been among the main sufferers because of the shortage of labor. They could easily have used an extra hundred more men in each of their factories.

The Sam I. Davis Ca. has been harvesting this year. They sure picked a winner when they picked the Harvester. This is a cigar of astounding popularity. It has kept the factory working at full speed.

The S. & F. Fleitas Ca. report that they have made a decided gain over last year and are completing the year far in advance of their last year's business. This factory has been putting out their star brand, The Homerica, in new sizes and shapes. It has proved even more popular in these new sizes than it did before, which is going some, as The Homerica is one of the best on the market. The company is well stocked with orders at the present for after holiday delivery.

GIFTS

May these be yours,
The Gifts that make the Dreamers into Doers,
The Gift to work
Through Joy and Sorrow, Light or Murk,
To play, with all your soul and heart,
A manly part!

The Gift of Discontent to keep you driving
Forward and up, forever striving
For something better in the days hereafter;
The Gift of Kindness and the Gift of Laughter,
And all the gifts of Love and Faith and Friends,
Of Justice and of Truth.
And in your heart, until life's journey ends,
The Priceless gift of Youth,
Hope that inspires and Courage that endures,
May all these Gifts be Yours!

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., December 21.—Three full days of soft weather has brought the hanging tobacco into a very fair case so that another portion of the 1917 crop has been removed from the curing barns for stripping. It is hardly probable that all growers attempted to clean out their entire sheds on account of the difficulty of securing help with the stripping although the casing spell continued long enough to remove their whole crop from the poles. However, growers can now proceed with the work of preparing their tobacco for delivery and it will enable warehouse work to start soon after the holidays if the packers desire.

The first delivery of the new crop in this market of any considerable quantity took place at the E. M. Hubbell warehouse, Monday, when better than a carload was received, averaging about 1,050 lbs. to the acre. One grower of a 13 acre lot remarked that the $2,200 received was the best returns from the poorest tobacco he ever raised.

Packers have commenced to receive notices of crops ready for delivery, so that postponement of receiving dates cannot long be delayed.

No news of importance in transactions in old leaf has come to the surface.

The shipments out of storage to all points for the week reach 850cs and 4 cars of bundles.—Edgerton Reporter.

ANCIENT USES OF TOBACCO

By the Indians, tobacco was associated with worship. It was used first as a sacrifice or gift to the supernatural powers; secondly, as incense; thirdly, as a medium of procuring inspiration or special revelations. The Herba Sanctae Crucis of Europe had been for ages the "Holy Herb" of the hidden half of the world.

The sun, as the great fire-god, or as the symbol of the Great Spirit, was adored by the native races of America with a sacrifice or oblation of the first fruits of the new lighted pipe. The Creeks always sent toward the sun the first puff of the sacred calumets at treaties; the Indian chiefs of Hudson's Bay smoked thrice toward the rising sun. The Comanches of the prairies sent the preliminary puff to the Great Spirit, the next to the sun, the third to the earth, and after these, to whatever they venerated. The noble Franciscan missionary and explorer, Father Hennepin, has recorded a mass of illustrations of the great place held by tobacco in the religious usages of the native tribes of the Far West. Father Hennepin visited these people near the end of the seventeenth century; the English edition of his book, with his two dedications to William III., was published in 1698. His first volume has as its frontispiece an excellently drawn picture of a naked man with a calumet, who is not unlike the classic Mercury with his caduceus, which the calumet much resembles. Hennepin employs a whole chapter in the description of "the great pipe or calumet." It was an essential sacred implement. "I should have certainly perished in my voyage," he says, "had it not been for this calumet or pipe." He and his brother missionaries made constant pacificatory use of one which had been presented to them: they invariably sent it into the villages with the men whom they despatched to buy provisions for them. The calumet was not only regarded as a special gift from the sun or Great Spirit to the tribes, but they considered him to be the original and archetypal smoker. The Sioux, according to Father Hennepin, looked toward the sun when they lighted the pipe; and, presenting it to him, cried out, "Smoke, O sun!" The Osages would begin a military undertaking by smoking a pipe, with a prayer of this sort: "Good Spirit, come down to smoke with me as a friend! Fire and earth, smoke with me, and help me to overthrow my foes." The Natchez chief at sunrise made the first puffs of his tobacco toward the East. The lesser deities or demigods, who presided over the different districts of nature, were fond of their pipes. In an Ottawa tale given by Schoolcraft, the hero Wassamo is conveyed by the spirit maiden to the dwelling of her father, the Spirit of the Sand Downs, on the south shores of Lake Superior. "Son-in-law," said the old spirit, "I am in want of Tobacco. Return to your parents, and make known my wishes." He complained that too few mortals who passed by his dwelling thought of offering him tobacco. "Whenever they do so," he added, "it immediately reaches me." It happened at that very moment that some one who wanted a smooth lake and prosperous voyage offered some tobacco as sacrifice to the spirit. He put out his hand and drew in several pieces.

"The savages along the river of St. Lawrence and the Meschasipi" (Mississippi), says Father Hennepin, "as has been taken notice of by others, when they meet with any cascade or fall of waters which is difficult to cross, and apprehend any danger, throw a beaver's skin or some tobacco into it, by way of sacrifice, to gain the favor of the spirit who presides there."

The same thing came under the notice of the Moravian missionaries about a century later. "Carver relates," says Christian Ignatius Latrobe (in his "History of the Mission of the United Brethren among the Indians in North America"), "that an Indian chief who accompanied him in his journey to the Falls of St. Anthony, which are taken to be the habitation of the Great Spirit, offered his pipe, tobacco pouch, bracelets, and earrings, and prayed with great emotion to the spirit to protect him." Latrobe himself adds that the missionaries had seen an Indian in times of great danger cast himself upon his face, and throw a handful of tobacco into the fire, calling aloud in an agonized tone, "There, take and smoke! Be pacified, and do not hurt me!" This was construed into an act of devil-worship; but the missionaries said that they were unable to discover any such worship: "the Indians, on the contrary, abhor the devil, thinking he is always intent upon doing them some mischief by the agency of the white people."

SQUARING THE BILL.

"There's nothing like reprisals," he said. "A tobacconist sent a doctor the other day a ten-dollar box of cigars, saying he knew they hadn't been ordered, but they were so excellent he was sure the doctor would enjoy them. Bill inclosed. Terms strictly cash.

"The doctor wrote back:

" 'Delighted with the cigars. Though it is true you haven't called me in, I venture to send you herewith two prescriptions for rheumatism and dyspepsia, respectively, that I am sure you will like, as they have given universal satisfaction to my patients. My charges being $5 per prescription, we are now quits.' "—Washington Star.

TOBACCO PRICES IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Minneapolis smokers who have been submitting to a 1 cent raise in prices of certain brands of tobacco, believing the raise from 5 to 6 cents imperative because of the new government revenue tax law enforcement, are being warned by the manufacturers to pay no more than 5 cents for the packages, it was learned today. In some instances the warning was in the form of notices placed inside the packages at the factory.

Although the manufacturers of Peerless, Bull Durham, Tuxedo and other products, have provided for the payment of taxation on certain goods and reduced the weight of others, some retailers have been taking advantage of the general raise of prices on all taxable goods by adding 1 cent where a raise is not justified, makers said in their notices.

The notices placed in the packages advising the consumer to pay no more than 5 cents and explain that at that price the retailer makes a fair margin of profit.

However, there is a difference of opinion on this score, the retailer insisting that the price must be raised and both the maker and the wholesaler cautioning the consumer to pay no more than 5 cents.

"The retailer is taking advantage of conditions and adding 1 cent to the prices of goods for which he pays no more than ever," said an officer of Winecke & Doerr Co.

"On Bull Durham, the smaller packages of Tuxedo and Peerless, the manufacturer has assumed the government tax levy and the retailers pay the price charged before the enactment of the law. They pay 48 cents a dozen for the goods and for cash a 2 per cent discount is allowed, which gives a profit of 1 cent on the package. However, there are brands of tobacco upon which a raise is necessary."

One retail dealer today explained that because of the increased cost of maintaining his establishment, the 1 cent raise is fair, regardless of the manufacturer's warning to consumers.

"Although the raise of 1 cent on certain brands of tobacco is not made necessary by the revenue tax, it is necessary in the maintenance of our business," said Walter Short, a retail dealer. "For many years we have been forced to carry tobacco at a very small profit, but have been willing to do this because the margin of profit on cigars was large. Now, however, the government tax has sliced our cigar margin down to almost nothing, and we feel that we are justified in raising the price of tobacco.—Minneapolis Journal.

LANCASTER GROWERS GET BIG PRICES.

"Fewer tobacco buyers were on the road last week than for some time past," says the Lancaster, Pa., New Era, and but few sales were recorded. This was due in large part to the inability of the buyers to get through the country roads.

"Two of the largest sales were made in Fulton township. These were the crops of Jason Walton and Clifton Armstrong and both of them were fine crops. They were purchased by John Dommel for the Hoffman's. The figures were not given out but they are known to have been above 25 cents through.

"Simon Snyder, of Drumore, sold 4 acres to Atlee Groff at 20 cents through.

"B. F. Mowery bought the following crops around Quarryville:

"Daniel M. Rineer, 3 acres at 20 cents through.

"William Lefever, 2 acres at 20 cents through.

"Jesse Lefever, 2 acres at 20 cents through.

Walter Lefever, 2 acres at 15 cents through.

"The same buyer bought the six acre crop of Sanders Long on private terms and 2 acres from Miller Book at 20 cents through. These came from Quarryville.

"Charles Rocky, of Bart, sold 4 acres to Sanders Long at 24½ and 13.

ANCIENT USES OF TOBACCO.

The Franciscans had noticed a century earlier the belief of these tribes that there was some peculiarly close connection between the Europeans and the evil spirit of whom the European missionaries preached.

When human beings were admitted by death to closer communion with the tobacco-loving spirits of the other world, it was considered an act of piety to provide them with the means of smoking. A recent authority speaks of the burial of the tobacco pouch with the dead. When Father Hennepin was among the "Issati Nadouessans," one of them died suddenly from the bite of a rattlesnake, and the missionary was present at the funeral ceremony. The mourners clamored round him, telling him that he "must give the departed some tobacco of Martinico, that he might have something to smoke." The good missionary told them that there was "neither smoking nor eating in the country of souls"—a statement they regarded as absurd. "I made them a present," he says, "of two fathoms of our black tobacco; they love it passionately; their own is not so well cured, nor so strong, as that of Martinico, of which I made them a present. I told them it was for themselves, not for the defunct. They said 'very well,' and sat down and fell a-smoking, taking no further notice of my discourse." Although they made theoretical objections to the missionary's doctrine concerning the uselessness of tobacco to the dead, they accepted it practically by making use of the coveted Martinico for themselves.

Latrobe, in his conspectus of the feasts observed by the Delaware Indians, speaking of what he calls their "Fifth Festival," gives a curious account of their employment of tobacco in its celebration. This festival is observed "in honor of fire, which they consider as the first parent of all Indian tribes." The fire spirit is attended by twelve subordinate "manittos." (Manitou is also the name of that great god who is above all the lesser gods of sun, moon, earth, fire, water, and the rest. Each deity, greater and minor alike, finds the odor of tobacco grateful when it rises as incense into his nostrils.

"A large oven," says Latrobe, "is built in the midst of the house of sacrifice, consisting of twelve poles, each of a different species of wood. These they run into the ground, tie them together at the top, and cover them entirely with blankets joined close together, so that the whole appears like a baker's oven, high enough nearly to admit a man standing upright. After dinner the oven is heated with twelve large stones made red hot. Then twelve men creep into it, and remain there as long as they can bear the heat. Meanwhile, an old man throws in twelve pipes full (pipefuls) of tobacco upon the hot stones, which occasions a smoke almost powerful enough to suffocate the persons thus confined; so that, upon their being taken out, they generally fall down in a swoon."

In this ceremony of the Delawares the three sacred uses of tobacco appear to be united—the sacrifice or gift, the grateful incense, and the procuring of an ecstatic condition in the ministers of the worship. Latrobe says, in another place, that the tobacco of the Iroquois and Delawares was so excessively strong that they never smoked it alone, but mixed with it the dried leaves of the sumac (rhus glabrum), or some other herb. The visions which the ministers see, and the wild words which they pour forth, during their fits or swoons, are regarded as insights into the hidden order of the universe and communications from the higher spirits, with whom they there and then enter into close fellowship. The snuffing of "cohoba," as a medium of entering into religious communication with the powers of the unseen world, was witnessed by Columbus at he time of discovery of the West India Isla ds. The datura seeds, which have been use in civilized lands by thieves to drug the d nk of their victims, were given by the Da en Indians to their children in order to inc ce the state of delirious prophetic vision in which they revealed hidden treasures. In both North and South America, tobacco as used for such purposes, the smoke invari ly being swallowed, and the strongest kind p- ployed. An intoxication brought on by he continued swallowing of tobacco-smoke as regarded by the North American In n tribes as a supernatural condition; and ll the illusions that visited them were ta en for revelations. "By smoking tobacco, e sorcerers of the Brazilian tribes were rai d to ecstasy in their convulsive orgies, d saw spirits." . . . John Nieuhoff, vho sailed from the Texel to Brazil in 1640, d remained there until 1649, has described e huge stone pipes used by the Tapoyers of Brazil: "the bowls are so big that they c n- tain a whole handful of Tobacco at a tin."

CLEANING UP THE MARKET

(Special Cable to Tobacco)

Havana, December 31 — The largest, finest and only escogida left of first capaduras, 825 bales, sold today by Muniz & Gonzales, of 148 Calle Industria, brought the highest price paid in Havana this year. The transaction involved $125,000.

It is understood here that the big purchase referred to, was made by Walter Sutter & Co., "for account of American clients." Another notably important "buy" was made recently by Starlight Bros. of NewYork.

SHIP AND CARGO LOST

Greek Steamer Ioannia, Torpedoed Off the Azores, Had 50,000 Bales of Turkish Tobacco.

Off the Azores, the day before Christmas, the Greek steamer Ioannia, bound from Greece to an American port, was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine.

According to a report, not confirmed officially, the Ioannia carried Turkish tobacco valued at nearly $5,000,000.

The Ioannia was a 6,000-ton ship, commanded by Capt. George Sigalis. Concerning the sinking of the vessel, but very meagre news has been received. It is not known here how many, if any, lives were lost, when the ship went down.

The tobacco cargo, said to be approximately 50,000 bales, probably was covered by war insurance.

Commencing to Tap the Pocket Books

Seven Million Americans Must Pay Income Taxes—Every Unmarried Person Must File a Report Before March 1—Collections to Be Made by July 1 Estimated to Be $1,201,000,000—Also from Excess Profits Taxes the Government Will Obtain $1,220,000,000—A Small Army of Accountants Will Be Employed

WASHINGTON, December 31.—The great task of gathering income tax and excess profits returns will begin with the new year tomorrow.

Every unmarried person earning more than $1,000 during the last year, and every married person or head of a family who made more than $2,000, must file with the internal revenue collector of his district a report any time between tomorrow and March 1. He will be notified before June 1 of the tax due, and payment will be due by June 15.

The government expects to receive $1,201,000,000 from income taxes before July 1, including $666,000,000 from individuals and $535,000,000 from corporations. This is more than one-third of the $3,400,000,000 estimated receipts under the war revenue act passed by Congress at the last session.

From excess profits taxes, the government expects to realize about $1,220,000,000 before July 1.

The rate of tax for a married man or the head of a family is 2 per cent on the amount of his net income exceeding $2,000, but less than $4,000, and 4 per cent on the amount of his net income above $4,000 but less than $5,000. An unmarried person not the head of a family will pay 2 per cent on the amount of net income above $1,000 but less than $3,000, and 4 per cent on the net income above $3,000 but less than $5,000.

An extra levy or surtax, in addition to the normal lax is imposed on becomes above $5,000, so that the amount of income between $5,000 and $7,500 is subject to a total income tax, including both normal and extra, of 5 per cent, and between $7,500 and $10,000 6 per cent. The surtax further increases with higher incomes, so that amounts of $1,000,000 are taxable at 65 per cent with 1 per cent additional for each half million up to two million dollars. All incomes over the latter amount are taxable at 67 per cent.

Typical income tax levies on heads of families are as follows: Income of $2,500, tax is $10; income of $3,000, tax is $20; income of $3,500, tax is $30; income of $4,000, tax is $40; income of $4,500, tax is $60; income of $5,000, tax is $80.

Unmarried persons would pay in this way: Income of $1,500, tax is $10; income of $2,000, tax is $20; income of $2,500, tax is $30; income of $3,000, tax is $40; income of $3,500, tax is $60; income of $4,000, tax is $80; income of $4,500, tax is $100; income of $5,000, tax is $120.

Taxes may be paid in four installments between now and June 15, if this arrangement is preferred, but the Treasury will open a determined campaign soon to encourage persons to pay their tax in full immediately, and receive interest on the advance payment.

A small army of accountants, especially trained for the work in schools conducted by district collectors for the past two weeks, will go into the field, beginning Wednesday, to assist persons in filing their returns, and will travel on pre-arranged itineraries for a month or more. In addition, federal agricultural agents and representatives of state and county councils of national defense, have enlisted in the campaign of education.

By this extensive campaign of education Internal Revenue Commissioner Roper hopes to eliminate the chances of failure to file a return through ignorance of the requirements.

In fact, officials in charge of the tax gathering machine expect to eliminate the usual grudging spirit of taxpayers. They have called this a "Liberty Tax," because its proceeds go to the same war cause as the Liberty Bond issues, and every effort will be made to encourage the spirit of willing giving among those on whom the tax falls.

About 7,000,000 persons will pay income taxes, it is estimated, and most will be subject to a direct federal tax for the first time, for less than $500,000 paid income taxes last year under the old law. Tax return forms have been made as simple as possible, those for incomes of less than $3,000 being especially free from techincal features or inquisitorial items.

Corporations will pay income taxes also, but on a different basis. Their net income is subject to a tax of 6 per cent under the new war revenue act. and certain technical deductions are allowed. Corporation returns are due between January 1 and March 1, for the calendar year 1917, and companies operating on a fiscal year basis must report within sixty days after the end of the fiscal year.

Beginning tomorrow also excess profits returns for the year 1917 will be received from corporations, partnerships and individuals. The last date for the filing of these is March 1, the same as on income returns, and payment must be made also before June 15, except under the fiscal year arrangement.

Individuals making more than $6,000 during the year also are subject to an 8 per cent tax on their income above that amount, independent of the regular income taxes. This 8 per cent levy is imposed on individuals with no capital, or with only nominal capital, such as professional men with money invested in books, dentists' and physicians' instruments, or other equipment.

Gompers' Plea to Labor

WASHINGTON, January 1.—In a New Year's greeting to all organized labor Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, calls upon representatives and organizers to make plain to their fellows the issues involved in the war and the obligation that devolves upon all citizens. He also emphasizes the importance of seeing to it that the spirit and methods of democracy are maintained at home while the country is fighting to establish them in international relations.

"War means victory for our cause or danger to the very existence of our nation," says the address. "With our nation at stake, individuals cannot interpose opposition to the war, a war declared by the will of the nation's representatives. Under the exigencies of war, opposition to the war declared by constituted authority becomes treason.

"While this is true, there is even more than ordinary need for the maintenance of the rights of men and women and for careful scrutiny and the fullest discussion of politics and methods before their adoption. The time for labor to interpose its needs and contentions is while policies are in the making.

"The fighting and the concrete issues of the war are so far removed from the people of our country that not all of our citizens have a full understanding of the issues involved. An understanding of the principles of autocratic force, which the Central powers desire to substitute for the real principles of freedom, makes clear to all citizens of this republic the effect of our possible defeat upon their own lives and activities.

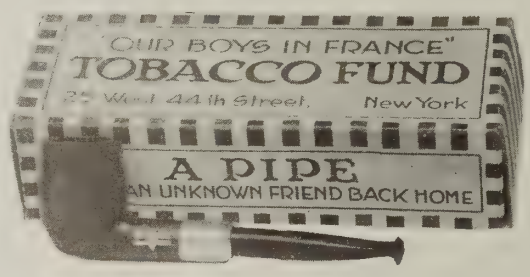
"In addition to the fundamental principles at issue, labor has an additional interest in the war. This war is in the last analysis a people's war—labor's war. The final outcome will be determined in the factories, the mills and shops, the mines, the farms, the industries and the transportation agencies of the various countries. That group of countries which can most successfully organize its agencies of production and transportation and which can furnish the most effective agencies with which to conduct the war will win.

"The workers have a part in this war coequal with the soldiers and sailors.

"Continuous production is an indispensible prerequisite to production of necessary war supplies. The government, as well as the workers themselves, is vitally interested in maintaining such conditions, that there shall be no occasion for interruption in production.

"The chief responsible agents of the government have shown a desire to be fair, and an understanding of the human elements involved in this problem. The organized labor movement has also shown an equally broad understanding and grasp of the situation."

SOLDIERS INSURING.



At Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., during the month of November nearly 20,000 applications were sent to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; 71 per cent of these was for the maximum amount of $10,000, 23 per cent was for $5,000, and 6 per cent was for lesser sums. In 16 companies every single man applied for insurance; in 5 units, 3 of them full companies, every man applied.

APPRECIATED PIPES

Thousands of Demuth pipes are being shipped to the boys in France by "Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund." These pipes distributed by the Red Cross Society, cost twenty-two cents, including the postage for transportation to the trenches. Alexander B. Dick who has charge of the fund says that the Red Cross has informed him that the pipes are the best that they have had.

While the fund is growing daily, and promises to be the largest in the country, it can still make good use of more money. About Washington's Birthday Mr. Dick and Mr. Ennis, the publicity man, have planned to conduct a tobacco week. Boxes will be placed in thousands of cigar and other stores throughout the country. Into these boxes, the public will be invited to deposit money and cigarettes. No loose cigarettes will be accepted. All wishing to give cigarettes or tobacco should see that the seals are not broken on the packages that they drop into the boxes.

This week magazines and newspapers will make a special appeal to help swell the fund which now amounts to $136,500.

THE PIPE OF WAR

The New York Sun says:

"Dr. Pease and his little friends, including Annette Hazelton, will be chagrined over the statement of the British Food Controller, Lord Rhondda, on the weed in war:

"'We must have tobacco. I believe that its loss would be a national misfortune. It means much both to the manual laborer and to him who works with his brains. Men would eat a great deal more if they did not have tobacco. I hold that the deprivation of it would work great discomfort.'

"It used to be said against tobacco and coffee that they were devils because they killed the appetite for food. Now, for the same reason, they are angels. Heroes drink a cup of Rio, grab a cigarette and go over the top. Robert Reed, whose fingers are stainless and who drinks milk, stays at home and gobbles wheat bread and sugar while Hoover's back is turned. Harry Sandford is a national peril, his virtuous young appetite unchecked by nicotine; the Merton boy is pointed out to him as a patriotic smoke blower. Does Blifil smoke? Probably not, the miserable hypocrite, but Tom Jones and Black Geroge will be puffing away. Nobody can doubt the loyalty of Messrs. Finn and Sawyer, the most conscientious tobacco users in literature. King James is dead, but Raleigh lives forever.

"In the biographies of some eminent citizens of the future we shall read that, 'while previously unaccustomed to the use of tobacco, they smoked constantly during the great war.' It will be almost unnecessary to say what they did with their tobacco certificates and coupons."

REMARKABLE AND GRATIFYING.

One of the most remarkable things about th Liberty Loan campaigns is the small effect the have had on the savings banks accounts, whic show an increase.

Never in the country's history were saving deposits greater or growing more rapidly.

Our National Debt

WASHINGTON, January 1.—The Unite States enters the new year with a national ne debt of $5,615,000,000, more than five time greater than when it entered the war nin months ago, but only one-third of the deb which promises to develop by the first of nex year. The debt per capita is about $51, an the percentage of debt to estimated nationa wealth is 2½ per cent.

The Treasury financial summary statement issued today for the first time since June 3(last, shows that actual disbursements durin the first half of the fiscal year have fallen fa below the estimates, particularly for the mili tary establishment. An enormous prospectiv increase in War Department expenses, fo munitions and materials contracts to be fille in the spring, will raise the government out lays at that time, but officials feel some doub that ordinary disbursements will reach the $12, 316,000,000 estimated for the fiscal year endin next June 30.

The actual outlay for the military establish ment up to December 1 was $1,311,000,000 th estimated outlay for the whole fiscal year i $8,790,000,000. The navy spent $426,000,00(and the estimate for the year is $1,300,000,00(Shipping Board expenditures were $118,000, 000, while the year's estimate is $901,000,00(Each of these three principal departments ha outstanding contracts for which big expendi tures will have to be made within the remain ing half of the fiscal year, however, and th aggregate of these is the uncertain elemen which makes it impossible to determine at thi time precisely how many additional Libert bonds must be issued between now and nex June 30.

Great as the national debt seems to this coun try, whose debt before the war was only a littl past the billion dollar mark, it is only abou one-fourth that of Great Britain, France, Rus sia or Germany. The debt of all of America' co-belligerents is about $84,000,000,000, or 1 per cent of the estimated wealth of those na tions, and the Teutonic allies' debt is abou $40,000,000,000, or 28 per cent of their esti mated wealth.

THE ROBBERS GOT $400

Four Holdup Men Plunder the United Cigar Store at 232 Bleecker Street, New York—The Clerk Lost His Watch

Four robbers took $400 from the United Cigar Store at 232 Bleecker street, New York, about 7 o'clock, Monday evening.

Anthony J. Perota of No. 868 Eagle avenue, the Bronx, was the clerk on duty. A man entered and asked for a package of cigarettes. Perota turned, got them and turned back. He faced a revolver.

"Say a word," said the intruder, "and I'll blow your head off."

The robber then forced the clerk into a back room and three other men came in. They rifled the sale and cash register, getting $300 in bills and $100 in silver. They took Perota's watch, too.

LITTLE RAILROAD DEAL

Durham and South Carolina Railway Acquired by Big Shareholders of American Tobacco Co., "They Say."

The purchase of the Durham and South Carolina Railroad by big stockholders of the American Tobacco Co. is reported.

While report as yet has not been confirmed officially by parties interested, a dispatch from Durham, N. C., intimates that many believe that the rearrangement of the stock of the Durham and South Carolina is but the beginning of more important changes in railroad circles.

"Indirectly such a change in ownership of the Durham and South Carolina will change the complexion of railroad work in Durham. It will mean that a great deal of freight, which heretofore has been handled by the Durham and Southern, the Duke road from Durham to Dunn, will be diverted to the Durham and South Carolina.

"Arrangements have been made with the Seaboard Air Line in Durham to use the freight depot of that railroad for handling the up-town business which will be diverted to the Durham and South Carolina in the general changes. This freight depot and clerical force already is handling the business of the Seaboard and Durham and Southern. It is generally understood that the change in ownership of a portion of the stock of the D. and S. C. will also pull a considerable amount of other business to that road. Other manufacturing interests in Durham either connected with or affiliated with the American Tobacco Co., will also go to the Durham and South Carolina, according to the opinion of many of the railroad men in Durham.

"The diversion of this slice of business from the Durham and Southern will cut heavily into the revenues of that road. It is understood that the Durham and Southern road, the larger portion of the stock of which is owned by J. B. Duke, B. N. Duke and George W. Watts, will still have first pull at the business of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., several of the cotton mills and other business in Durham."

ROSES FOR SCHNEIDER

A Christmas Celebration in the Seidenberg Cigar Factory in Trenton—The Company Provided Gifts.

One of the merriest of Christmas parties was held at the plant of Seidenberg & Co. in Trenton. The hundreds of employees of the company assembled in the auditorium of the plant, where the management had provided a huge Christmas tree, which was tastefully decorated. The party resolved into a reception and employees, members of the firm and managers became young again for the time being and participated in various festivities.

As a token of the esteem in which A. Schneider, vice president of the company, is held by the employees of the local plant he was given a bouquet of American Beauty roses. A like remembrance was handed Albert Gold, manager of the plant. The presentations were made on behalf of the employees by little Miss Theresa Zimmerman, who had been selected for that purpose. She gave a very appropriate talk in presenting the gifts. Mr. Gold was also remembered by the office force and foremen. They gave him a diamond pin for his scarf.

Mr. Schneider and Mr. Gold responded, telling of their appreciation of the gifts and the feeling on the part of the employees which prompted the remembrances.

In return the company gave every employee a box of Belle Mead Sweets. Refreshments were also served and a musical program was given by the Versatile Sextette.

Seidenberg & Co., through Manager Gold, takes pleasure in looking after the comfort and well being of the employees. A large rest room and recreational centre has been established in the plant and also a hospital with a nurse constantly in charge. Not only does the nurse administer to the employees who may be taken ill while at the plant, but also visits them and members of their families at their homes.

Frequently during the year the company arranges social events for the workers, and there is a marked degree of harmony between employer and employees.—Trentor Times.

CARLOS SEBASTIEN

Accused of earning $15,000 a year as a fox trotter Carlos Sebastien, a noted society dancer in the west, has broken away from his profession to accept a job in Chicago paying him $22 a week. For a normal minded person to make such a change there must be a strong incentive. In this particular instance the French proverb applies.

Sebastien recently was divorced from his dancing partner, Dorothy Bentley, and five days later he married Elizabeth Thompson, daughter of a wealthy Chicago lumberman. While discussing the matter, Sebastien is reported to have said that he was forced to leave his wife with the understanding that if he gave up dancing and made good in business for a year he could have his wife back. Sebastien now boasts that he started his business career by scrubbing floors in a restaurant and continued going up until he became manager.

DIDN'T INDICT THEM

"No True Bill," Says the Grand Jury in Nashville Which Considered the Cases of Cigarette Dealers Who Had Been Arrested

No true bill was the report of the Grand Jury discharged Tuesday by Judge A. B. Neil in the cases before that body against merchants, druggists and cigar dealers charged with having cigarettes in stock in Nashville. Many arrests were made the past two months by the police, deputy sheriffs and county constables of dealers handling cigarettes and large stocks were confiscated by the officers at the time the arrests were made. These cases have been under investigation by the Grand Jury for some time and were disposed of by that body Tuesday by returning no true bills in all of the cases.

The Tennessee Legislature placed a privilege tax on cigarette dealers and each of the parties, it is said, had paid this privilege tax, believing that the action of the Legislature in placing a tax on the business had legalized it. The sudden and unexpected raids made upon them; it is said by the Nashville Tennesseean, was the first intimation they had that the traffic was unlawful.

The large stocks of cigarettes which were seized and held at the jail and police station in Nashville will be returned to the owners as a result of the Grand Jury failing to find indictments against those arrested.

TAXES IN TENNESSEE

And Some Other Things, Cause Chattanooga Retailers Who Sell Cigarettes to Be Rather Angry

Following closely payment of $6.15 costs each by twenty-one Chattanooga dealers, all charged with selling cigarettes and ordered to appear before 'Squire Calkins a few days ago, the same dealers were called upon last Thursday to pay a license tax by the County Clerk amounting to $36.

Still smarting under the assessment of $6.15 as costs for their appearance before 'Squire Calkins, a number of the dealers balked when License Collector Green Light presented an order from County Court Clerk Watson that a tax of $36 was due for the sale of cigarettes, which, if not paid by the next day, would be increased by $5.95, and a distress warrant served. Though they balked a little, those who did not pay the license tax made arrangement for immediate settlement.

The Tennessee revenue act of 1917 provides that all retail dealers selling cigarettes in cities and towns of a population of 20,000 or more shall each be taxed $15. One prominent cigar dealer, familiar with the revenue act, asked for an explanation of the $36 tax assessed. He stated that he was informed that the tax for State and county amounted to $30 plus a fee of $1.50 due the County Court Clerk for issuing same, plus $4.50, a penalty due Internal Revenue Collector Hauk for making the demand upon the County Court Clerk to collect taxes from cigarette dealers.

"It doesn't seem fair to me," said one of the dealers, "that we should be called upon to pay fees here and there, while some go unmolested, despite the fact the authorities are aware they sell cigarettes. It seems that they pick out a chosen few, and, mind you, their best friends, and approach you as if they were doing you a favor and giving you a guarantee against future molestation. We plank down the costs demanded, thinking it's all over for at least a week, and then comes along this license tax."

County Court Clerk Watson told a reporter of the Chattanooga Times that his office was only collecting a license tax of $30 and a fee.

PROVE YOUR COURAGE

Courage, no doubt, is the first thing required in developing plans for 1918. For the average man can't see with certainty what the future has in store. Nor do existing conditions cause the prudent to hasten. The trade has problems to solve today, of a kind never encountered before. Business, of every class, is being rearranged, "on account of the war."

To some, present circumstances may be discouraging. A few are so pessimistic that they will look only at the dark side of things. Yet the New Year brings hope and cheer for those who have "the will to do, the soul to dare." When enterprise and industry promise adequate rewards, the man really courting failure is the fellow who is afraid to take a chance.

In times like these, to hesitate is the surest way to lose.

To falter, delay or refuse to act is the course that the weakling pursues.

He, who takes too long to consider, doesn't travel very far up the road to success.

The chap that trails behind, who waits to see what move his competitor will make, may be careful but how slow is his progress.

Initiative pays. The manufacturer or merchant who has courage sufficient to back his judgment, seldom has regrets.

In the tobacco trade, now is the time to go ahead.

WAR SAVINGS CERTIFICATES

Described by Frank A. Vanderlip, President of the National City Bank of New York

Now, these War Savings Certificates; what are they? They are little postage stamps—that is about what you know of them, I suppose. I believe that among all the wise things that the Secretary of the Treasury has done—and I think he has done many wise things—his advice to Congress to give him legislation to issue War Savings Certificates was the wisest, the most far-reaching in its results, of anything that he has done.

A War Savings Certificate is a piece of paper upon which is printed the promise of the Government. It is without value except as that value is measured by stamps that are attached to it. Those stamps will all mature January 1, 1923. It is our aim to have them on sale at more places in the United States than any other single article.

Now, let us see what an investment in War Savings Stamps is like. You pay this month or next $4.12 for one of these stamps. When you buy it, it is attached to a certificate that has on it a place for twenty stamps. Your name is written on the certificate, and after you have attached your first stamp your rights are as complete as they will be at any time, should you fill the certificate or add any number of stamps less than twenty. Now, what are those rights? If you hold the certificate for five years you get five dollars from the Government for every stamp attached. That means four per cent. compound interest, compounded quarterly. But the buyer may say: "What if I want my money before?" All right; you can have it. The idea is that men are making this loan to the Government for five years, but if in the exigencies of life the holder of one of these certificates needs the money, he can go to any one of the fifty thousand postoffices in the United States, and, on giving ten days' notice, get back the money.

This is the simplest, the most convenient, and surely the safest method of saving that was ever offered to a people. It is not necessary to go to any particular bank, or even to a postoffice. You can buy these stamps anywhere. You can cash them at any postoffice. Suppose you lose this certificate. It is of no use in the hands of anyone but the man whose name appears on it. If an honest person finds it, all he has to do is to drop it into the nearest postoffice box, without postage or further address, and the postoffice will return it to its owner. If a dishonest person finds it, he has to give the postoffice ten days' notice that he is going to commit forgery—which he is not likely to do. So, you see, you are pretty safe. But suppose it should be burned up or otherwise irretrievably lost; then you would be out of pocket. But the Government will even insure you against that, if you will take a little trouble. You can take this certificate to any postoffice and without cost have it registered; have the stamps canceled. After that you have to deal with the one postoffice, and when you add further stamps you have to have them canceled too. You then have something that is equivalent to a passbook. If you lose it you have only to establish your identity and your loss is made good.

For people who find $4.12 a considerable amount the Government has issued 25-cent thrift stamps. They are affixed to a thrift card, which holds sixteen. The sixteen will cost $4, and their only purpose is to be exchanged for a War Savings Stamp, by the payment of 12 or 13 cents.

There is the whole story. It is simple. It can be explained in two minutes. Any child can understand it. And what is it going to accomplish? It is going to raise two billion dollars. That is a big thing; the biggest financial transaction ever undertaken in this country, excepting the two Liberty Loans.

A Word of Cheer for the Glad New Year

To all ye who today eschew
The schooner and the flagon,
Who vow henceforth that you will do
Your bit upon the wagon.
And yet who fear, that soon or late,
Your resolution losing,
You'll yield to what you think is fate
And take again to boozing:
Cheer up, for ere the year is out,
(Heed these prophetic stanzas)
The U. S. A. will be about
As dry as arid Kansas.
Your nerve may break; your wobbling soul
May not find the resistance
To leave alone the flowing bowl,
But you will have assistance.
And so, although today you think
The Demon Rum will get you,
We don't believe you'll take to drink;
The Government won't let you!

How Long Do You Wait for Your Money?

Answers and Explanations Based on Experience in Making Use of Trade Acceptances

(By Maurice T. Fleisher in System.)

"Trade acceptance" is a term used to designate a certain kind of negotiable paper made between the buyer and seller of merchandise. The seller sends it to the buyer, usually with the invoice, made out in the amount of the customer's indebtedness for the merchandise; and the paper becomes negotiable when the buyer writes his "acceptance" across the face. He returns it to the seller, who can hold it for collection at the due date, or discount it and receive his money at once. The main purpose of the trade acceptance is to liquefy the money commonly tied up in open accounts.

In theory the trade acceptance is as simple as making out an invoice for a domestic shipment. In practice there are a number of forms, differing in detail, though they commonly adhere fairly closely to the standard form of the Federal Reserve Bank.

We wrote some 60 letters to users or suspected users. With the letter went a printed slip on which the answers might be indicated by check marks. Space was left for comment or additional information.

Before discussing in detail the replies received, I wish to quote from a letter, recently received, that indicates some reasons why it seems unusually important now to employ such means as may prove practicable to render liquid as much of our capital as we can. The letter is written by the president of a manufacturing concern that has used trade acceptances for several years. He says:

"It is estimated that in this country, approximately $4,000,000,000 of capital are normally tied up in dead ledger accounts. To the extent that this enormous volume of inert capital is converted into self-liquidating trade acceptances available for rediscount at the Federal Reserve Bank, we may replace capital diverted to war purposes.

"In this connection, it must be remembered that before the first of next June, nearly $3,000,000,000 of taxes must be paid out of the profits of business for 1917. Judging the future by the past, a majority of business men will not be likely to set aside ahead of time the funds necessary to meet these taxes. In fact, it is more likely that such funds will be merged with permanent or working capital in plant, merchandise, or accounts receivable.

"Manifestly, such assets are not readily converted into cash needed for the payment of these taxes. Consequently, those who have not made proper financial preparation will have to turn to the banks for assistance. But at that time banks may be unwilling, or perhaps unable, to assume the burden. To meet such an emergency, merchandise may be sacrificed or accounts receivable 'hocked' at outrageous rates.

"Trade acceptances will help to assure a definite income for meeting obligations at definite times. They may be readily discounted at the bank in practically unlimited volume because the bank may, in turn, rediscount them at the Federal Reserve Bank, without limit."

To consider, then, the results of our investigation of the firms addressed, 23 answered affirmatively the first question, "Have you used the trade acceptance?" And the same number answered "yes" to the second question, "Are you now using them?" Evidently none who had attempted their use had found them impracticable. It might be mentioned here that, while authority was granted to member banks of the Federal Reserve less than two years ago to discount domestic trade acceptances, several concerns said they had been using them in closing accounts as long as four or eight years.

The third question, "Do your customers receive them well?" brought out an unqualified affirmative answer from 16 concerns; and the reply "Some do and some do not" from 6 more. Not one indicates an intention of abandoning acceptances on account of objections. Judging from the replies I have received from customers of my own when I requested them to accept, I am forced to the conclusion that objections are usually based on a lack of understanding of just what a trade acceptance is. Naturally, it is not difficult to clear up this point for them.

One of the users wrote, in reply to this question:

"We inaugurated the use of trade acceptances in our business almost four years ago and for a long time we found that many buyers were decidedly averse to closing their accounts with 'notes,' as acceptances were often improperly called.

"We undertook a campaign to educate our customers; and our own efforts, supplemented by those of the National Association of Credit Men and other organizations, has brought about a clearer understanding of the real character of the new instrument.

"We now have little difficulty in inducing our customers to "accept,' particularly as we give a special trade acceptance discount to them."

Many of the concerns, in their replies, indicated that they experienced some difficulty at the start in introducing trade acceptances. One man summed up thus the objections met in his concern:

"1. Misunderstanding of the character of the trade acceptance, and confusing it with notes.

"2. Ungrounded fear of the buyer that the giving of acceptances would reflect on his credit at his own bank.

"3. Unwillingness of time buyers to assist the seller in effecting the economy, when the buyer himself did not enjoy any special benefit.

"4. Reluctance of certain classes of houses to close their accounts when by so doing the door was closed on unjustified claims, the taking of unearned discount, unwarranted return of goods, and other abuses.

"5. Inquiry among a large number of our customers developed the fact that when our request was laid before the banker, the new method was 'damned with faint praise,' and in many cases the buyer was directly advised not to accept."

To the fourth question, "Do you make acceptance a condition of sale?" the replies were "yes" 6, and "no" 18. The 6 who replied affirmatively also answer negatively—an apparent paradox, that is easily explained by the statement that sometimes they insist on the trade acceptance, and sometimes they do not. To some of my own customers, for instance, I will not extend credit under any other condition on account of rating, poor methods of payment, or the unusual amount of credit asked.

"Do you send them out with all invoices?" is the fifth question. Only one concern answered "yes"; 19 answered in the negative. This one concern is a sawmill in the Middle West which has an unusual plan. Another concern sends trade acceptances with invoices only to new customers, and to customers with whom they have been discussed in advance.

It is the general practice among the concerns investigated not to send acceptances to customers who are in the habit of discounting. This was brought out by the answers.

AMERICAN CIGARETTE MACHINES IN ALGERIA.

Arthur C. Frost, American Consul at Algiers, reports that two American cigarette-making machines have recently been placed in operation in Algiers, and several others are being installed. American machinery for drying and cutting has also been introduced with success.

Before the war Germany enjoyed a practical monopoly in providing such equipment. In the case of one machine, the German product was a close imitation of the American make.

The tobacco industry is one of the most important in Algeria. In 1915, 35,000,000 packages of cigarettes were manufactured for interior consumption and 66,000,000 packages for export, especially to French Indo-China. The production of cigarettes has increased from 593 metric tons in 1901 to 1,874 in 1916. The Algerian market, therefore, offers a quite extensive field for cigarette machinery.

THE TOBACCO PROBLEM IN GREAT BRITAIN

Certain tobacco has been coming over, and this has helped to eke out stocks usefully, but if by the cataloguing of necessities, luxuries, etc., the position assigned to tobacco should leave it too much out in the cold, this is leading to a climax. Tonnage would, if tobacco should be differently catalogued and made to rank as a prime necessity, require special tobacco ships to be employed at a time when it was inconvenient to employ them in this service. The fact is it would be well for the Board of Trade to consider at this time the position. Facts have forced the commodity tobacco into being an actual war supply. We have had considerable experience of the happy phenomenon that tobacco manufacturers, along with those in other lines, have by no means looked upon their own industry and commerce as the hub of the universe. They have been British first and business men afterwards. There is no special credit attaching to this frame of mind. There would have been indelible disgrace if it had not been assumed.

Now, however, that the manufacturers have made up their minds upon the evidence, they are in a position to collect that tobacco is a war essential; it is also time that the nation and particularly the Board of Trade, the Controller of Shipping, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Prime Minister, should weigh tobacco in the scale of political values and find out its real worth. To find it to be a luxury pure and simple would be as unreasoning as denying the utility of tanks. In a different way tobacco is as useful as munitions. And what is useful as munitions has to be considered as properly classified with the other defensive weapons.

The use of all the appliances of war and the making of the same are facilitated by the use of tobacco by soldiers and munition workmen. This plain fact, now quite evident, would have looked like an unproved statement three years ago, but now it is being read at this moment by a reader who at once acquiesces in it. We have learned how to make war in three years, and among the things the country has learned is the national utility of smoking. We believe the trade itself would welcome a pronouncement by the authorities as to the precise standing of the trade as ascertained from the official point of view; as to its relation to import; as to the degree in which it is considered vital as a tax raising instrument.—London Tobacco.

A MEETING POSTPONED

Plans to Unionize the Entire Cigar Industry in New York City Were Frosted.

All union cigarmakers of New York city interested in the welfare of the trade were urged to attend a mass meeting, representing all the unions, which was to be held at Bohemian National hall, 321 East 73rd street on the evening of December 27.

In the call it was declared that "the great need of the cigarmakers to be solidly prepared to take in the large numbers of unorganized men and women was never more emphasized than now, and in spite of the increase in membership as the result of the campaign of 1917, plans will be evolved to make 1918 the banner year in New York City.

One of the most important objects of the meeting was to bring about a uniform price list in all the shops. "At present there is so great a variance that vast confusion results."

However, because of the cold weather, only a few cigar makers responded to the call and the meeting was postponed.

Jacob Rhein, secretary of Cigarmakers' union, No. 90 says the meeting planned will be held soon and followed by one for the unorganized workers some time this month.

TOBACCO SALES FLOOR.

Planned for Lancaster, Pa.—Following the Methods Employed in Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia.

"Plans are on foot" in Lancaster, Pa., announces the Intelligencer, "for the establishment of a 'tobacco auction floor' similar to those which have brought fame and fortune to the tobacco people of Richmond, Va., Lexington, Kentucky, and other centres where much tobacco is raised.

"The idea is to have the 'floor' established by a stock company with the stock widely held so that there will be more than passing interest in the plan.

"For years the 'sales floor' idea has been killed in the budding by the smaller dealers who felt that they would rather go into the field and purchase from the farmers direct. But the killing made by the few big fellows the last year, has caused a change of heart among many of the smaller and most all of the local packers, who were practically shut out of the market last year because the big fellows with their unlimited capital and big buying force, jumped in and cornered the market before the smaller packers could get in.

"It is argued that a 'sales floor' would establish a price and that the local crop could all be gobbled up by two or three big companies.

TWO DATES SALESMEN REMEMBER

The Tobacco Salesmen's meeting, Friday evening, January 5, promises to be unusually interesting. Nor will the salesmen's annual theatre party Saturday night afford anything less than a glorious time. Consequently, the two dates, being remembered, are "reserved" most zealously by those entitled to participate. Admonitions "not to forget" are quite unnecessary. Yet, to excite the envy of outsiders perhaps, the favored ones continue to remind each other.

CHAMPION FAT MAN

"Baby Jim" Simons, a Circus Freak, Weighing 800 Pounds, Dies Suddenly in Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Dec. 28.—"Baby Jim" Simons, colored, said to be the heaviest man in the world, died here today. He weighed 800 pounds and for years had been one of the sights of circus side shows. He was 37 years old and is survived by a widow and two small children.

The body will be taken to the former home of Simons in Texas. For its transportation it was necessary to charter a freight car.

A HELPFUL STAR

Anna Luther, the popular Triangle and Fox star, is making a trip from coast to coast to solicit funds for the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." Miss Luther, who has just finished her new picture, "Who's To Blame?" suggested to Bert Ennis and A. B. Dick, the men handling the fund, that she might be of some value to the fund during her travels. They outlined a plan whereby she will appear at hundreds of picture houses along the line, where she will address the movie fans and solicit contributions to the fund.

PROHIBITION CONTEST

Which State Will Be the First to Ratify the Dry Amendment—A Race in Prospect.

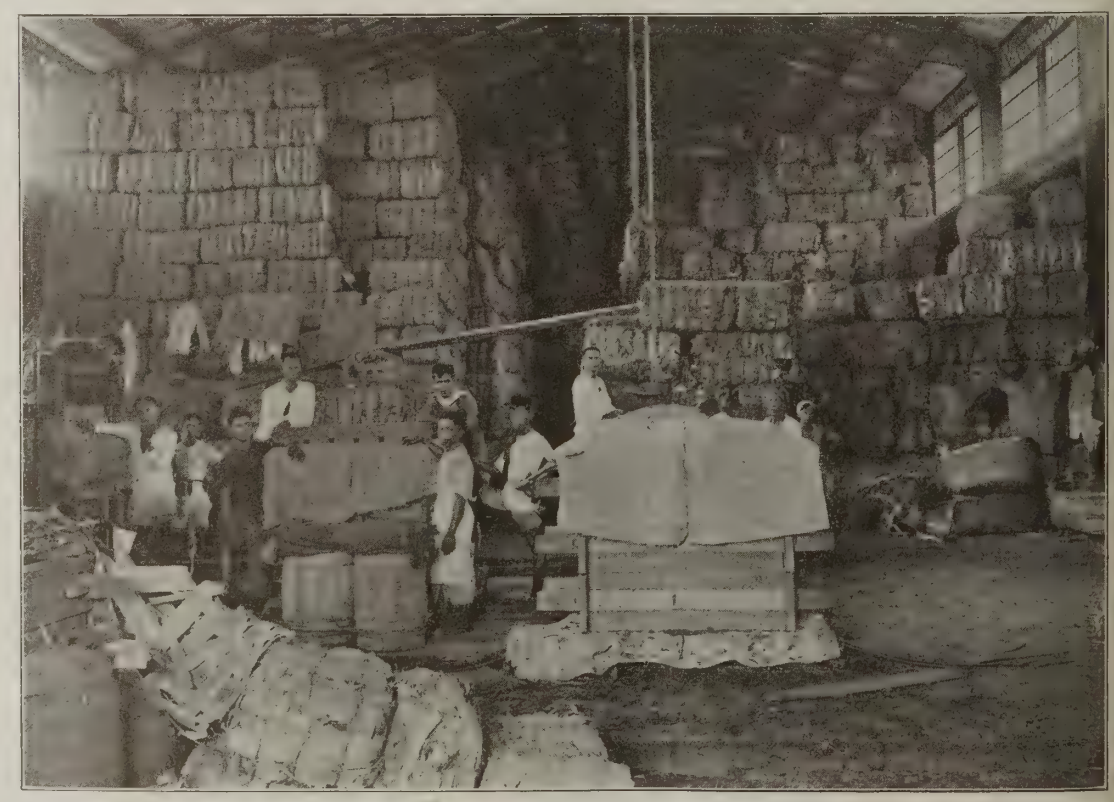
CHICAGO, January 1.—This month starts the race to see which state will be the first to ratify the nation-wide prohibition amendment. The contest seems to lie between Kentucky, Virginia, Maryland, Mississippi and South Carlolina, with a possibility that Kansas may edge into the running by means of a special session.

Kansas, however, is already dry, and leaders of the prohibition movement would like that state to give Kentucky a chance to act first.

Twelve states in all will have legislative sessions of 1918, most of them opening next week. Seven of the twelve are wet states, and of these the drys see their best chances to make gains in Maryland and Kentucky, two states with supposedly dry legislatures.

New Jersey, one of the wettest of the wet states, has elected a legislature pledged to enact a local option law and there is a possibility that this state, too, may vote to ratify.

Twenty-seven states are already dry, and these are expected to ratify without troubles by 1919. The drys will have to gain only nine other states to pass the amendment.



To plan the Illinois campaign for this year's legislative election the state board of directors of the Anti-Saloon League will meet here Thursday. They hope to capture between twenty-five and thirty-five new seats. Fifty-four of the 102 counties in Illinois are entirely dry. Only one county is entirely wet.

UNEXPECTEDLY LARGE SALES IN LYNCHBURG

LYNCHBURG, Va., December 26.—Receipts of tobacco here during the past week aggregated 748,600 pounds, the offerings being much heavier than was anticipated by the trade. Many lots of air-cured grades sold up to $35 and $40, and smokes grades were never known to be as high as when the market closed for the holidays.

Sales will be resumed January 2, and if a warm rain prevails within the holidays the reopening will see very heavy breaks, as the farmers now are very anxious to sell.

The sales thus far of the 1917 crop have aggregated 4,724,900 pounds, the market being 1,953,000 pounds off when compared with last year, a condition due entirely to weather, in which the tobacco could not be prepared for the breaks.

Using the Cash Register to Ring in the New Year—Camouflage in the Preface—Dick Bachia's Greeting—From Collars to Cigars—Uncertainty Concerning Cabarets—The Annals of Albany—A Possible Move of G. W. Van Slyke & Horton—A Light Joke—The Peregrinations of the "James Boys"—Up-State Doings Detailed

December 31, 1917.

Here's just how it happened: (Though if Frank had-a-had his own way, he'd a gone to Niagara Falls; then it couldn't have happened a-tall.) But, you see, Marie had the alimony from her adventure in Chapter One. So she cashed the check from Greene—who they thought was Browne, when they got the colors mixed—and both Marie an' Frankie dear went to Paris on the last boat.

There they went broke, of course, so what to do, what to do? Ah, they opened an American Bar!

But Business? There wasn't any, quite naturally. So Frank, the dear, who had a new idea every minute, evolved a brand new scheme!

What was it? Don't you know? Simple! Merely a murder, rehearsed for rhythm, right before the elegant ginger beer pop bottles!

Frank dear an' Marie an' Betty an' Charlie (namely, cock-tailer, cash-counter, dolly-dancer, waiter-wiper), considered the plan a brilliant one, and they said so!

Therefore, they tried it! But not before they tried every other little thing. Even to talkin' phonograph French to polite Parisian people!

Though to tell the truth, an' nothing but the truth, Marie, for the life of her couldn't puzzle-map the questions an' answers! And she had the nerve to say they didn't play those records on her victrola!

However, all things come to curtain. This show of Phil Bartholomae's came to a close an' excitin' finish after the title of "Girl o' Mine" was sung to the audience in 21 numbers.

Still, as Frank Fay tried to impress, business, even in Paris, was so absolutely rotten that he got the idea a real red-inky killin' would be th' on'y li'l' diversion to save the stock an' fixtures from the provost marshal, or whatever they call the sheriff Over There.

Some such notion as this has got into the heads of Capitol District dealers right here!

These one-time busy tobacconists appear to believe that just a sprinklin' few of Frank Fay's methods will be necessary to cheer up th' Buffalo on the nickel.

Sure, they expect dull times durin' th' January thaw an' th' February raw, yet they all admit that these here times have simply got all previous records smashed to a Joe Choynski finish.

Tonight's the Night! That is, if the New Year Eve celebrations are permitted. Cafes and restaurants have made elaborate preparations. Tables have been reserved. Two for each person. One to eat on, one to lean on—to laugh, Tom Healey tells us.

Keeler's, Maiden Lane, Albany, has a full cellar of Mister Mumm's. Also abundant supplies of entrees. While the cigar and cigarette humidors are likewise stuffed to the moisteners with brands a la demand.

And the cabaret? Yes, that's all spunked up, ready for the chimes, 1-9-1-8. Such a jack-an'-jill-joy! Such a business!

Then, too, there's the Hampton, Ten Eyck, and every single one of the lesser lights all frilled an' fussed, fixt for those bells an' whistles!

But it dependeth, verily, upon just one thing! Will the police issue the customary all-night licenses?

These new women voters, you know, are bringing tremendous pressure to stop the hull thing! Only two all-P.M.-A. M. permits are in force at present. One for Keeler, one for O'Donnell (on Broadway). Even these may be rescinded. If so, many tears—with fewer cigars an' matches sold!

New Year or no New Year, however, it is understood our friend Keeler may close the cabaret very shortly anyway. Too many of the lively kiddikins are in khaki now, far away from this Broadway Jones stuff. So the hey-johnnies who remain at home will have to endure a quiet snoozer an' smoker in the less turbulent grille, with merely an Indian-Club bottle of Perrier, the champagne of table waters, for their Carrie Nation companion!

"Never before have we had such a satisfactory holiday business as we had this year," remarked Manager C. J. Shaxby, of the J. W. Stevens store, Broadway and State, Albany. "Our cigar trade in fine goods was particularly large, while we also sold quite a few cigarettes, especially Pall Malls in the $4.50 size. Pipes went fairly well, the accessories in the way of pouches and so forth, were not selling as they should. All in all, however, we actually had the largest Xmas sales in our experience of fifty years on the street."

Similar accounts have been rendered by order down town dealers in Albany. At the Dearstyne Brothers retail store, South Pearl and Division streets, eight clerks were on the jump for the last few days of the rush. Soldiers' shipments were in excellent demand at this location. Kits and special packing were sent to camps all over the U. S. A. It was truly more "ammo forward!", as the trenchmen yell when they want more ammunition for the firing line.

"Club trade in holiday cigar packings did not come up to last season's," admitted Steward Stein, of the Adelphi Club, Albany. "And it surely couldn't be blamed entirely upon the war, either, for our organization has only five men in the service. Still, our sales in cigars were smaller than usual during the entire period of gift giving. Over on Chestnut street, at my Amsterdam Restaurant, business is likewise a trifle slow, though the incoming State Legislature, to-morrow, will brighten things up a bit."

New Year and Christmas cards be a-comin'! One, from our old friend W. Draudt, extends to us folk in the Capitol District the Merry-an'-th'-Happy, just as an appreciation of the Cigaret Department of the A. T. Co. Darned ef Draudt's memento didn't scare th' puddin' outa sum of our home townshippers! 'Twas got up so neat an' nice, that a pile of the people 'round here thut 'twere th' annual Lis Pendens, which Squire Gerrit says is extra-legal for a foreclosure of th' mortgage!

Then Louie Killeen sent one, too. Only Louie's was a folder-like, with a basket chuckful of Schenectady evergreens on the outside kiver. Inside, Louie greeted us very kindly New Year, perhaps thinkin' more Bold cigars, when sold, would produce th' prosperity desired by all except kicker-klaude-kitchin.

But Dick Bachia has the right idea! He sends out a great big card embossed like this:

"There are Days for Sending Merchandise,
And Days to send a Bill,
But This One Day, of All the Year,
We send you just Good Will!"

How's that? Could any cigar man think of a better little rhyme than that one? If you think you can, send it in to Dick. He'll be much obliged. And, to show you he's sincere, he'll probably send you a crate or so of R. A. Bachia y Ca cigars, a la green gargoyle of the famous red lion under a kelly palm tree.

Capitol District cigar manufacturers are savin' an' conservin' these days! Even the Habana basque and fibre binding thongs are findin' a place in the office safe right now! Because, the other morning, while siftin' th' ashes from the cinders, a hot coal dropped out of one letter. And it said, plain enuf, "Sumatra, $6.50 the pound; cuttings, 32 cents the same; stems, 7 cents likewise: and we'll buy all your scraps at these prices, even your empty seed cases. Tell us what you've got!" Gee whiz! And it was only a few suns since ye local manufacturers actually pleaded with florists and gardeners to remove the rotten ole stems in the bum big seed cases, just to clear the floor for more active property!

Down there on Arch street, Albany, at the branch factory of the American Cigar Co., about 160 hands are employed on an average. More people would probably be accommodated if the busy shirt and collar shops of the Capitol District would stop that counter bid for help at even better wages. Girls here prefer work in the various annexes of the Troy plants, so the cigar factories are obliged to accept what's left. But the 22,000 women workers of the Collar City will soon be obliged to get other jobs. For, with the retail price of linen collars advancing to 25 and 30 cents each, with thousands of young men now in olive drab collarless shirts, some of these immense white factories will undoubtedly be ready to release the lady help to the waiting cigar shops.

Quite likely this is the reason Albany is soon to see some radical cigar manufacturing changes. In fact, one of these events has already occurred. And that is the sale of the cigar plant of the Payn Tobacco Co., on Broadway, to Friend & Co., New York.

Effective January first, the Payn Anndora factory will reopen under the new management. All the former union workmen of the Payn plant were released for the usual shut-down and inventory previous to the holidays.

But they'll never come back on the old basis. Because, with the coming of the new ownership, the factory will be operated as an open shop. Every one of the 60 odd hands may return if they care to do so at the revised schedule of wages.

Practically all of the original Payn brands will be made in the same way, under the supervision of the old superintendent. Though the reduced wage-lists, and other modern innovations, will likely result in lower selling prices to the trade upon all of the Payn cigars. Some two, three, and four dollars per thousand will be saved to the dealer by this move, so the Anndora and B & M brands will compete on an even basis with similar goods of outside factories.

No change will result to the lower Broadway plant of the Payn Tobacco Co. This factory, devoted solely to the manufactured tobacco products of the progressive concern, will continue to make union made tobaccos.

In the near future, however, it will probably become necessary to make the McEwan long cut into a larger ten-cent package. Likely the B & M, Spanish, Strawberry, Straight Tip, All Nations, and other long and fine cuts will also be altered, as the present six-cent price is not particularly popular for these goods.

Are they going to build a church? Or is the big circus lot up there in Albany at Clinton avenue and Judson street to be a site for a Billy Sunday tabernacle?

Churches are more familiar to the people of Clinton avenue than factories. And the large lot of 150 by 200 approximate frontage feet has been used for every local purpose except manufacturing.

"What They Had to Say," in Chicago

Looking Both Ways at the Cigar Trade

CHICAGO, December 29.—Barney Barron, of Barron Bros., manufacturers: "We had a very good year and hope to see things improve during 1918."

Walter Bloch: "Have just finished my first year in business and can only say my friends have treated me royally. The coming year looks very good to me."

John Morrison, manager of Ryan & Raphael Cigar Co., being out of town, no report could be obtained from those in charge. However, it is well known that Lucius sales were far ahead of last year, and the increase of this brand was very healthy, from all reports.

Bert Christian, manager of the cigar department of Steele-Wedeles Co., says they will take on no new lines during the coming year, as they have their hands full. The business done was very satisfactory and the year showed a big increase. Five new country and three new city salesmen will be added to the cigar department, January 1, making a force of twenty strictly cigar salesmen selling the brands of this progressive jobbing house.

Sam Paley, of the Congress Cigar Co., reports an increase over last year amounting to 40 per cent. They are still at work trying to reduce the big pile of orders still on file for La Palina cigars. There will be no shutdown of this factory, which, by the way, is the largest in Chicago. A new floor of 10,000 square feet will be in operation early in January.

Henry Hamann, general manager of the house of Albert Breitung, wore his usual happy smile. Breitung's twelve stores did a tremendous business, and the year was way ahead of 1916. They received one Christmas order for 1,100 cans of eight-ounce tobacco.

Louis Neuman, head of E. Hoffman & Co., jobbers, said business showed a big increase. "The raise in prices did not affect their jobbing trade."

Ernest McKenzie, head of El Roi Tan sales force: "How we did it I don't know, but we went away ahead of last year. All the boys showed a big increase in their respective territories. You can find El Roi Tans on sale in every store now. Our distribution is 100 per cent."

Al Belmont, of McNeil-Higgins & Co.: "Have no fault to find. Our cigar department has shown a rapid growth this year and it is away ahead of last year in sales. We will push the imported Eden and Henry the Fourth Havana during 1918."

Reid, Murdoch & Co., who are the distributers of El Roi Tan, did a land office business all year, and their cigar department shows a big gain.

Harry Cohn, of the San Alto Cigar Co., which has one of Chicago's largest factories, could not tell how big the increase was, as he is too busy taking stock, but the firm has gained considerably during the past year.

Elliott G. Ahearn, one of the department managers of J. & B. Moos, is one of the happiest men in town. The cigarette and tobacco end, of which he is the manager, was the biggest in the history of the house. The cigar department showed the biggest increase during the year since 1907.

Max Falk, manager of the main store of Albert Breitung: "We were as busy as bees, and it has not let up yet. It has been going right along since Christmas and many people are sending cigars as New Year's gifts."

Sig. Mayer, of Lozano fame: "I have just returned from my yearly visit to the factory and am very busy, but I will say the year was highly satisfactory."

Otto Schaeffer, general manager of the Hotel La Salle's big cigar department, when called on was all smiles. Otto said the year was the biggest the cigar department ever had.

George Parker, president of Thorwart & Roehling, said it was a good year. Their cigar business showed an increase, but the big increase came from cigarettes, which had a most wonderful sale with his house during the entire year. George says next year will take care of itself.

John Anderson, manager of the large imported cigar and liquor house, says: "They had a good year." How big the increase is he does not know until the books are closed.

Frank Braynard, manager of G. W. Faber, Inc., jobbers, said that Muriels showed 100 per cent increase on this market this year. Also he said that Flor de Cuba cigars show a steady gain. A big increase on imported brands carried by this well known house is also reported.

Erner Jacobson, manager of the cigar department of Chapin & Gore, was feeling happy when called on. General Shields, their leading brand, is a big seller here. Sales of imported brands went away ahead of 1916.

Marian F. Miles, of Leopold & Mergentheim: "Our business this year was almost double that of last year. Imported cigars showed a big gain with us. Our leading brands, Antonio and Cleopatra, La Tremona, and Romeo Garcia have a big call. While we do a large business on high-priced sizes, we note an increasing call on $8 and $9 sizes. No new brands will be added to our lines for the present."

Fred Oakes, representing the E. H. Gato Cigar Co.: "Now if the factory could have filled my orders, it would have been a corking year. As it was, old 1917 was the best year I ever had, and next year looks very promising indeed."

Charles Daly, manager of Wengler & Mandell's retail business: "We got all we could take care of; all year we have been kept on the go, and it keeps right up."

George Stocking, representing Marcelino Perez & Co.: "Covering a large part of the U. S. A. and coming in contact with a lot of jobbers and large retailers, I find the general opinion is that business will be O. K. next year. All my accounts have shown a big increase during the past year and I have several good irons in the fire for 1918."

Sol. M. Bernstein, of the jobbing and retail firm of Bernstein & Schey: "Our retail business showed an increase of over 40 per cent this year. The jobbing end of the game being new with us, as we have only been in it about eight months, it looks very encouraging. We have accounts in all parts of the city. Credits will be a hard proposition next year, and I look for a lot of small dealers to be put on a cash basis."

Phil Garber, the live-wire retailer at 329 East 51st street: "Had a good year; my leading sellers—Corina and Perfecto Garcia—led all others. No kick from me about business."

Charles Winkelman, of the Many Blanc Co.: "How we did it I don't know, but Garcia Grande cigars surely did come to the front during the past year. We have almost a 90 per cent distribution in the city, and the sale keeps increasing all the time."

Robert J. Lytle, the stogie king: "I sure did unload a lot of stogies and could have sold just twice as many, but was up against it, as my people could not take care of the orders I sen them."

Ben Smith, of the sales force of Ruhstrat Cowley Co.: "Did the best I could under th existing conditions. At no time during th past six months did we have enough Charle Denbys on hand to supply the trade."

M. B. Seigel: "While the raise in retai prices upset things for the time being, it soo righted itself, and I am glad to say that I an well satisfied with my year's business."

Harry Totten, of "It's a Bear Stogie" fame "Had to take a rest the past few months, a my factories were oversold."

Nate Rosenheim, of San Martin & Leon "Can't kick at results for the past year. I wil be there stronger than ever next year."

Frank Cohn, of the sales force of Nathai Fox Co.: "The increase in prices of my lead ing brands did not seem to hurt. Could no supply my trade with enough Admiration an Lazona cigars."

Ramon Dobler, representing Park & Til ford: "Just say for me that I wish everybod a happy and prosperous New Year. While tackled a lot of new territory this year in con nection with my regular trade, I note a bi improvement in the imported cigar lin throughout the Middle West. The futur looks all right to me."

Iwan Ries, of Iwan Ries & Co., jobbers "While still young in the business, having onl started a few months ago, we find ourselve getting stronger all the time. Did a very fin business during the holiday week on high priced pipes and expensive humidors."

Peter J. Bauer, city salesman for Alfons Rios & Co., manufacturers: "The trade treate me great, and I have no kicks to find. Sol a lot of 10 in a box."

Sam Bloom, West Side jobber: "My busi ness showed a big increase, due perhaps t the fact that I went after the cigar busines stronger during the past year."

Ernest Jacoby, Chicago representative o Heineman Bros., Baltimore: "Simply coul not get enough cigars from my factory t supply my jobbers. The raising of prices o our brands has not hurt the sale at all."

Al Harmon, president of the Harmon Ciga Co.: "This being our first year in business, w can't compare it with the past. However, w got our share of the Christmas trade and ar well satisfied. All our three stores are doing a good business."

L. C. Widduck, 118 North La Salle street "Now, when it comes to doing a real business we are right there. Our only trouble was tha we could not get enough '40's to supply th demand. Had a good year, and prospects fo next year look bright."

Frank Kaiser, manager of J. H. Weiss & Co., which has two retail stores in the Webster Building: "Business for the year was fairly good. Holiday business was fine, clear Havana cigars leading. We sent a lot of cigarettes to the different camps."

Harry G. Pethick, 902 Heyworth Building "The Christmas business came late, but I got mine. Finished up the year very good, and find my box trade increasing all the time."

Harvey Vreeland, the general representative of Benson & Hedges: "Am feeling like a schoolboy. Business was good, and you can find Benson & Hedges cigarettes in more fine stores than ever before."

Paul Alberty, who represented the Hansel and Gretel factory: "Am sorry to leave the cigar game, and you can say for me that the dealers of Chicago are all wool and a yard wide. Will drop in to see them on my travels in the future. Happy New Year to them all."

Charlie Zellers, representative of Phillip Morris & Co.: "The little brown box had a very good year. The Christmas package went very well."

"Looper" Clark, of the Best & Russell Co.: "I sold my allotment before I got started uring December. Hope my firm will be able) fill my orders in full the coming year."

Henry Kantor, chairman of the Chicago igar Dealers' Association: "We have just :arted the ball a-rolling. With a big mem-ership next year, the retailers should put ings in shape so that they will be able to ake a living profit. It can be done if they et together and agree on a scale of prices."

E. G. Bennett, the box trade king, at 93 Metropolitan Block: "My business was a lit-.e ahead of last year. Christmas business ras about the same. Find the trade running) higher priced goods."

Henry Ackerburg, at 187 West Madison treet: "The trade that I have 'catered to' or a great many years always remembers where to buy Christmas cigars, and I am well leased with what I did during Christmas reek. My retail business for the year was head of former years."

Wm. Getzelman, manager of the Hotel herman cigar store: "Business was far head of last year and the holiday business vas a corker. Never had so many large rders for the holidays as we got this year. Wm. White, Guy Reed and myself never had minute to ourselves."

Al. Lovedale, manager of the retail busi-ess of George Knight: "Yes, we did more han our usual holiday business, and for the ear—well, 1917 was ahead of 1916."

Emil Eger, retailer: "I did not make much oise, but you ought to have seen the big unch of orders we shipped out. Believe me, t was some work and took up a lot of our ime. I was more than pleased with the vol-me of business we did this year."

Harry L. Harris, of Harris-Schwarz & Co.: 'You will see a lot of new dealers handling Romeo Garcias next year; 1917 was very kind to me. I look for all brands to take a big jump in price next year, and expect to see a lot of small dealers and factories go out of business."

C. A. Paulson, manager of the retail stores of Best & Russell Co.: "Our business has been good all the year. It shows a big increase over last year. Christmas business in all the stores was very good."

John Christian, of the sales force of Steele-Wedeles Co.: "Just wish everybody the compliments of the season for me. My friends handed me a fine business all during the year."

Harry Penny, manager for Shoemaker & Co.: "If you don't believe me, ask Mac. The rush had us both almost swamped, and we had to call on Fred Oakes to help us out."

Wm. Rosenfield, representing the Charles the Great factory: "Business all over my territory the past year was good. I look for 1918 to be a still bigger year for clear Havana cigars."

Leo Stein, of the J. & B. Moos sales force: "Me for a little rest. Letting conditions worry me is a thing of the past. I get my share, no matter how things may be."

Seth Laycock, representing the J. C. Neuman Co., of Cleveland: "Finished up well and, all in all, the year came out better than I expected."

Ben Rothchild, of the leaf tobacco house of Rothchild Sons & Co.: "Even though prices have been very high, we sold a large amount of leaf this year. Next year I look for prices to be still higher."

Wm. Wolfson, of the Pall Mall sales force: "With me it was fine and dandy. We sold on this market hundreds of our Christmas packings containing 100-200 and larger quantities. Pall Malls showed a big increase."

Harry Gray, manager of the Borland Building cigar store: "The sales of this store have shown a big increase the last few months. Say, the holiday rush was a pippin. We had our hands full every minute."

Geo. Knight, Jr., of the jobbing house of George C. Knight: "Did not have enough goods to supply my customers; in fact we have been short of cigars for several months."

John King, who represents the Havana-American Co. in the Middle West, had a big year. J. C. K. says his increase this year over last was $150,000.

John J. Dolan, the owner of the Dolan Segar Shop, found the holiday trade running to high-priced goods. The year as a whole, conditions considered, was satisfactory.

T. W. Clayton, head of the Clayton Cigar Co. chain, said they got their share. Orders run to small boxes, and, while sales were many, the size of orders was small. No large packages of smoking tobacco or cigarettes sold. Business for the year was better than in 1916.

C. E. Case, of the Arkin-Brill Co., local manufacturers, said they managed to clean up all orders in time for the Christmas trade, and that the year was far ahead of the past one with his house.

Axel Thorsen, of the firm of Anderson Thorsen & Co., importers and cigar dealers, said his firm had an excellent business on fine imported packings they had in stock. The year's business of this house was large, their Jefferson and Berhing clear Havana lines coming to the front fast.

Lou Heisler, of Lilienfield Bros., said it was the biggest year they ever had. La Azora, Corina and El Hizo Prodigo brands had a big call; the first two brands being found on sale in every first class cigar store. Freight deliveries caused them to lose several fine orders.

Walter Tobin found things far ahead of last year. Walter caters to the very classiest trade in the city, and his stand at Stanton & Co.'s store was a busy spot during the holiday rush.

Aaron Straus, head of Celestino Vega & Co., found business for the year bigger than in 1916. The finer sizes of La Vengas showed a big increase. H. L. H.

Somewhere Between Hope and Despair

Adjusting Trade to Changed Conditions in San Francisco—Most Dealers Admit That They Had a Pretty Good Year—A Tobacco Farm Near Woodland—Burls of the Wild Lilac Make Excellent Pipes—Soldiers and Sailors Smoked Tom Moores—Silver Cases for Bull Durham Tobacco.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 26.—Today is truly "the day after" in the tobacco business of San Francisco. Manufacturer, wholesaler, jobber and dealer alike have had a strenuous year, filled with large sales, more or less profit, high hopes and some fears. Now that each has satisfied his customers to the best of his ability, it is time for retrospection. The factories are taking stock of their tobacco, of their sales and of their future. The wholesaler is similarly engaged, the while wondering what the manufacturers are going to do in regard to future prices. The retailer has many of the same thoughts mixed in with doubts about the consumer. The retailer is closer to the man who smokes. Yet he admits that he cannot know what will happen if prices are advanced further. The jobbers who stand between the producer and the consumer are doubtful about both ends of the string. Will the manufacturer raise his prices further when he has studied the results of last year's business in connection with the price of raw tobacco? Will the consumer pay such an advance? Each fraction of the trade admits that he has had a prosperous year as a whole, a year which promised at one time to be a breaker of all records. The jobbers have sold about all the cigars they could get, and the retailers as a whole say that their Christmas business has exceeded expectations. This, of course, was largely due to the immense amount of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco which was sent to the boys at the front from their friends and relatives at home. But the future is hidden behind a cloud which no local man is bold enough to attempt to say that he can penetrate.

The various chain stores report that their Christmas business was entirely satisfactory to them. They are all optimistic about the future.

Ehrman Bros. & Co. report that they are winding up one of the most successful years since they have been in business. This is due, at least in part, to the fact that they are fortunate in having several of the most popular brands of cigars on the market.

H. L. Judell & Co. report that the year has been very kind to them. Their only regret is that they could not get more stock, as in many cases they had to trim large orders down to 1,000 and in some cases even to 500 cigars.

Harry Green, one of the heaviest operators in Manila cigars and tobacco, as well as many other kinds, has just bought an immense humidor from H. L. Judell & Co., in which to keep the Manila cigars which he imports. This humidor was used by the Judell company at its exhibit in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915.

The army recruits at Fort McDowell, Angel Island, and the naval recruits on Goat Island were given a treat on Christmas Day by the Government. After a big turkey dinner each recruit was supplied with a Tom Moore cigar, and the air around the islands was blue with the aromatic smoke immediately after dinner.

W. W. Richards, of the General Tobacco Co., selling Tom Keenes and Tom Moores, is spending a few days in the city of his birth. After the first of the year he will visit the southern section of the State in the neighborhood of the Los Angeles territory.

Another Christmas visitor was E. B. Richards, who came with his wife from Spokane, Wash., to attend the family reunion. Mr. Richards is the Inland Empire representative for M. Melachrino & Co.

Many of the cigar men remembered the poor on Christmas Day, but perhaps the most practical gift was that given by Mose Gunst, the veteran cigar man. Mr. Gunst sent out twenty sacks of potatoes to as many families who were in need. For many years Mr. Gunst has been In the habit of remembering the poor in some way on Christmas Day.

Few of the large tobacco men of San Francisco make it a practice to give bonuses to their employees, but many of them make substantial gifts to those who have been faithful during the year. This year it is said that most of these gifts took the form of cash, because as one of the donors said, "The boys all appreciate cash." None of these houses would consent to allow a mention of their names.

Fifty acres of land near Woodland, Cal., is to be planted with tobacco next season. J. A. Coombs and Gus Gassoumis, of Oakland, tobacco experts, will have charge of the experiment.

A local jeweler had some sterling silver cases for Bull Durham tobacco on sale just before Christmas. These cases, initialed, he says, made a hit with his customers.

Milton Esberg, head of the General Cigar Co. in the West, arrived in San Francisco in time to eat his Turkey dinner here.

Isador Mendelson, representative of the Manhattan Briar Pipe Co., will remain in San

Urge a Public Labor Exchange System

PHILADELPHIA, December 28.—A comprehensive system of public labor exchanges, centering in the federal government, as a pressing war necessity, was urged at the afternoon session today of the American Association for Labor Legislation, meeting jointly with the American Economic Association and the American Farm Management Association at the University of Pennsylvania Amphitheater.

Effective mobilization of the labor supply to meet war's demands upon factory and farm was urged by Henry R. Seager, Secretary of the United States Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board, Professor M. B. Hammond of Ohio State University, and E. V. Wilcox of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"Quite as important as mobilizing the actual army is mobilizing the indutsrial army needed for the production of the food, munitions, aeroplanes, and ships, we must have to win the war," declared Professor Seager. "For the one we have resorted to the draft; for the other we must rely upon the appeal of wages fairly adjusted to higher living costs, of decent and safe working conditions, and of patriotism. To these the hundreds of thousands of workers needed will respond, provided machinery is created to connect them with the war industries. This calls for an efficient coordination of federal, state, and municipal public employment bureaus."

Essential features of such a plan, according to Professor Seager, are "the expansion of the Federal employment service under a director so appointed as to be the official employment agent of our war industries; hearty co-operation on the part of the State and municipal employment bureaus, with the Federal system unified and strengthened by a Federal grant in aid of these bureaus; and the establishment of interstate clearing houses, to draw together wherever needed all of the labor resources of the country.

"Through such a system, and only through such a system," he said, "can it be determined whether we have plenty of workers for the war industries, as is claimed by labor leaders, or whether wholesale dilution of labor through the employment of unskilled men or women and of children, in place of skilled craftsmen, as claimed by some employers, will be necessary."

How England grappled with the problem of the distribution of labor when war broke out and the "chief means by which this problem has found a solution," was discussed by Professor Hammond. "When the war is over and a review of the means by which victory was secured is possible," he said in his address on lessons from English war experience in the employment of labor, "I venture to say that there is no piece of pre-war administrative machinery for which Great Britain will be more grateful than for her system of labor exchanges."

Although fortified with an efficient employment service system at the outset, England was nevertheless confronted on every hand with problems of labor mobilization similar to those now disturbing the United States, according to Professor Hammond, including women's advent into "men's occupations," the entrance of skilled workmen into the fighting forces—and the necessity of withdrawing them later to assist in the output of munitions—the maintenance of protective standards in the interest both of human conservation and of maximum and sustained output, trade agreements between the Government and the labor unions, and the encouragement of voluntary service on the part of the industrial army rather than the adoption of measures of compulsion.

"It is obvious," concluded Professor Hammond, in summarizing England's war emergency measures for industrial strength, "that everything which tends to conserve our industrial effiicency is as important as a means to the end—the winning of the war—as that which promotes military efficiency."

Further appeal was made for a nation-wide employment service in the discussion by Charles B. Barnes, Director of the New York State Bureau of Employment; Rex E. Willard, of the United States Department of Agriculture; Morris L. Ernst, Manager of the New York State Clearing House for Employment Offices, and Frank App, of the New Jersey Agricultural College.

Allotments May Be Delivered in Great Britain Up to May 31, 1918—Chief Difficulty Now Is to Secure Cargo Space—Rain in Vuelta Abajo Improves Crop Prospects—Indications Good for Remedios—Intimations Concerning Partido—Tobacco Receipts, Etc.

HAVANA, December 28.—In a letter from London, a prominent cigar manufacturer is informed that the British Government has placed no restrictions upon the importation of cigars after January 1, and that the cigars under the allotment of one-half of the imports of the year 1915 must be delivered in the United Kingdom on or before May 31, 1918. This gives Havana manufacturers a chance to execute all pending orders in good time, if it is practicable to secure cargo space from New York to London or Liverpool. This probably will be the principal difficulty, as it is intimated that some of the November shipments of cigars still are held back in New York because of a scarcity of cargo space. However, this deficiency of shipping facilities may be overcome ere long.

As British high authorities have declared that tobacco in its different manufactured forms is an absolute necessity for army and navy, it stands to reason that the government will find the means of transportation.

Of leaf tobacco on the Havana market the total sales during the past two weeks were 17,648 bales, divided into: 8,433 Vuelta Abajo and Semi-Vuelta, 1,363 of Partido and 7,852 bales of Remedios. Buyers were: Americans, 10,420, exporters to Great Britain 498, shippers to South America, 4,930, and local manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes 1,800 bales.

The leaf market during the past week has been more quiet, which falling off was not unusual at this season of the year. Nevertheless, several rather large transactions are reported. The local buyer for the French Regie has accumulated 2,013 bales or Vuelta Abajo, which will be forwarded on the French steamer Venezuela.

Crop prospects are described as being good for Remedios provided there is rainfall in the second half of January, and perhaps another one in February. As it has rained also in the lowland districts of the Vuelta Abajo, the outlook there also has improved. Intimations that the Partido crop in general might not be so satisfactory, as predicted in the beginning, may be taken with a grain of salt because there is so much of this year's crop unsold in dealers' hands that report might be made with the object to create later a better demand for this class of leaf.

RECEIPTS OF LEAF TOBACCO FROM THE COUNTRY

For two weeks from December 7 to December 20, 1917:

	Bales.
Vuelta Abajo	4,938
Semi-Vuelta	545
Partido	26,760
Remedios	3,815
Oriente	.....
Total	36,058

Since January 1, 1917:

	Bales.
Vuelta Abajo	193,815
Semi-Vuelta	13,393
Partido	69,519
Remedios	145,750
Oriente	284

The heavy receipts of Partido resulted from previous arrivals, by carts and electric conveyances, not reported before.

Exports of cigars, per steamer Morro Castle totaled 447 cases, containing 2,587,310 cigars which were consigned to the following countries, viz: To Great Britain, 1,874,335; United States, 610,975; to Australia, 55,000; to Canada 17,500; to British Africa, 14,500; to Buenos Aires, 10,000, and to Brazil, 5,000 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco from Havana during the week ending December 15, 1917, totaled 8,354 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To all ports of the United States, 5,673; to Canada, 263; to the Argentine Republic, 2,318, and to Uruguay, 100 bales.

Among the leaf buyers who arrived this week was Facundo Arguelles, of Arguelles, Lopez & Bro.

Romeo y Julieta is working with undiminished forces, as the factory is well supplied with orders. Don Pepin Rodriguez sailed from Spain on the 20th inst., on Spanish steamer Alfonso XIII, and should arrive here on January 2.

Partagas has not discharged any cigarmakers as there are plenty of orders to be filled yet. The outlook for the factory is likewise perfectly satisfactory.

Punch is working as steadily as heretofore with all hands, and Don Manuel Lopez feels more hopeful for the future.

Por Larranaga is crowded with orders for Great Britain, as well as for various other countries, which were delayed because of the rush in despatching the British orders.

Hoyo de Monterrey naturally feels the slacking in the demand from the States at this period of the year, but has a fair demand from other quarters of the world.

Calixto Lopez & Co. are working upon good orders from South America, South Africa and Australia.

La Corona is doing notably well, Ramon Allones cannot complain, neither do Flor de Tomas Gutierrez, or C. E. Beck & Co. ROSAM.

The Pequot Brings Manila Cigars to America

In 1817 the American ship Pequot sailed from the Philippine Islands with the first Manila cigars for the United States, arriving at Salem, Mass., in July, 1818. The record of the Pequot's adventures together with the description of her cargo is contained in an old letter written by a Salem merchant, Saltonstall. Of the Manila cigars he wrote:—

> "Manilas are of a style approved by Spaniards who excel in knowledge of cigars. They burn handsomely and have a flavor very agreeable. A man may smoke many during a day and not be surfeited or made ill."

The character of Manila tobacco has not changed since then. The quality of cigars has improved and the quantity imported into the United States is counted in the hundred millions.

TAKING STOCK

The busiest business man takes stock of his business at least once a year. As the end of the year approaches the thought of all turns to the accomplishments of the year. What has been done? And what is it worth?

Men are prone in youth to let the future look out for itself, and turn their back to the past, living only in the joyous present. This is natural, and it is to be expected of young folk—for the present to them is the all-important time: it is the only time. The past is gone. We know naught of the future, is their cry.

Twelve months makes a change in the life of every man—physically, mentally and financially. There is always a procession or a retrogression for him during so long a period; and it is the man who proceeds that will be the one to reach the farthest goal set for him by his enthusiasm and by his hope and visioning.

It behooves even the young man to sit calmly for an hour and take stock of himself. Has he entered on the pages of Life's ledger the items that, when cast up, will prove a balance on the asset or on the liability side?

If he has increased in the wisdom that makes for man's best learning and has drank deep from the spring of knowledge, drank draughts that have more than moistened his lips, then he has learned that all is not worth cherishing or even attaining to what seems to be the brightest and most important at first flush.

He has learned that down in the heart, hidden from view, is a mentor who has taught him that right is right and wrong is wrong despite the coverings and the shammings of hypocrisy and glitter.

Take stock of yourself and see that you have advanced in the journey that is marked out for you; that you have reached upward and are striving onward, and the knowledge will be bracing and inspiriting.

The man who honestly communes with himself is never fooled in his final judgment of himself.—Tampa Tribune.

REDUCING POPULARITY TO ZERO.

The other day when it was thirteen below zero two cigar salesmen pulled up before one of those long glass tubes carrying a cargo of red liquid and squinted at the figures.

"Thirteen below, Abe," came from Max's mouth in a cloud of steam. "Phew! Ever see anything like it?"

"Like it," grinned Abe, "I'm so familiar with that like you are with the bull you hand out to your customers. I should never see anything colder than that in my life I should always think it's Fourth of July."

"Maybe you were by Succutash & Bullmutter last night, Abe, and you feel like a comedian."

Abe started away without making any reply, but Max grabbed him by the sleeve.

"Abe," he said, "you talk about the weather like you been to Alaska, and I know if you ever left the east side you'd starve to death. Whadaya mean by thirteen degrees is like summer to you?"

"Max," Abe grinned, "you're a good friend of mine, you put me into this business and made me acquainted with the best part of the Bible, what says, 'Earn your broad and Gefilter fish by the sweat of your brow.' So on good friends I don't pile my troubles. But, Max, if I ever go home and find my wife any warmer than thirteen degrees below zero I'll thinking I am roasting to death."

Grathwol Retires

On January 1 James J. Grathwol is to sever his connection with the Best & Russel branch here, of which he has been manager since its taking over by that concern of the business of the Grathwol Cigar Co. Mr. Grathwol at the same time retires from the cigar field, in which he has been a prominent figure for many years, and will henceforth spend his time on his farm, "Shore Acres," at Lake Minnetonka, where for some time he has been breeding Jersey cattle. Mr. Grathwol has been in the jobbing field for fifteen years, first with the Watt Cigar Co., and later, upon Mr. Watt's death, becoming head of that concern, the name of which still later was changed to the Grathwol Cigar Co. Mr. Grathwol has many warm friends throughout the northwest. Joseph E. Whitwell, son of J. P. Whitwell, St. Paul jobber, who has been in charge of the B. & R. stores in St. Paul, is said to be slated for the position vacated by Mr. Grathwol —Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

Good Judgment Dictated 6c on Tom Keene

It is a fact that cigar makers' wages are now the highest ever paid in the industry, enabling them to meet the high cost of living.

. . . . . .

It is a fact that tobacco, boxes, labels, freights, etc., have all advanced so that they have materially increased cigar costs.

It is a fact that Uncle Sam has taxed tobacco $60,000,000. for war purposes in addition to the revenue taxes which still remain in force, and we all contribute our share—cheerfully.

It is a fact that these advances in the cost of producing the Tom Keene Cigar must be met to maintain quality.

Branded—to protect you.

Dependable Cigars

— — what should they cost?

Last year your lucky brothers enjoyed over 100,000,000 OWL and WHITE OWL Cigars. They paid 5c for OWL, Londres shape and for the Invincible WHITE OWL 6c.

To get really dependable cigars these experienced smokers gladly pay, today, 6c for the OWL. For WHITE OWL—7c. Aware as they are, of 1918 costs in cigar making they know that we could not continue to uphold OWL and WHITE OWL dependability and charge less.

For we constantly maintain for these two cigars a great store of aging leaf. And never does a bit of this leaf go into OWL and WHITE OWL until experts in curing say, "Now this lot has reached the very peak of mellow fragrance."

Such curing takes, on the average, 18 months. And it requires, friends, an investment of never less than $1,000,000 in idle leaf. And at some seasons almost $2,000,000.

UP STATE ADVICES

But it does look now as though G. W. Van Slyke & Horton mean business, not religion, up there near West Albany. With New York Central freight and transit terminals within a stone's throw, it does seem to be an ideal location for a great cigar plant.

Some time ago the real estate purchase was reported, though the firm would neither confirm nor deny the rumor about the factory site. However, it is known that both Will Van Slyke and Tom Horton, who operate the Kingston plant with a capacity crew of 500 hands, would very much like to return to their native home in Albany, 60-odd miles north of the present Ulster County shop.

Building costs are so enormous at the present time, though, that it is extremely doubtful if the firm will construct another factory just now. Still, the Peter Schuyler brand has completely swamped the output of the Kingston facilities. And, with the possible opportunity of securing girls from the collar shops in Troy, a chance which may not occur again in years, this would be the psychological moment for the Van S & H folk to start something.

When the Peter Schuyler factory was located in Albany, some years ago, at the office building now occupied at 471 Broadway, the business was considerably smaller. Increasing demands required more space, so the manufacturing establishment was moved to the old American Cigar building at Grand and Arch streets.

Labor troubles sometime later caused removal to Kingston, and the firm has there built up an imposing plant. Likely, however, the Kingston shops will be continued anyway, and the prospective Albany factory will be a much needed reserve.

Since Al Fonda put on his pigskin puttees, marching away to join the Aviation Corps of the Army, the Van Slyke & Horton retail store on Broadway, Albany, has been turned over to Fred McCredie.

Fred used to be with the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., up there on Pearl street. Therefore he knows claro from maud, while, if he had to, he might also recite the numerous non compos mentis frontmarks backward, from zenola to aetna!

Another soldier married! It's Lieutenant Bill Van Auken this time. So, you see, he's been promoted twice since he quit the Ten Eyck cigar stand to train for the big battles. In the meantime, his dear old friends of the M. J. Canaday forces are still plugging along, selling the same old segars to the identical people whom Bill used to serve before he got gay an' jined th' armee!

Something has recently happened in the Capitol District which is even funnier than Ralph Herz, his three wives, and his bankruptcy act in the musical comedy stuff of his famed humor!

And that funny thing is this: All of this section of the country is illuminated thru current generated by water power at Spier's Falls, back of Warrensburgh, on the Hudson River.

No coal whatsoever is used, except for the emergency plant of the power company, which runs anyway, rain or shine, coal or coke.

Just the same, the Coal Administrator for this vicinity, who is G. Y. Lansing, has ordered all lights out on the usual Sunday and Thursday nights.

Of course, cigar stores, drug stores, restaurants, hotels, theatres and so on, can burn a few absolutely necessary inside kilowatts. But all electric signs, window lights of unopened stores, and the like, must be doused.

All right. 'Tis done! But now the kind-hearted Administrator wants more lights out! And he says he'll publish a list of the unpatriotic dealers and others who don't comply.

Well, he admits the ruling cannot be enforced here under the prevailing conditions. Yet he desires the glims blinked just because it doesn't look nice to have them going when other surrounding towns are compelled to put them out!

Cigar retailers have complied with the r quest to the best of their ability, notwithstan ing several merchants have their outside sig connected to their window circuits.

But the fact of the matter is that ev Charlie Chappedhand and his friend Sli Slushbuckle would hardly throw a pie into o another's face only for the effect of the laughte

Times like these are entirely too serious f Lightless Nights where business is sacrifice and coal isn't!

"Headquarters of the Republican County O ganization will remove from its present loc tion on James street, Albany, to more spacio rooms in the two upper floors of 108 Sta street," communicated Assemblyman Welc one of the political patroons.

This move of the famous James Boys, they are locally known, prepares for two oth plans, also. One, of course, is the desirabili of the new quarters, opposite the temporar City Hall and the offices of the party leader likewise across the street.

Another advantage, which the party prophe have in mind, is the idea of accommodatin some of the additional space to the anticipate influx of the lady voters. They must be r ceived within the organization with prop committee rooms, assembly hall, and so on.

Still one other result of the movement of th James Boys from their former fastness in th heart of the Ozarks, will be to release the ol building to Farnham, cafe-cigar-restaura proprietor.

Farnham now occupies a portion of th original William Barnes' Journal Building But when the Journal Company and the oth tenants vacate about February 1, Jimm Farnham will gradually remodel the quarte of the jobs-for-life-club into a modern hote This he has long contemplated, but several lon leases have prevented.

When ready, however, James will have a eat-an'-sleep shop which Albany can talk abo in its Chamber of Commerce year book! For James, like unto Woodrow Wilson, whom he closely resembles, does nothing carelessly. Jim watches, waits, then does it right!

Removal of the Republican Headquarters also causes the change of address for the Loyal Order of Moose.

This fraternity now occupies the desired floors at 108 State, so they will rip up the carpet for a run around the corner to 14 Washington avenue, opposite the State Capitol.

When this occurs, next month, the Moose will abolish their bar. Though liquids, cigars, or cigarettes will be served to members, as usual, a la buffet in the entire building across the way from Governor Whitman's miniature bungalow.

New members are entering the local Order of the Moose in large numbers. And the class of applicants are composed of some of the city's foremost business and professional men. So it's evident that the Moose will become better and better buyers of high grade cigars as the men get acquainted with the superior location of the Lodge.

"From two to three generations of our boys have been with us since we started our family tree," informed Dan Doyle, superintendent of Shields & Son, Church street tobacco manufacturers, Albany. "So you see, we haven't been troubled by help scarcity quite so much as some of the other local factories. Our Blue Line, Even Up, and Sea Spray long cuts are selling in the same substantial way, notwithstanding the revised five and six cent prices at retail."

With debts of $76,836 the Morris Drub Company, 11 North Pearl street, Albany, closed their doors Christmas Day. They claim assets of $25,362. This is divided into stock at $15,000; fixtures, $7,500; and accounts open for $2,500; which the attorney for the Company believes should pay the 250 odd creditors from 25 to 30 per cent of the total claims.

Several cigar houses are involved for sums more or less small. Accounts may be filed with the Federal Court in Bankruptcy at Utica.

"Transportation difficulties have tied us all up in a ball," howled Cigarette Sales Supervisor Draudt, of the Capitol District A. T. Co. staff. "Maybe the Government control of rails will loosen up some of those 1,500 gross of Lucky Strike cigarettes, somewhere in the United States, for the jobbers Dearstyne. While we're waiting, though, I continue to attend to my pen-and-ink work, even if it's the glad yuletide vacation period."

One of those familiar Spearmint arrows at Broadway and Maiden Lane, Albany, indicates that the Maid-of-the-Mist is a One-Way-Street, only!

And good reason, too. Because two four cylinder words like Fiat-Ford can't pass in the alley unless they appropriate at least an inch of either side of the six-inch sidewalk!

So there you have the idea why Johnson, the tailor, and Johnson, the tobacconist, right opposite, have their trench systems so arranged that the No-Man's-Land, in the so-called street, compels every passing friend and foe to press close agin both show window and entrance door to dugout.

What's the answer? Well, in J. M. Johnson's store, at number 38, some of the allied forces are obliged to enter occasionally, if only to buy a box of Maritana cigars, just to see if they're the same as they used to be, when Maiden Lane was still a two-way street, and cigars sold for prices somewhat under the cost of Chinese brush-tailed gold-fish!

People who drink Vermont Spring water shouldn't subscribe for Italia wine!

Ask Frank Decent! Frank has sold lots of cigarettes an' cetree, but he hadn't paid much attention to the dago grape 'til around Christmas time.

Then, just to be decent, Frank said he didn't care if he did have just a wee bit of the fluid. Fine!

Then he took another one. Until he took four. Great stuff, that wop wine!

But it has got a back-action kick to it very much comparable to the Hannibal mule, who's from Mizzouri.

And Frank, bein' a native of the same State, hereby holds up his jury-arm, an' he solemnly curses he'll drink no more of th' Sicilian vineyard while the New Year Resolve remains a memory upon his 1918 insurance cal-en-dar!

THE SMOKER.

BRITISH SUBSTITUTE CONDEMNED

"A non-nicotine smoking mixture" extensively advertised in London, caused the British authorities to make an investigation with the result that a new industry was discontinued. Before the court that heard the case, a government analyist testified that the substitute consisted of ordinary forest leaves, darkened by some process and cut. It was cleverly manufactured, and was the finest and nearest imitation to tobacco that he had ever seen. So good was the imitation that it was difficult to say whether it was tobacco or not. Fifty per cent. of the substitute could be mixed with genuine tobacco, and the adulteration remain undetected. The contention of the defense was that the authorities urged people to consume as little as possible of every commodity imported in order to save extra tonnage, yet a useful British industry was threatened with strangulation. The manufacturer was fined $100.

The Wellington is made of genuine French Briar, seasoned by our own special process. It breaks-in sweet and mellow. The bowl is guaranteed against cracking or burning through. The "well" catches the moisture as well as all stray crumbs of tobacco. Any tobacco tastes better in a Wellington.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Wellington advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

Don't let another season go by without carrying a full line of W. D. C. pipes—the Wellington in particular. Tie up with the largest pipe manufacturer in America and your pipe business will grow in a way you never thought possible.

Gladly will we send you further information on request.

Mount Vernon Notes

Holiday business in Mount Vernon, N. Y., was more than generous; it was by far the largest the dealers ever had. Everybody seemed to be buying tobacco in some form, mostly for the boys "Over There." And there was not a dealer to be found anywhere who really complained of "poor business."

B. & S. Weiss, on South Fourth avenue, simply "ran away" with the pipe trade. Carrying a notably large assortment of pipes, they were able to meet the demand. In one week 100 pipes, ranging in price from 75 cents to $6, were sold by the Weiss brothers, which is a pipe record for Mount Vernon.

Lifschutz Bros., on West First street, had exceptionally satisfying cigar sales; they disposed of much domestic merchandise, also they sold many boxes of imported goods. Romeo y Julietas were among their best sellers. There is no store in Westchester county today carrying a larger stock of cigars than Lifschutz Bros. Boldt Specials are listed among their brands, and during the holidays numerous "Waldorf Kits" were sold from this store.

A. Hoffman, who recently purchased a store on West Third street, had a remarkably good holiday trade. His sales by the box were unusually large. Hoffman is a great booster of the brands made by the General Cigar Co., and he is kept busy so great is the demand for Owls, White Owls and Robert Burns.

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., December 28.—A return of zero weather has prevented the removal of any further portion of the hanging tobacco from the curing sheds, but has given opportunity for stripping out what was taken down during the late casing spell. Some growers, we learn, have rehung tobacco taken down because of the amount of fat stems encountered when stripping was attempted rather than try to dry out the stems off the stalks. It has already been discovered that unusual care must be exercised in bundling to separate the high case tobacco to ensure smooth sailing at delivery, as we learn some rejections have been made on this score.

Receiving of the crop will commence the coming week with a few packers, who desire to start warehouse handling at an early date, but this will hardly become general for a few weeks yet, as most dealers prefer to wait until a sufficient amount of the crop is ready for continuous operation of the packing force.

The shipments are again curtailed by an embargo placed on all non-war products to eastern points.—Edgerton Reporter.

NATIONS AT WAR

The alignment of Nations is shown by the formal declarations of war made since Austria precipitated the world strife on July 28, 1914, by declaring war on Serbia. These declarations have been.

Austria against Belgium, Montenegro, Russia and Serbia; Bulgaria against Serbia; China against Austria and Germany; Cuba against Germany; France against Austria, Bulgaria and Germany; Germany against France, Portugal and Russia; Great Britain against Bulgaria, Austria, Germany and Turkey; Greece against Germany; Italy against Austria, Bulgaria and Germany; Japan against Germany; Liberia against Germany; Montenegro against Austria; Panama against Germany; Rumania against Austria; Serbia against Turkey; Siam against Austria and Germany; Turkey against all the Entente nations November 23, 1914, and later against Rumania; United States against Germany, and later against Austria.

The Nations which have broken relations with Germany include Brazil, Bolivia, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Peru, Uruguay and Santo Domingo.

Asserting he has been robbed of re-election to office, Mayor Edwin W. Fiske, Democrat of Mt. Vernon, N. Y., on Monday, protested against Dr. Edward F. Brush, Republican, assuming the office of Mayor, and issued a public statement that he will fight in the courts. Dr. Brush received the certificate of election on an official count of the soldiers' vote, showing on the face that he had won by seven majority.

Charles F. Noyes Co. has sold to F. Miranda & Co., its tenant, No. 166 Front street, New York, a five story building, about 17 x 75, valued at $30,000. The building was modernized about a year ago. Charles Fox, of Miranda & Co., commenting on the sale, said: "For forty-three years our business was at No. 222 Pearl street. Eighteen months ago we saw the trend of the tobacco interests toward Front street in the vicinity of Maiden lane and moved to this new tobacco district. The fact that we are pleased with the location is evidenced by our purchase of the property." The building is opposite Cullman Brothers' new building at Front and Fletcher streets.

Henry K. Hadley, an American composer, has won the $1,000 prize for an opera by an American composer, offered by William Wade Hinshaw, which has attracted many able contestants. Mr. Hadley was declared successful Saturday at a meeting of the jury, consisting of Mme. Louise Homer, Walter H. Rothwell, the conductor; Victor Herbert, David Bispham and Richard Hageman, assistant conductor at the Metropolitan. The opera is entitled "Bianca." The libretto, based upon Goldoni's comedy, "The Mistress of the Inn," was written by Grant Stuart, author of the book of Herbert's opera "Madeleine." The new Hinshaw prize opera will have its premiere in New York in the Spring, under the auspices of the Society of American Singers.

Cigar Situation as Surveyed in Philadelphia

The Passing of Small Manufacturers—The Effect of Higher Prices—Prospects for 1918—From the Retailer's Viewpoint—A Significant Event—The Police and the Punchboards—The Perennial Yahn & McDonnell Rumor—The Bright Side of Things

PHILADELPHIA, January 1.—Now that 1917 has been pitched over the rail and the good ship baccy is nosing into the stormy seas—and they are stormy, in spots—under a new pilot, dealers here are beginning to see the good points of the dear departed. While he lived, 1917 got nothing but kicks in the slats, primarily because he passed out so many of them himself. But now that he's gone manufacturer, jobber and retailer are admitting that once in a while the year showed signs of being half satisfactory.

To look on the bright side first, everybody got higher prices for everything. Of course that doesn't mean that everybody in the tobacco game got more profit—not by a long shot. But in nearly every instance today Philadelphia retailers are traveling on as good a margin of profit or better than a year ago. It needs to be better with the high costaliving where it is. The same is true of jobbers and manufacturers. In jitney cigars, for example, the makers of nationally advertised brands are gathering in $43 as against $33 a year ago.

At the same time, despite the experiences of a few dealers who were disappointed in the Christmas trade, it cannot be denied that there was more money spent for everything by the average man in 1917, and that the cigar and tobacco business here got its share. Retailers here found that their increases for the year over 1916 averaged anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent. The same is true of jobbers, while the business of the manufacturers jumped even more.

Many things have combined to influence the manufacturing game. In the first place, early in the year it began to be apparent that the one man factory was doomed. In the very nature of things the fellow running a cigar plant in his cellar couldn't carry stock enough to carry him along more than a month or two. This meant that he got walloped in the pocket book every time the raw material played kangaroo and did a high jump. On the other hand the large manufacturers had been able to foresee increases in the prices of leaf and they had stocked up accordingly. Buying beyond immediate manufacturing needs probably helped along the increases, but we'll let that pass. When the little fellow found his costs increasing he had to get more money. Pretty soon he found himself asking as much for his bar room "cabbage leaf" as the manufacturer got for his million dollar, nationally advertised hava-necticut. And of course the bar rooms stopped buying the little known brands. Even when they hung on, it was only a matter of time.

The great event of the year from any viewpoint of the cigar and tobacco game in Philadelphia—and in Pennsylvania, too, for that matter—is that it drove out of business hundreds of small manufacturers. Makers with factories not only got this trade in the norma course of affairs, but also picked up an in crease far above their estimates of what woul have been normal. In the early months of th year every big manufacturer of cigars in th city was oversold. The situation has bee remedied somewhat in spite of a myriad c obstacles, but it is still true that nearly ever factory in the city is behind on its orders.

The labor situation at first was the mos serious difficulty. Every business suffered i this respect from the munitions industry, whic has reached out in all directions for worker Six months ago the manufacturers started t study the problem of finding places for wome where men formerly had been employed, an they are still at it. But today, although thi phase of the business is still a serious propos tion, the chief difficulty is transportation. Tha however, may be remedied by the governmer taking over the railroads.

Not many dealers here pictured the growin importance of the Philadelphia Cigar an Tobacco Dealers' Association less than tw months ago. It will hold its first general bus ness session next Wednesday night at the Ade phia hotel. Numerous previous attempts t start such an organization in this city met wit failure, but the present movement seems to b on the right track. Its members plan to tak up various trade abuses at the next and suc ceeding meetings. As the association embrace manufacturers, jobbers and retailers, it shoul bring about a better spirit of cooperation amon all classes.

Just to start the New Year right, we're g ing to commit homicide again on that old r mor about Yahn and McDonnell and their stor at 15th and Chestnut streets. It's a regul cat, that rumor, with nine lives. Every onc in a while it turns up in some new form. Fir

When we originated the Garcia Grande, we gave the world a real mild Havana, a large cigar, a good cigar that could be sold for a moderate price. The Garcia Grande represents the triumph of a new idea.

The Garcia Grande has attained a national distribution, not through extensive advertising, but strictly on its merits. It has developed continually increasing sales in all parts of the country. The fact that it appeals to everyone who likes a mild Havana, makes the Garcia Grande a brand that both the jobber and retailer may depend on for steady business.

PHILADELPHIA CIGAR TALK

was to the effect that Y. and McD. were going to sell out all their stores here. That was not full of holes. Recently it's been a story to the effect that the firm would give up the 15th and Chestnut street store after the 1st of the year. Now we have official denial of that. The United holds the lease on the building in which the store is located, but there is an agreement permitting Y. and D. to stay as long as they want to. And the firm has no intention of getting out.

His Honor the Mayor (who is under indictment for a lot of things in connection with the Fifth ward trouble) is now having a nice little anti-gambling campaign. Although the newspapers are charging that the protected gambling syndicate is running full blast and that anything from a thousand iron men to a nickel may be bet on the ponies, crap, stuss, poker, roulette, faro or a lot of other such innocent pastimes, the mayor's squad of gum shoes is busying itself annoying cigar dealers who operate punch-cards and similar devices. About half the dealers in the city have such a card on the counter. You pay a nickel, punch out a slip of paper and win or lose according to the run of cards printed on the slip. This, according to the mayor's detectives, is a terrible thing, and they're gathering 'em in. And in the meantime suckers are being stung for bank rolls large enough to choke an elephant by the big gamblers.

Oscar G. Link, who recently left the United Cigar Stores organization here and started "on his own" in a corner of the Jennings restaurant on South Penn Square, has been doing nicely. Christmas business was far above expectations. Incidentally, the place looks more like a cigar store than an accident now that an expert has taken hold of it.

Dan Ostrow, proprietor of the City Cigar store at 7th and Chestnut streets, got rid of about a carload of smokes over Christmas. His counter was stacked so high that Dan could hardly see the customers. "Everybody had money," sez he, "and I got some of it."

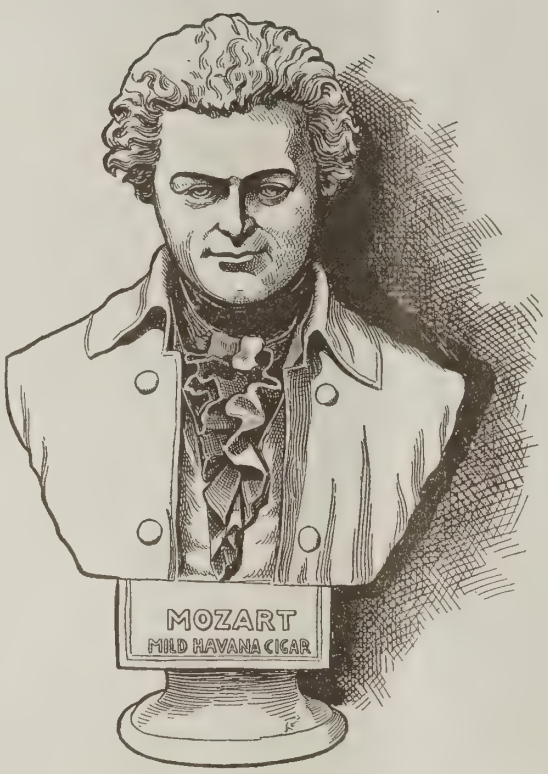
The number of kickers among the illustrious clan of purveyors of the weed in this fair town is about to be reduced by one, unless the man who gave us this earful changes his mind on and after the first of the New Year, said dealer, whose name is withheld while he does a little more figuring, has doped it out that the only end of the tobacco game carrying a sure thing return now is in that of cut rates.

By way of illustration he points to three or four shining examples in Philadelphia and countless others elsewhere. "All you need," says he, "is a little cash. You go and plank down for a stock and you do business on a ten per cent basis—as a minimum. Sometimes you get fifty per cent, but that's only on the side issues. You buy up irregular sizes or stuff with something else wrong with it—most of the time perfectly good to smoke—and you peddle it over the counter like hot cakes.

"I saw the returns of one such cut rate dealer for a recent Saturday. He only took in $1400 in the one day. Now if somebody can tell me the name and address of any regular retailer who made $140 on any one day recently I'll think I'm on the wrong track. But I want to be shown."

It may be that this particular dealer is just a trifle sore. He is strong for the new association here, which is expected to have something to say shortly about retailers' profits. Just now, the business from the retail viewpoint is as chaotic as ever.

The price range that got into operation after the application of the war tax is still keeping customers guessing. Every time a man goes into a strange cigar shop to buy a standard article he juggles pennies until he finds out just what it costs. There is no such thing as a standard any more.



However, to get around to the cheerful point of view, the M. J. Dalton company got itself robbed last week, but it didn't cost a cent. Seems that an aspiring gent extracted smokes worth about $250 from an express wagon. The weeds had been shipped out to a customer by the Dalton company, but of course the express company had to stand the loss.

Christmas business was fully up to expectations, according to the reports of a majority of dealers in this city. One or two found buyers who formerly blew in the whole wad cutting down a little on expenditures, but in general the trade showed an increase of from 25 to 75 per cent over last Christmas.

ALL GERMANS MUST REGISTER

The week of Feb. 4 has been designated by the Department of Justice for registration of the half million unnaturalized Germans in the continental United States by police and Postmasters, in pursuance of President Wilson's alien enemy proclamation. Registration will involve the gathering of detailed information concerning the business relations and habits of every German, together with his photograph and fingerprints. After registering he must carry a certificate card, and may not change his place of residence without approval of the police or postmaster. Violation of the regulations will be punishable by internment for the war. Orders do not apply to German women nor to any persons under fourteen years of age, because these are not classed as alien enemies by law. Subjects of Austria-Hungary are not required to register.

International Trade of 1917

International trade of 1917 will show a larger total than in any earlier year. This estimate, appearing in The Americas issued by The National Bank of New York, is the result of a careful review of all available figures of world trade for the year 1917. It includes eleven months actual figures for the United States and United Kingdom, ten months for Canada, and somewhat shorter periods for the other principal countries, covering however a sufficient proportion of the year to justify an estimate that the total international trade of the year will be the largest in history. In the case of the United States the total trade of the year is estimated at approximately nine billion dollars against less than four billions in 1913. In Great Britain the total for the eleven months is over seven billion dollars against five and three-quarter billion dollars in 1913. Canada's total for ten months ending with October is over two billion dollars against $88,000,000 in the same months of 1913 and Japan for the nine months ending with September, $914,000,000 against $507,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1913. For France no official figures are available for 1917 though the imports estimated by an examination of figures of exports from other countries to France are apparently about 50 per cent more than in 1913. In the Central Powers no official figures are available though it is known that their oversea trade is, of course, cut off; they have imported very largely from adjacentneutral countries and the exchange between the countries forming the group now known as the "Central Powers" have also been very great. In the Allied countries a part of their trade, that conducted by or on behalf of the Government, has been omitted from the official figures.

The largest change is that of the Allies. The total trade of Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, United States, Canada and Japan in 1913 was a little more than eighteen billion dollars, while the figures thus far reported for the current year suggest that their total for 1917 may approximate twenty-five billion dollars.

The neutral sections of the world show little change in their grand total of trade in 1917 as compared with 1913, though there are marked changes in its characteristics. In South America the imports of 1917 are far below those of 1913, in which year the imports of that continent were the highest in its history. The imports of all South America in 1913 exceeded one billion dollars, and the 1917 official reports from that continent up to this time indicate that the total imports of 1917 will be little more than half those of 1913, though the 1917 exports will apparently exceed those of 1913 by about 25 per cent.

Oriental trade of 1917 will somewhat exceed that of 1913. In Japan exports are double those of 1913, and imports show an increase of about 50 per cent. In China the imports show a decline, and while there is a good demand for her silk at high prices, the best markets for her tea have been difficult of access. India shows a decline in imports and a slight reduction of exports, due chiefly to lack of transportation. The great rubber plantations of Ceylon, the Malayan Peninsula and the Dutch East Indies, however, show large increases in their production and sales, and the sugar output of Java was larger and at higher prices than formerly.

The neutral countries of Europe show material increases in the value of their exports, but slight decreases in the value of their imports. Whatever they have to spare in food and manufacturing materials is eagerly purchased by their neighbors, both the Central Powers and the Allies, at high prices.

ADVERTISING AWAY COMPLAINTS

Some interesting and worth-while uses of advertising, apart from the fundamental features of selling goods, are developing many of them in connection with special conditions created by the war.

One of the main troubles of manufacturers in practically all lines has been in making prompt deliveries and filling orders completely. Shortage of material and labor, insufficient car supply and other causes have brought this about.

Naturally, under these conditions, complaints have been plentiful. The concern which in spite of interrupted or impaired service is able to maintain the good will of its customers is justified in congratulating itself.

Here is where advertising can be made to play an important part.

If the concern which is not seeking new business uses its space for the purpose of explaining conditions, indicating how it is meeting the emergency as best it can, and pointing out how its customers can co-operate in making the best of the situation, the ultimate effect is bound to be good.—Class.

Concerning union cigar makers "out of work," the Cigar Makers Official Journal, says: "The shiftless and careless members, shirking work from time to time, some for weeks and some for months, number less than three per cent. of the entire organization, an insignificant percentage, indeed, when compared with the men working in the shops, week in and week out, supporting their families in decency and respectability. There is no question as to the industrious traits of the overwhelming majority. The few idlers in the beehives are negligible."

On the Mebane, N. C., market, which has been closed until January 7, figures show that 2,350,000 pounds of tobacco have been sold, or more than was sold during the entire season previously. This product brought an average price of $33.50 per 100 pounds, probably the highest average in North Carolina. Last season the average price was $22.26, which was said to have been the highest average with one exception, of all the North Carolina markets that season. Plans are now being developed for the building of a third tobacco warehouse in Mebane, to be in readiness for the next season.

Giving as their reason the advance in the cost of practically every necessity of life, cigarmakers at Springfield, Mo., at a special meeting of Local Union No. 23, voted to adopt a new scale of pay to be received for their labor, amounting to ten, fifteen and twenty per cent. in various classes of work in the shops. The increases were planned to become effective on January 1. Twenty-one men are affected by the decision and they are employed in eight cigar manufacturing establishments. The average pay of a Springfield cigarmaker is declared to be but $13 or $14 a week.

On January 5 a chosen batch of the new National Army men will be assigned to the training school at Yaphank to fit themselves for commissions. This is in pursuance of the new policy of picking officer material from the ranks. Of the 535 men who will begin their training on Saturday the majority are non-commissioned officers. But not a few are ordinary privates. These will all retain their present rank and pay. At the close of the term, in April, the men will return to their former locations.

NOT DENIED SWEETENING

Dushkind Gets Government Assurances That the Supply of Sugar Needed in the Manufacture of Tobacco Will Be Continued.

Having received information that the issuance of Government licenses for the importation and supply of sugar needed in the manufacture of tobacco were delayed, Secretary Dushkind of the T. M. A. made a hurried trip to Washington, Friday to take the matter up with the authorities.

It seems that under the new regulations no sugar can be imported without first obtaining a license from the Bureau of Imports, and that in order to secure such a license the importer is required to sign the following agreement:

"In consideration of your issuance to me/us of license No..... dated the ..... day of ..... 1918, covering the importation of ..... bags of .....sugar from ..... I/we hereby guartee that I/we will not sell such sugar to any person, firm or corporation, or at any price without first securing the approval of the United States Food Administration, or its duly authorized agents.

"I/we further hereby promise and agree in the sale or distribution of said sugar to be governed by the rules and regulations of said United States Food Administration.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I/we have hereunto subscribed my/our hand this ..... day of ..... 19....."

It thus appears that after securing the import license the importer must furnish the names of his buyers to the Food Administration and apply for permission to sell to them. The purpose of requiring such permission to sell is to enable the Food Administration to regulate the consumption and to curtail the supply when necessary as it has done for instance in the case of confectioners, where the supply has been cut down to the extent of 50 per cent of their usual requirements.

Mr. Dushkind took the matter up with both Departments, that is, the Bureau of Imports and the Food Administration, and having demonstrated to them the necessity of tobacco particularly as a war essential, the magnitude of the industry, the amount of taxes that the Government is receiving from the manufacture of tobacco, and more particularly the fact that the sugar used in the manufacture of tobacco does not interfere with the domestic consumption, Mr. Dushkind has been assured by both Bureaus that unless present conditions should change, there will be no delay in the future in issuing licenses for the importation and supply of sugar for the manufacture of tobacco.

Secretary Dushkind states, however, that even impressed as the Government authorities are with necessity for quick action in passing upon applications for licenses and permits, the trade is likely to experience considerable delay due to the enormous number of such applications from practically all industries, and the primary stages of the organization of the multitude of new forces and new Bureaus that have been recently established by the Government. No manufacturer therefore, says Mr. Dushkind, should wait until the last moment before ordering such supplies.

Jack Hendricks, manager of the Indianapolis Club of the American Association, signed a contract Monday to manage the St. Louis Cardinals next season.

MOST PROSPEROUS YEAR

For American Cigar Co.—Earnings for 1917 Close to $20 a Share on the Common Stock—A Remarkable Rejuvenation

The American Cigar Co., a subsidiary of the American Tobacco Co., closed the most prosperous year in its history. While it is rather early as yet to give an accurate statement, those who come nearest to knowing would not be surprised if the concern showed close to $20 a share for its $10,000,000 common stock in 1917 as compared with slightly better than $12 in 1915 and 1916.

Of the $10,000,000 common stock outstanding, the American Tobacco Co. owns $7,000,000. Dividends are being paid on the junior issues of the cigar company at the rate of per annum, but in view of the earnings indicated above, which are running at the rate of three times the dividend disbursements, an increased payment in the near future is not outside the realm of possibility.

There is a strong possibility that a new source of revenue will be opened up to the American Tobacco Co. Its income at this time from holdings of the common stock of the cigar company amounts to $420,000 annually.

"The rejuvenation of the American Cigar Co. has been one of the big industrial accomplishments of this country," says the Wall Street Journal. It was a matter of only a few years ago when the cigar concern instead of being a large money maker for the American Tobacco Co. was a heavy load on its hands.

This subsidiary at this time is many millions of cigars behind its orders and extensive plans have been under way for some time for capacity increase.

The Imperial Tobacco Co., of Canada has assets amounting to nearly $40,000,000.

ames A. Farrell, chairman of the National Foreign Trade Council, has issued the formal ca for the Fifth National Foreign Trade Convention to meet at the Gibson Hotel, Cincinnati, Oo, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, February 7, 8 and 9, 1918. The theme of the Convention will be "The Part of Foreign Trade in Winning the War."

Deputy Collector Savage at Tampa, stated a week that there were orders for at least or and a half or two million cigars that could ot be filled on account of the inability to obtai stamps from the department. Last year, as a whole, was decidedly the best year in the office's history, and Tampa had sent out more cigars than ever before.

An approximate increase of 15 per cent. was shown in the Christmas sale of cigars, according to figures given at the Internal Revenue office at Tampa. For the months of October, November and December, 1917, there was an output of 107,000,000 cigars, while for 1916 there was 94,000,000, which makes a difference of 13,000,000, or an approximate estimate of 1 per cent.

Cigar men in London, Ont., are claiming that the cigar situation in Canada is still further adding to the difficulties of the tobacco trade in general. "Cutting off of the Virginia supply to meet the demands of the United States Government," they say "will cause such a demand for tobaccos of all kinds, some think, that the cigarette business may swamp a good portion of the cigar trade."

Tobacco is a necessity, not a luxury, declares Lord Rhondda, the British food controller. "We must have tobacco," he says. "I believe that its loss would be a national misfortune. It means both to the manual laborer and to him who works with his brains a saving factor. Men would eat a great deal more if they did not have tobacco. I believe the deprivation of it would work a great discomfort." The same system of rationing tobacco, however, is forecast by the newspapers.

A strike of the waiters in most of the restaurants south of Forty-second street, Manhattan, effective Wednesday, was ordered Monday. William Lehmann, organizer for the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance, said: "The general strike order affects all non-union restaurants in the section between Chatham Square, East Broadway, East River and Third avenue and Fourteenth street, on the East Side; and between Chatham Square, Third avenue, North River and Forty-second street, on the West Side."

Fully 16,000,000 members were added to the Red Cross in its Christmas campaign, Henry P. Davison, Chairman of the Red Cross War Council, said Monday night in a New Year's message to division managers throughout the country. This makes the total present enrollment, he adds, about 22,000,000. "But the wonderful achievement of enrolling one-fifth of the entire population of the United States is less of a triumph," Mr. Davison says, "than it is a call to greater service. As we stand on the threshold of a new year in this hour of world tragedy there can be but one thought in the minds of the 22,000,000 members of the American Red Cross, and that is to serve and to sacrifice as never before."

George Ringle, alleged to be a trafficker in draft exemptions; William Abramson, a lawyer, and Morris Assofsky, a notary, were arrested Monday evening following a raid on offices at No. 204 East Broadway, New York, made by special agents of the Department of Justice working in conjunction with the State Attorney General. Agents from the Department of Justice said that numerous other arrests would be made of attorneys, notaries and dealers in draft exemptions who are now under surveillance and whose names at this time cannot be disclosed. The Attorney General is said to have considered the investigation of such importance in breaking up the band that he has frequently come to New York to co-operate with his assistants and agents.

When the weather man gave New York below zero temperature for New Year's eve he drove the atmosphere of unrestrained jollity indoors. The usual street celebration was lacking. There was much music, noise and color in steam-heated eating places, but the all-night street parade with its horns and squakers and cowbells was not in evidence. In the cabarets and hotels the New Year fluttered into a warmer environment and felt more at home. His ears were slightly frost bitten and his nose was red, but he was in evidence and in some cases, with bells on. Most of the city retired at 1 a. m. The orders were that restaurant "watch parties" would be given just three-quarters of an hour after 1 a. m. to disperse. The order was generally obeyed.

THE COURSE OF A DOLLAR.

It is easy to visualize the course of a dollar saved from waste and invested in Government bonds: First, it goes to the Government as a loan for the war; second, it is expended by the Government for food, clothing, and ammunition which go directly to a gallant soldier, or sailor, whose fighting strength is kept up by the food, whose body is kept warm by the clothing, and whose enemy is hit by the ammunition. It has not been expended in the purchase of needless food and clothing for the man at home, and is therefore released for the use of the soldier; it is saved wealth to the man at home and can be loaned to his Government at interest, with resulting benefit to himself and to his Government.

MISUNDERSTANDING THAT PAYS

"It is not likely that cigar manufacturers ever look upon waiters in restaurants and hotels as cigar salesmen, but they are," a cafe patron remarked on New Year's night. "Most salesmen sell goods because they are clever, or the retailers think the salesmen are clever; but waiters get rid of their stock by their apparent stupidity. Waiters receiving a commission on the cigars and cigarettes they sell to patrons have a habit of misunderstanding orders. For instance, three men will be seated at a table, and the man paying for the meal will order two cigars, knowing that one of his friends does not smoke. But Mr. Waiter always brings three, and when notified of his mistake, offers apologies, fully aware that his patrons will not return the extra cigan. Thus he sells a cigar where all the diplomacy and strategy of a finished salesman might fail."

BOSTON BREVITIES

Boston, January 1.—Joseph P. Manning Co. has 46 stars on its service flag. Jeff Landry of the Tobacco Products Co. has bundle-tier's cramp. He was fourth assistant shipper for Charles B. Perkins Co. during Christmas week.

"A DAY OFF" IN THE WAR ZONE.

A member of a field artillery unit rites of camp episodes and of a particularly full day in a city near the aining camp.

November 27.

"Dear Jo-Jo, Jo and Joe—I'm still in ance and very much alive. Our present camp is far superior to our first one. We sleep in little iron beds, have wooden barracks (without floors), and I tell ou the boys feel mighty good at the ea of going to bed for the first time four months.

"I am writing you this by candle ght, sitting on the edge of my cot. here is a bunch of fellows hanging round talking about every conceivable ubject from being in Chicago at a wake making a living selling pencils at Thirty-fourth street and Broadway ith both legs off at the knee. One certainly gets a very clear insight into uman nature being with so many men very hour of the twenty-four. We have oughnecks, mothers' boys, boys from all alks of life and all nationalities. In he army we are all equal. A barber civil life frequently makes a better oldier than the most brilliant of college en.

"We buried one of the lads from our egiment today. He died of pleuroneumonia. I didn't know him personlly, but the boys in his battery say he vas a prince. It was the first military uneral I ever saw. The entire regiment vith all officers from the General down ook part. It was most impressive and ouching. When taps were sounded ver this American boy's grave, buried omewhere in the woods of France, here wasn't one of us but felt the seriousness of our mission and the great omage that was paid to this boy who lied in service. We marched about two miles to the beautiful strains of the funeral march.

"Tomorrow is Thanksgiving and I helped carry the turkeys to the kitchen; so we'll celebrate it fittingly.

"I had a thirty-six hour pass last Saturday and went to a nearby good sized city. You should have seen the train that took me. It looked like one of these toy trains we have in our amusement parks. I don't believe in the entire history of the railroad that they ever hauled as many passengers as they did that day. They crowded us in the baggage car; even on the toy engine; any place that they could find room for a man. When we came to a grade the engine didn't have the pep to stand the strain. So we all had to get off and push; but gosh! you ought to have seen the speed we made down grade.

"Well, after four hours of pushing and coasting we finally made the thirty-six miles, and we were well pleased that we arrived at all, as it looked very black here for a time.

"It looked like a deserted city by 9 P. M. We went over to a restaurant that had a sign 'English Spoken.' The only English I heard while there was their 'Good night' as a greeting and another 'Good night' as a farewell. We found out later that this privilege of hearing our native tongue spoken so fluently just increased our check 50 per cent. We had quite a time getting what we wanted, as they tried to induce us to eat the things they had most of.

"After the inevitable battle which takes place always on settling the check we went to several cafes. They were all crowded with French soldiers on leave from the front. The air was vile, so thick with smoke you could cut it. The French people in this section believe not in cleanliness or sanitation. There they sit through the nights drinking their vinegar-like wines and smoking their vile cigarettes, and they call it a good time.

"We went to the biggest hotel to put up for the night and to our great surprise found the doors locked. After ringing for about ten minutes a porter opened the door about an inch, took a squint at us and closed it in our faces. To make a long story short, we tried every hotel in the city and had the same experience. It was then about 2 A. M. and we were dead tired, cold and very much down hearted, being in a strange city in a foreign country and not a place to sleep. In camp we retired about 8:30 and we missed our little iron beds muchly. My pal claimed he just couldn't walk any further, so he laid down on the grass in front of the city hall and wouldn't budge. It was cold and damp and the grass was wet; I just couldn't see it, so I told my bunkie I'd keep on going.

"I found my way to the main depot and found it packed with French and Algerian soldiers arriving and departing for the front. The tiled floor was literally covered with them sleeping. That was a sight I don't believe I'll ever forget; those dark, picturesque Algerians, with the strange uniform and red fez, and the wounded being carried to the waiting ambulances. I soon found out there was no room for me to stretch out there, so I left.—New York Sun.

The Work of Congress

Washington, January 2.—With Congress scheduled to resume the session tomorrow, and with all sorts of troublesome questions to be considered, the subject of railroad financial legislation is holding first place to-day in point of interest and importance. This is the only domestic issue which is receiving anything like the attention which belongs to matters pertaining strictly to the war, such as the War Department inquiry, the shipping investigation, and the like.

Regarding Export Licenses

For the information of various inquirers, the admonitions of Secretary of Commerce Redfield, given months ago, are here repeated.

"Applications for license to export commodities specified by the President as not to be exported from the United States, except under license, will be made by shippers to the Division of Export License, Bureau of Foreign & Domestic Commerce, and licenses will be issued or refused by that division. The Division of Export Licenses is a strictly war-time organization formed by the Department of Commerce to carry out the policies of the Exports Council and to handle all applications for export licenses.

"The organization of the Division of Export Licenses has been under way for some time and it is now equipped to handle all applications under the President's current proclamation and to issue licenses promptly.

"Applications will be passed upon, first, as regards the quantity which the Exports Council has decided may be permitted to leave the country; second, as regards the amount which it is deemed wise by the Council to permit to go to the country specified in the application.

"If the amount of the commodity applied for, and the country, are satisfactory, the Division of Export Licenses will then pass upon the character of the consignee, satisfying itself that the consignee is not likely to permit the goods to fall in the hands of, or otherwise to benefit the enemy.

"Application forms which exporters are to use in applying for licenses may be obtained by writing to the Division of Export Licenses, Bureau of Foreign & Domestic Commerce, this city, or to any of the districts or cooperative branches of the bureau. The application forms have been drawn up so as to give the Division of Export Licenses all the essential information which will guide them in passing upon the application.

"The work of the Division of Export Licenses will largely be in the hands of practical and experienced business men who have volunteered their exclusive time and services to the Government for war work and have been assigned to this division. The policy of the Division of Export Licenses will be to perform a function of high military importance with as little interference with legitimate trade as is possible.

"Applications in person for licenses, cannot be received, and all applications will be decided purely on their merits, based on the written information given, or filed with, the application.

"The patriotism of American exporters has been manifested in so many ways recently that the Department of Commerce feels that it can count upon the loyal cooperation of manufacturers and merchants with the Division of Export Licenses. The attention of applicants is drawn to the fact that the issuing of a license does not relieve the shipper of his responsibility both moral and legal, to use the utmost precaution to ascertain the character and purpose of the consignee. Exporters are warned particularly to investigate new customers in neutral European markets, before applying for licenses, and the Division of Export Licenses should be promptly notified of inquiries for merchandise which appear suspicious."

The Department of Commerce also gave exporters of the country the following advice:

"In view of the fact that public necessity may in the future require the requisition of vessels by the Government, and as this may be done quickly with but little time for adjustment, it is advisable that exporters, in making contracts for export, should state in the contracts that shipment is to be contingent on their obtaining shipping space. Attention is again called to the fact that exporters will save themselves much annoyance and possible claim for damages if a clause is inserted in bills of sale, stating that the sale is made subject to the seller's ability to secure an export permit, if such permit is required."

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES

Francisco until next February, when the new season's goods will arrive.

The root swellings or burls of the wild lilac (which grows in profusion throughout the State) is proving to be a valuable substitute for briar in the making of bowls for tobacco pipes. It is said that an effort will soon be made to introduce these in the East.

A good many out-of-town cigar dealers were in San Francisco just before Christmas Day. Among them were George Green, of Chowchilla; William Coleman, Eureka; J. Rotz, Reno; George F. Warren, Cloverdale; W. Brady, Portland, and Ed G. Baum, Colusa.

COMES BACK TO NEW YORK

Irvin Studwell, Erstwhile Vice-president of C. B. Perkins Co. of Boston, Leaves the Hub to Become Manager of the Great Cigar Department of Park & Tilford, Succeeding Walter Pierson.

BOSTON, January 7.—Irvin Studwell, for several years vice-president and treasurer of C. B. Perkins Co., resigned last week to go to New York, where he will become manager of Park & Tilford's cigar department, succeeding Walter Pierson.

Mr. Studwell is no stranger in New York, having spent a number of years in the service of Acker, Merrill & Condit Co. and Surbrug & Co. Many friends will welcome him back to the Metropolis.

Five years ago Studwell entered the employ of C. B. Perkins Co., a perfect stranger, but by his tact and geniality he made himself well liked by every one in the organization from the president down to the office boy. Studwell is a man who eliminates friction in business.

As he leaves Boston, the entire force of C. B. Perkins Co. greatly regrets his going.

President C. B. Perkins said: "I will personally feel his loss very much, having been associated with him so closely for many years. I feel that I speak for all the organization when I say that we all wish him all possible success in his new undertaking and feel sure his ability, tact and common sense will carry him through."

Until 1915 Mr. Studwell had been manager for C. B. Perkins Co. Then Mr. Lloyd, the vice-president, died, and Mr. Studwell succeeded him, assuming the duties of treasurer as well. Mr. Studwell's active connection with Park & Tilford's cigar department will begin some time next week.

Of imported and other fine cigars, Park & Tilford long have been regarded as the largest 'independent distributors in the United States."

Slight Decrease in U. S. Cigar Production

Shown by the Official Figures for October

WASHINGTON, January 7.—The Internal Revenue Bureau has just compiled the figures for the cigarettes, cigars, snuff and smoking tobacco manufactured during the month of October.

According to the new classification the total number of large cigars manufactured in October, 1916, was 752,733,640, decreasing slightly to 752,501,731 in October, 1917. In October, 1917, the following classification is made for large cigars: Class A, 226,957,027; Class B, 382,775,917; Class C, 137,625,681; Class D, 2,517,050, and Class E, 2,626,055, making the total already mentioned.

In October, 1916, there were 79,231,360 small cigars manufactured, increasing in October, 1917, to 101,344,527.

There were 2,859,500 large cigarettes manufactured in October, 1916, increasing in October, 1917, to 3,070,147 and in October, 1916, there were 2,502,289,432 small cigarettes manufactured increasing in October, 1917, to 3,403,437,214.

In October, 1916, there were 2,773,182 pounds of snuff manufactured which increased in October, 1917, to 3,170,677 and in October, 1916, there were 37,561,060 pounds of chewing and smoking tobacco manufactured, increasing in the same month, 1917, to 41,485,529.

The Philippine imports for September, 1917, included 17,821,850 large cigars and 280,400 small cigarettes. The imports for October, 1917, included 9,650,463 large cigars and 510,000 small cigarettes.

The showing isn't so bad.

BIG CIGARETTE FACTORY

Re-established in Norfolk—British-American Tobacco Co. Leases the Margolious Building—Work Begins Again Very Soon.

For cigarette factory purposes in Norfolk, Va., to take the place of the building recently destroyed by fire, the British-American Tobacco Co. has leased the big Margolious building. It is a three-story structure, with about 75,000 square feet of floor space, and covers an entire block extending from Monticello avenue to Armistead avenue and from Twenty-second to Twenty-third street. The tracks of the Norfolk & Western Railroad are located on the Armistead avenue and Twenty-third street sides of the building. The transaction between the tobacco company was negotiated through Benjamin Margolious, the Chamber of Commerce representing the British-American Tobacco Co.

The Chamber of Commerce, which was responsible for the original location of the British-American Tobacco Co.'s plant in Norfolk, was called on again immediately after the fire by Vice-President G. G. Allen, Managing Director E. S. Bowling, District Manager Nathan Toms and the local manager, L. L. Kipps, and asked to co-operate in finding new quarters in Norfolk, if possible. Three different properties were presented by the chamber as being available, and the company officials finally decided on the Margolious building, providing the city would immediately pave Twenty-second street.

Barton Myers, president, and W. A. Cox, secretary, of the Chamber of Commerce, took up the matter with city officials, and after receiving assurances of the earnest desire of the city to co-operate in the matter, the British-American representatives proceeded to close the contract for the property.

The Margolious building is considered an excellent one for manufacturing purposes. It is of heavy brick construction and, while not thoroughly fireproof, is of the slow-burning style of architecture. The structure is equipped throughout with automatic sprinklers for fire protection. Another desirable feature for factory purposes is that it is a 50 per cent daylight building.

About 400 operators, mostly white women, will be given employment when the factory resumes operations. The new machinery duplicates the destroyed equipment so far as possible, and where it was found impossible to duplicate some feature of the old outfit, the company bought machines of as nearly the same character as it was possible to get.

When the present leases expire, the British-American Tobacco Co. may build a plant in Norfolk. Officials expect at the termination of the lease to have developed an industry of such size that a mammoth plant will be needed. Speaking of the matter, the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch says:

"The British-American Tobacco Co. is a most desirable acquisition to the manufacturing district of any city. Great stress is laid on pleasant working conditions for their employees, and relations between employees and employers always are most satisfactory. The factories of this company are models of neatness and sanitary arrangements, and good wages are paid to those who become skilled in the operation of the cigarette making machines."

When the British-American factory first began operations in Norfolk its output of cigarettes was exported chiefly to the Orient, but of late very large shipments have been sent to England and France.

THE "STATUTE OF FRAUDS"

Be Sure Your Sales of Goods Are Not Voidable

My observation is that a thousand times every day sales of goods take place that are illegal and could be repudiated if either of the parties wanted to do it. Many of these sales go through merely because the parties don't know that they have ignored a law which is in force in practically all the States, prescribing the way in which sales of personal property, amounting to more than a certain sum, must be done. Sales not done in this way are bad.

I have had occasion to ask a great many business men, from time to time, whether they knew about this law, and most of them never heard of it. A very few had a hazy idea there was such a law, but they had never made any effort to obey it.

The law I refer to is everywhere called the "statute of frauds," and it comes to us from an old English statute. It exists in every State of the Union, so far as I know, and the part of it which has to do with the sales of goods is always in substantially the following language:

> A contract to sell or a sale of any goods of the value of $500 or upwards, shall not be enforcible by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods so contracted to be sold, or sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract or sale be signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf.

The above is from the Pennsylvania act, which is peculiar in that it puts the amount of the contract which is to be controlled by the act so high. In many States the act reads "of the value of $50 or upwards," which, of course, makes the law much more far-reaching than an act putting the limit at $500.

Now what does this law mean? A goes into B's store or office, and makes a verbal deal with him for so much merchandise. This, of course, often happens. The parties know each other very well and they disdain a written contract. If the above law were not in existence, that deal would be a complete legal contract when A left B, and either party could enforce it. But under the above law, provided it involves more money than the sum named in the act, it cannot be enforced, which means that either party can repudiate it at will, unless:

1.—The buyer accepts part of the goods or actually receives part. That, the law says, executes the contract, and the parties are bound. The buyer need not personally receive part of the goods. If anybody acting for him does it, it makes the contract good. For instance, if goods are sold f. o. b. the seller's station, the receipt of part or all of them by the railroad company is an acceptance by the buyer, for when goods are sold f. o. b. the railroad is the agent of the buyer.

2.—Or the buyer must give some earnest or make part payment. This, too, executes the contract. Giving a note is not sufficient, though giving a check as a deposit would be.

3.—Or a memorandum must be given of the sale, "signed by the parties to be charged." It used to be considered that this meant both parties, but it has later been decided that it means only the party who is trying to get out of the contract. That is, if in such a sale it is the seller who relies on the above act to let him out, the law will require that the memorandum, if there was one, bore the seller's signature. And vice versa if it is the buyer who is trying to escape.

What kind of a memorandum should be given to make the sale safe? It need not follow any prescribed form, but it should state the fundamentals of the contract clearly—the date, the names of the parties, the character of goods and the price. Given these, any form will do—pencil, ink, written or printed. A written offer to sell is enough if it is later accepted verbally, provided the party who signed the offer to sell is the one endeavoring to escape. Also a written acceptance of a verbal offer, if it is the buyer who this time is trying to escape. And a telegram is sufficient when it is signed with the right name.

In France the announcement that a load of tobacco has arrived for the soldiers is a signal for a marathon. Regardless of the pastime occupying the soldiers' attention, they drop everything and break away like an army of runners, their hands outstretched as they come within sight of the precious stuff as if they were trying to grasp the tape at the end of the run. The photograph was taken in France and gives a better idea of how the soldiers value tobacco than a five thousand word story could.

Alexander B. Dick and Bert Ennis, the men who have charge of "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," appreciate the necessity of smokes for soldiers, and to date for the fund they have collected $139,950. While referring to the fund's activities and aims, Mr. Dick said:

"During the week of February 18-24 we are going to make a special drive to get contributions and tobacco, and we hope to secure the co-operation of all patriotic cigar, cigarette, and tobacco manufacturers. To thousands of retail stores we are sending posters for window display, which will ask customers to contribute coin or smokes. Those giving tobacco in any form should see that the seals are not broken, for a broken seal will prevent its acceptance by the fund. Every quarter contributed will buy more smokes than the individual can purchase."

"Have you any suggestions that might be practicable for manufacturers to carry out?" Mr. Dick was asked.

"Manufacturers might have an announcement printed on their stationery calling the attention to retailers to lend their assistance. The four hundred newspapers giving publicity to the fund will distribute posters for 'Tobacco Week,' and any retailer, jobber, or manufacturer who desires to have posters can get them by writing to me for them. If all those in a position to help will do so I don't think that our boys in the trenches will want for smokes for some time to come."

Communications intended for Mr. Dick should be sent c/o "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." 25 West 44th Street, New York City.

The Metropolitan Tobacco Company's business does not show any let down since the holidays.

The United Cigar Stores Co. did a business of $43,000,000 in 1917, some $7,000,000 more than in 1916.

The United Cigar Stores Co. has acquired the store and stock of the Main Cigar Co. at Roanoke, Va.

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. is offering the trade a 10% free deal on Chesterfields for a short time.

The cigar store and pool room of Jack Cassat at Hagerstown, Md., was destroyed by fire, one day last week.

Each citizen in New York City rode 43 times on the street cars in 1860. In 1916 the average citizen rode 350 times.

Damages, estimated at $750, were done to the Clute & Williams cigar factory at Waterloo, Iwa, by fire, recently.

John C. Cleary, president of Cleary Bros., wholesale liquor and cigar dealers, died January 5, at Escanaba, Mich.

George W. Stocking, western representative of Marcelino Perez & Co., has been spending the holidays in New York.

Marcelino Perez & Co. are taking an inventory of stock. Within the next ten days the salesmen will start out on the road.

The cigar and tobacco store of Jesse Dassau, at Monroe, Mich., was burglarized Thursday night. About $400 in cash was taken.

W. T. Hicks, representing the Cien Porcido Co., leaves for the South the latter part of this week. C. H. Knubel will start for the East next week.

Two erstwhile salesmen in the United store in the Flatiron Building are now wearing army uniforms. George Carnier and Geo. Abrams are the clerks who enlisted.

Themelis Bros. Co. is starting a window display campaign for the Rose Tip cigarettes. The Rex Window Advertising Co. is making exceedingly attractive settings.

Manager Moriarty, of the King Cole sales force, is getting plenty of new business since the first of the year. And he had nothing to complain about last year's trade.

Light receipts still prevail on the Paris, Ky., tobacco market, with slight prospects of improvement in the next few days, because of weather conditions and impassable roads.

Asa Lemlein, manager for E. H. Gato Cigar Co., has gone to Key West, and will make a stop at Jacksonville, where his son, Harold, now a lieutenant in the army, is stationed.

In the fire which caused the Bardwell Hotel in Rutland, Vt., to be gutted, last week, Francis Welch, who conducted the cigar stand in the hotel lost all his stock. The goods and fixtures were not insured.

E. M. Freeman left Wednesday to look after trade in the upper part of New York state. S. J. Freeman will break away from the New York office on Monday to cover the eastern territory.

Riker-Hegeman store at 42nd Street and 6th Avenue has a special Christmas box offering still displayed in one of the windows. La Coronas, Padovas, and Earl of Pawtucket are very much in evidence.

John J. Flaherty, manager of the United store in the Flatiron expects to have all traces of the recent fire removed within the next five days. Since the holiday rush subsided business has been good.

Two notably successful representatives of the E. H. Gato Cigar Co., "Jimmy" Goldwater of New York, and Fred Oakes of Chicago, are enjoying a trip to Key West, being the guests of Manager Asa Lemlein.

S. E. Appelgate of The Strand Cigarette Co., is expected to return to New York during the week. Mr. Grashoff has been out of town on a week-end visit. Mr. Simmons has been rushed trying to get out the orders.

A. Santaella & Co. are all set for the new year's business. H. Caro, Ben. J. Straus, Robt. I. Ellis, and I. I. Hess will start out on the road some time this month. Wm. Ferisch, who handles the city trade has been on the job all the time.

Sales of tobacco in Carlisle, Ky., were suspended during the past week because of weather conditions, which have caused deliveries to be very light. Receipts at the warehouses were reported to be the lightest of the season.

Speer's Pharmacy at West Palm Beach, Fla., has incorporated with a capital of $25,000 to conduct a wholesale and retail drug business, selling sundries, sporting goods, tobacco, jewelry, etc. C. C. Spear is secretary and treasurer.

John W. Merriam & Co. are very busy. Mr. Merriam has not left town. Mr. Lahr will go out for new business the latter part of the month. The recent zero spell froze the pipes in the factory building and held business up for a week.

On the New York elevated and subway trains crossing the East River Bridge the daily average number of passengers carried in 1912 was 263,765; in 1913, 314,797; in 1914, 323,902; in 1915, 357,636; in 1916, 432,665, and in 1917, 522,505.

"Gene" Stlotz, representing Simon Batt & Co., is in the city on a visit from California. He will remain in town until the middle of next week. F. Rian has just pulled out for Chicago, and T. Torbet is taking care of the trade in Dallas, Texas.

Hirtenstein's cigar store on Fourth Avenue did about the same amount of business during the holidays as it did last year. But Mr. Hirtenstein said that his start for the new year is much better than that of 1917. His La Murien has enjoyed a large sale of late.

Julian Crofton, representing the Strand Cigarette Co. in Montclair and other parts of New Jersey, is meeting with considerable success. H. E. Wrensch, of 618 Bloomfield ave., and H. Grassi, of 550 Bloomfield ave., Montclair, have excellent window displays of Strand Cigarettes.

The Lynn, Mass., retail tobacco dealers association has been organized, with 100 members. The officers of the organization are Michael H. Cotter, president; Thomas McLaughlin, vice-president; Walter Guptill, recording secretary; James R. Flannagan, financial secretary, and Samuel Sofer, treasurer.

W. B. Wohlgemuth, who has the cigar stand in the Marbridge Building, had the misfortune to be taken ill just before Christmas, leaving his wife no alternative but to go down and handle the business. Had she been able to secure proper help she could have done a much bigger business than she did.

The Waldorf-Astoria Segar Company has received a number of large orders through the mail since the first of the year. J. Culver Wolfe will leave next Monday to cover Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, and C. B. Cameron will start west about the 20th of January, to be gone two months.

SERVICE REQUIRED

It takes time to accustom men to the short, hard words of command, and to the surrender of personal judgment. It is not easy, either, for a nation to turn its back upon the conception of a world where justice works out its ends by quiet processes, and in its stead come to the stern belief that the ultimate court is a battle field. So if there is wrenching and sideslipping and confusion there should be no surprise.

The year 1917 was a year of expansion within the nation.

The acceptance of Germany's challenge and the realization that the national life was now at stake brought at once a new sense of the relative importance of what we did, what we had, and how we used it. Things fell away as of little value which had hitherto been accepted without questioning as worth while, and ideas, resources, powers which had hitherto been slightingly regarded, rose in their stead into matters of prime national concern.

Unless we could transmute gold and silver into coal and iron they could no longer be called the precious metals, and unless men had the power to convert skill, strength, and imagination into some form of shield or spear they could not play in the great game. Therefore we made new appraisal of ourselves in terms of ability to do something that would hasten the great day of peace. We judged each other by primal standards of proved capacity, not by the standards of a superficial social system. For this is the curse and the glory of war—that it has but a single scale of measurement, it puts but one simple question:

"What can you do to serve me?—for now I am the nation."

It is the directness and the fullness of this challenge that gives war its spell and likewise gives birth to its horrors.

"What can you do to serve me?"

To that question each individual and each department of the Government must give answer.—Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior.

A TRADE PAPER'S POSITION.

Not every trade paper pretends to be an oracle. Nor always is editorial utterance concentrated wisdom. Journalism isn't entirely altruistic. Guiding and saving business by giving advice every week is service less important, possibly, than "what it is cracked up to be," by some people. Yet few successful men deny that a trade newspaper is useful. How helpful a trade paper may be, in various ways, is susceptible of proof.

Who knows how far the influence of a paper may extend? Who can measure the reach of a "mere suggestion"? Where and when does a thought terminate?

The good that a trade paper may do is not fully understood by everyone. The value of information to a business man depends largely upon how and when it is presented. Timeliness and authenticity are especially important in trade reports. But a trade paper should be something more than a vehicle for conveying statistical and similar information.

Ponderously dull, invariably dry, restricted to a single interest or afraid to display any initiative, a trade paper may become tiresome to the extent of discouraging readers and advertisers. Or, it may have originality enough to attract and retain attention.

When a crisis occurs, when business confronts an uncertain year, the assistance a real trade paper offers may be of substantial benefit.

The busiest men, the acknowledged leaders in any industry, take time to read the trade papers. They keep posted. They know what is going on; they perceive the advantage of seeing things, occasionally, from the "other fellow's" point of view.

A trade paper's ability to be of service, perhaps, corresponds to the support it receives. A trade paper, worth while, labors for the defense and advancement of the industry it represents.

Which, possibly, is all a self respecting trade paper need say for itself.

GETTING SHAVED ON A PULLMAN.

Regardless of danger and fearless of pain,
I thought I'd get shaved on a Limited Train.
I seated myself in the ample plush chair,
So broad and capacious, so restful and fair,
And called for the chap
In the white canvas cap
Who gallantly barbered the passengers there.

He had me strapped in in a minute or two,
And brandished his brush like old Brian Boru,
He lathered my jaw, and my brow, and my studs
He speckled and spattered me as to my duds,
And when with a swerve
The train took a curve,
He filled up my mouth with a brushful of suds.

His razor he stropped till its edge was as keen
As the blade of a premium mowing-machine,
Then poising himself on the tip of his toes,
For the base of my chin made a couple of throws,
When the car with a twitch
Jangled over a switch,
And up in the air flew the end of my nose.

Undaunted, his razor held fast in his fist,
His elbow thrust deep in the midst "o' me chist,"
He gave seven swoops—it may have been more—
One furrowed my forehead, the others the door—
When a signal ahead
Stopped the Limited dead,
And the lobe of my ear slithered off to the floor.

"Please leave me my cheek," I observed with a grin
"My business calls for much cheek, and my chin—"
And the engine ahead gave a toot and a crash,
And we started again with a bang and a smash,
And the chap with the knife
Gave the whoop of his life,
And swish went a half of my treasured mustache.

I soon sank unconscious deep down in the chair,
And lay for two hours unknowingly there.
What happened in detail is shadowed in doubt,
Ere I rose from the chair at the end of the rout;
But this much is true—
When at last I came to,
While I hadn't been shaved, my appendix was out
—John Kendrick Bangs in Life.

In France, from 1913 to 1916, the use of smoking tobacco increased 50 per cent and the consumption of cigarettes rose nearly 30 per cent.

PROVEN BY THE FIGURES

Cigars and Tobacco Caused Old 1917 to Be a Record Year for Tampa—Gains in Manufactures, Imports and Revenue.

With total collections for cigar stamps alone amounting to $1,252,591.70 and the manufacturing of 353,494,990 cigars, 1917 has been the record year in every respect for the Tampa internal revenue office.

Counting 300 working days to the year, excluding Sundays and holidays, Tampa has made 1,176,000 cigars a day, far eclipsing all former records and setting a new mark that will be hard to hit again.

November was the record month, there being 38,493,690 cigars manufactured in that month. In all there have been 40,038,200 more cigars made this year than last, which broke all records. The collectors were anxious in 1916 to see if the collections would amount to $3,000,000, and it surpassed that, but this year the collections for cigar stamps alone have amounted to more than the million mark. This is not only due to the increase in revenue, even though it has greatly increased the amount, but is due to more cigars being made. The following tables show the total number of cigars manufactured each year since 1898:

1900.....	147,848,000	1910.....	201,405,000
1901.....	147,330,000	1911.....	293,360,000
1902.....	141,905,000	1912.....	276,278,000
1903.....	167,630,000	1913.....	286,148,000
1904.....	196,961,000	1914.....	267,866,000
1905.....	220,430,000	1915.....	285,836,000
1906.....	277,662,000	1916.....	313,456,790
1907.....	285,660,000	1917.....	353,494,990

All year's records have been surpassed by the importation of tobacco for 1917. In all 3,269 bales have been handled by the Tampa customs house, making an increase of 667 bales over 1915, which was the banner year prior to this report. The record month was November, 4,812 bales being brought in during the month, but December ran a "nip-and-tuck" race by the importation of 4,383 bales. This tobacco is from Cuba and, collectively speaking, according to the appraisers, the quality has excelled the tobacco for any previous years.

With the highest reports from the internal revenue office and the customs office, indications are that Tampa's cigar industry is far from suffering a relapse. One of the largest shipments for the year came in last week and there is an excellent supply of tobacco in the bonded warehouses at present.

Following are figures showing the number of bales of tobacco passing through the Tampa customs office since 1912:

1913	49,353
1914	50,713
1915	52,592

Tampa's customs office closed the 1917 records by announcing the total collections as $1,959,786, which makes 1917 the banner year in the history of the office. In 1881 the total customs receipts amounted to $181.41, in 1886 the receipts were $2,508.70, and in 1901 passed the million mark. Within 20 years the collections had jumped from more than a hundred dollars to more than one million dollars, and has shown wonderful increases at the close of each year since.

In 1917, the record year, great gains have been made, which marks Tampa high for other ports have fallen down in receipts because of the war, which curtailed the importation of foreign goods. The record-breaking year was caused by the vast amount of tobacco, which is the principal import at Tampa, and which has not decreased because of the war.

1882.....	111.84	1901.....	1,007,508.70
1883.....	142.13	1902.....	1,008,834.89

GEORGE ZAFIRIDES WAS INSPECTING TOBACCO

The picture shown above is a "still" from an educational reel made in The Strand Cigarette Factory by the Hearst-Pathé Weekly. Several hundred feet of film were made, showing every phase of cigarette making, from tobacco as it comes from Macedonia until it passed out of the machine a finished cigarette.

The Hearst-Pathé Weekly releases on an average of twenty reels every week, which show to about sixty thousand persons every day, and before the reels have been taken out of circulation something like ten million movie fans, many of them cigarette smokers, will have seen how The Strand Cigarette Co. manufactures its popular brand.

Charles Burrucker, 72 years old, a retired cigar dealer of Brooklyn, and in recent years owner of a hotel on Jamaica avenue, died on Thursday at his home, 206 Elton street, Brooklyn.

Emil Goodworth, a cigar manufacturer, recently purchased desirable real estate at 3621 and 3623 Hartford street, St. Louis. The property lies immediately west of Grand avenue and immediately south of Arsenal street.

WESTERN RETAILERS

Will Hold Their Annual Convention in Tacoma on February 26 and 27—Plans for a Very Important Meeting.

Tobacco trade conditions will be discussed by retail dealers from all parts of the West when they meet in Tacoma, February 26 and 27. W. L. Alfred, Tacoma, and N. E. Nelson, Seattle, have arranged to hold the annual convention of the Western Association of Retail Cigar Dealers at the Commercial Club on those dates.

Dealers from points as far east as Minneapolis and Duluth and from intermountain and Pacific Coast States will gather and talk over their business problems with manufacturers and salesmen from all parts of the United States. Mr. Nelson anticipates an attendance of at least 70 men.

The convention is regarded as vital to the trade which is in a troubled state, due to the change in revenue laws and size of packages brought about by the war. The dealers say that for their own protection and that of the public they must get together with the manufacturers and seek uniformity.

The Tacoma branch of the association, of which Mr. Alfred is president, will see that the visitors see the cantonment and all the points of interest about the city. The committee on arrangements is composed of Mr. Alfred, Howard Poppock, Frank L. Scobey, Fred Thiel, J. E. Cooksie and Tim Coughlin. Mr. Nelson is secretary of the national association.

DRAFT LAW UPHELD

By the United States Supreme Court—A Unanimous Decision—Chief Justice White the Spokesman.

WASHINGTON, January 7.—The Supreme Court today declared the draft law constitutional.

Chief Justice White, in handing down the decision on the nine cases against the draft law that had reached the Supreme Court, said the arguments of all the objectors were absolutely without merit.

"Our mind is unable to conceive that raising armies by draft is slavery and violates the Thirteenth Amendment," Chief Justice White said.

The decision of the court was unanimous.

Refuting the argument of the draft objector that Congress did not have the power to draft citizens, the Chief Justice said:

"As the mind cannot conceive an army without the men to compose it, on the face of it, the question that it does not give power to provide for such men would seem to be too frivolous for further notice.

"The grounds for opposition to the draft challenge the existence of all power," the Chief Justice said. "For a governmental power which can only be exercised provided the citizen consents to its exertion is in no substantial sense a power.

"We are unable to conceive," he continued, "upon what theory the exaction by Government from the citizen of the performance of his supreme and noble duty of contributing to the defense of the rights and honor of the nation as the result of a war declared by the great representative body of the people can be said to be the imposition of involuntary servitude in violation of the prohibitions of the Thirteenth Amendment; we are constrained to the conclusion that the contention to that effect is refuted by its mere statement."

The Chief Justice quoted historical incidents from the Norman Conquest down to the present day to show that in all just governments the idea of citizenship carried with it the obligation to render military service and the right of the Government to enfore that obligation if need be.

KEEPING OUT MINORS

Retailers in Mansfield, Ohio, Take Steps to Prevent Youths Under Age from Frequenting Cigar Stores.

The retail cigar dealers and pool room proprietors of Mansfield, O., held a meeting at the mayor's office recently, having been summoned to consider complaints which had been filed by C. H. Workman, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

The complaints on file specified that minors had been allowed to frequent cigar stores, and the object was to prohibit the youths of the city from spending their time in playing pool. The dealers were cited to the state law governing the conduct of pool rooms so far as minors are concerned. Mayor Lowrey read sections from the general code of Ohio, and the dealers present expressed themselves as being perfectly willing to go on record as favoring the prohibition of the minors frequenting their places of business.

In order to work out a plan which will have the desired effect, a committee of four was appointed to make suitable provisions, which will have for its object the preventing of boys loitering in the cigar stores, and from the same standpoint will be fair to the patrons who are of lawful age. The age limit was placed at 18 years, according to the state law, which will be rigidly regarded by all the cigar dealers in Mansfield. H. V. Downs, of the Smokehouse, Fred Wolfe of the Brunswick, Ben Pierce of the Crescent, and C. H. Workman were selected to draft regulations for the guidance of the dealers in properly conducting their places of business as bearing on the situation which has heretofore existed, regarding the frequentlng of the pool rooms by minors.

TOBACCO FOR CONVICTS

Georgia Law Makes It an Essential Part of the Prisoner's Ration—Judge Davidson's Decision.

According to Georgia law tobacco is a necessary part of the rations of a convict, and a weekly allowance must be supplied him. This is the decision of R. E. Davidson, chairman of the State Prison Commission, who has received requests from various counties of the State to be permitted to discontinue the purchase of the article, because of increase in price and the high cost of living generally.

Judge Davidson looked up the law on the subject and found that each convict who has been in the habit of using tobacco must be supplied with "one plug of good, sound tobacco, six-inch fours, or its equivalent," in his weekly ration.

"It upsets a man's nervous system to be deprived of a narcotic that he has been accustomed to," declared Judge T. E. Patterson, a member of the commission, "and renders him less capable of doing his work. It makes him dissatisfied with conditions about him."

It's all right to quit tobacco permanently, thinks the judge, for he did that himself, but to be without it for a short time is not good, he says.

WILL RAISE DEMURRAGE RATES.

To spur shippers and consignees in the expeditious delivery of freight, Director-General McAdoo has issued an order effective Jan. 21, whereby present demurrage rates are raised from $1 a day after two days, to $3, and $1 a day additional thereafter until a maximum of $10 is reached. Mr. McAdoo says: "I have fully considered the embarrassments of shippers and consignees on account of the scarcity of labor and the weather, the irregularity of transportation and the consequent bunching of cars. Nevertheless I am convinced that the total inconvenience will be far smaller than the hardship which our people as a whole are suffering from the undue tying up of railroad equipment."

KORN IS AS GOOD AS WHEAT

From wind swept Chicago to sun kissed Los Angeles, Al Korn is persona grata. To the cigar trade from Pittsburgh to the Pacific, he needs no introduction. Everywhere he is as popular as a Vega del Rey cigar. Among salesmen, he is a dignitary. Though as a tobacco stripper, he began his career, he is noted now for being "a swell dresser." Acclaimed as a man of ability and liberality, the famed representative of S. H. Furgatch & Co. can go from coast to coast and never escape recognition. Spoken of enviously, in connection with an expense account, he covers much territory and specializes in getting big orders. In Milwaukee where the white foam tops the amber beer, men whisper to each other concerning the millions of cigars Al Korn can sell. If he should stroll idly down a boulevard in St. Louis, pretentious tailors would follow him to obtain "ideas" concerning the latest New York style. In Kansas City, Omaha, St. Paul and Minneapolis, who can say how many friends he has? Yclept a good fellow in mile-high Denver and deemed a celebrity in unregenerate Butte, he gathers enconiums along the route until he reaches San Francisco. What they say about him there is censored for fear of exciting jealousy.

Al Korn can make cigars as well as sell'em. He made some, once. The first of the Boquet de Ada brand, they were. In doing so, he had a contest with Sol Furgatch. The two started to make 100 cigars. Korn constructed 38 while Furgatch fabricated 62. Deciding that selling, rather than manufacturing, was his forte, Korn scooted to Chicago and proceeded to take orders. He did so well that he has been taking orders from and for Furgatch ever since.

PRUDENT FINANCING

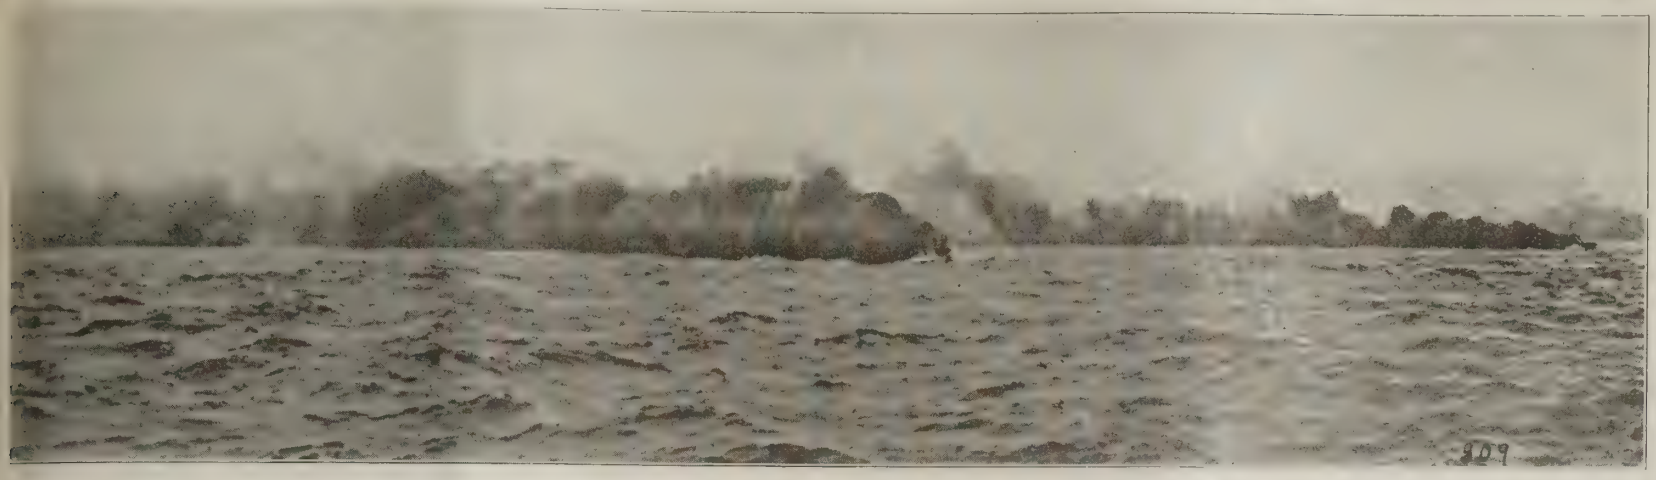
Stockholders of American Tobacco Co. Approve Recommendations Made by the Directors—Scrip Dividend.

At a special meeting of stockholders of the American Tobacco Co. on January 7, it was voted to create a new issue of $50,000,000 of B common stock. There is now in the treasury of the company slightly less than $60,000,000 of common stock unissued, and the new issue of "B" common stock is to be created from this issue. The new B stock will be without voting rights.

It was officially stated that there is no present intention of issuing any of the new "B" stock.

Beginning March 1 the American Tobacco Co. will pay its common stock dividend in scrip. Official announcement to this effect confirms the forecast made by the Wall Street Journal, three weeks ago.

The full financial plan, which includes the continuance of a 20% dividend, is contained in the following official statement: "This company now has outstanding $52,699,700 of 6% preferred stock, and $40,242,400 of common stock. An additional $59,757,600 of common stock was long since authorized, but has never been issued. The proposition before this meeting was that $50,000,000 of this unissued common stock be made common stock 'B,' entitled to the same dividends and with all the other rights as the issued common stock, except that of voting; this elimination of voting rights being in order not to disturb the present proportionate voting power as between the preferred and common stocks.



"The enormous increase in cost of materials, particularly leaf tobacco, and the great increase in volume of business, which amounted in 1917 to more than 27%, or more than $19,000,000 over the business of 1916, has made necessary the employment of much greater working capital, and to meet this need the company has borrowed $25,000,000.

"In order to provide for this obligation, the directors proposed to utilize the cash which would otherwise be paid out in dividends on the common stock. They believe that the present earnings of the company fully justified the present rate of 20% dividends on the common stock. They propose that, beginning with the dividend of 1918, the dividend upon the common stock should be paid in scrip, bearing interest at the rate of 6% per annum, interest payable semi-annually, and maturing in three years from March 1, 1918, and redeemable at maturity at the option of the holder, either in cash or common stock 'B' at par. Having fully cosidered the situation, the directors are of the opinion that this policy will result in meeting the financial requirements of the company, that it will conserve the interests of stockholders, that it is prudent and conservative, and they unhesitatingly favored its adoption.

"It may be added that the suggestion that the amount of common stock to be changed to common stock 'B' be fixed at $50,000,000, does not mean that anything approaching that amount is to be in any way issued, in connection with present or contemplated financing, or otherwise. The amount is fixed at $50,000,000, in order that the whole amount of authorized common stock, to wit, $100,000,000, be divided equally into two classes, common stock with voting rights, and common stock 'B' without voting rights of $50,000,000 each."

JEAN BART FACTORY BURNED.

Fire completely destroyed the Jean Bart cigar factory at 28 Howard street, New York, Friday. Oscar Friedman immediately obtained quarters at No. 108 Grand street and started work, Monday. It was a case of being prepared to do business quick.

When an Advertisement Doesn't Tell the Truth

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.

About a month ago I bought a certain store fix-re from a concern in Ohio, dealing by mail en-ely. They advertised this thing in a trade irnal, stating that it had four different operations, d also stating "guaranteed for life against all fects." I had seen the advertisement before ite a number of times, always stating the same ing. Another representation was that it would st so much per hour to run it by electricity.

I tested the apparatus when it arrived, and found not up to claim in several points. It really only s three operations instead of four, the fourth ing almost impossible to work. They sent me receipt for my money, in the upper part of which says: "Guaranteed against defects for six nths." And by actual test I find that the cost operating by electricity is two and a half times much as they said it was.

Please advise me whether I have any way of get-g my rights in this case. I had no particular rrespondence with these people; the thing I rchased was completely described in the adver-ement, and when I sent for it I ordered the one vertised in such and such a paper.

E. K. K.

There is an important legal principle involved this case, and in answering this inquiry I will scuss it for the benefit of whoever it may ncern. The principle is this:

To what degree is a merchant or manufac-rer responsible for statements which he ts in advertisements, catalogues, circulars d such matter regarding the quality or haracter of goods he is offering for sale?

The nutshell answer, though this will re-ire explanation, is that if he is making spe-ic statements regarding the quality or char-ter of his goods, which he knows the buyer ill probably rely on when he buys, his printed atements will be considered warranties and he ill be held bound by them. If he is simply dulging in the extravagant laudatory lan-age and opinion which every seller is per-itted to use without responsibility—up to a rtain point—then what he says is not a war-nty and he is not bound.

I extract this from a leading case:

> Descriptions or statements contained in written printed invoices or advertisements are not nec-sarily or presumably warranties; they are more roperly to be considered generally dealers' talk—d the burden is on the buyer to show that they eant more. It is a matter of common knowledge at dealers and traders make use of extravagant nguage in advertisements praising the quality of eir goods, and the buyer cannot rely upon such presentations and insist on them as warranties, less other facts and conditions are proven such are requisite in the case of verbal representa-ons.

Statements in an advertisement can very sily constitute warranties, when they are so ecific that the prospective buyer will naturally ly on them in making the purchase, or where ey are evidently intended as a warranty by the ller, or where they state material facts relative essential qualities of the thing advertised.

A very good case in point is that cited by this correspondent. The seller there put in his advertisement a complete description of his product. The advertisement was his salesman; the buyer will have to rely on it if he relied on anything. There is no doubt in my mind that the court would hold everything in that advertisement to be a binding warranty.

The same applies to all sales conducted by mail, where the description of the thing sold is conveyed through advertisements. In that, as in the above inquiry, all the talking is done by the advertisement, and therefore the talking must not mislead.

> From examination of all the cases it may be safely ruled that a sample or description in a sale note, advertisement, bill or invoice, is equivalent to an express warranty that the goods are what they are described or represented to be by the vendor.

Of course, no buyer can hold a seller responsible for misstatements in an advertisement which he didn't see till afterwards. There are cases where a buyer bought something that didn't turn out as he expected. He hadn't bought through an advertisement, but subsequently he found an advertisement that made misrepresentations about the article, and this he tried to turn to his own advantage. The court has always ruled that as he hadn't seen or relied on the fraudulent advertisement he could not bring it into his case.

Any seller can safely express his opinion in an advertisement without making himself liable as on a warranty. But he must make it clear that it is only an opinion. In one case a manufacturer advertised at $75 a patent store counter in these words: "Equal in quality of wood and workmanship to any counter sold by others at $125." A merchant bought one by mail, but found it wasn't as represented either in wood or workmanship and they had a law suit. The counter manufacturer said, "Oh, that was only my opinion," but the court said, "Not at all. You went far beyond mere opinion and made a positive express statement which went to the quality of the counter, and which you could not but know would be relied upon." The "opinion" was held to be a warranty, and the counter man lost his case.

Here are a few advertising expressions which courts have held were warranties, binding the advertiser:

An advertisement described a cooking utensil as "copper fastened." It was not copper fastened, but the seller endeavored to work out of it by pointing to another part of the advertisement, which said "to be taken with all faults." The court said the copper fastening was an express warranty.

In a piano catalogue it was stated "every piano warranted for five years." This was held to be an express warranty, without anything more.

A Pennsylvania man bought a wagon out of a mail order dealer's catalogue. It was No. 278, represented to have a certain kind of brake, and to hold so many people. The buyer found it wouldn't stand the strain of the number of passengers it was supposed to hold, and the brake wouldn't work the way the advertisement said it would. He rejected it and refused to pay, and the court said he was justified.

Notice one thing that runs through all these cases, viz., that the buyer must have relied upon the representations in the advertisement. That makes the law apply particularly to mail order advertising of any kind, where the buyer and seller never come in contact, not even through agents. And in my judgment, it does not apply anywhere near so strictly to cases where the advertisement was merely a bait to get a buyer to go somewhere and negotiate. For instance, a manufacturer advertises something in a trade paper, names his local agent and tells the buyer to go to see him and examine the article. The advertisement makes specific statements about the article, some of which are not true. The buyer goes to the local agency, sees the article, sees it demonstrated, tests it himself and talks at length with the agent. If the machine subsequently fails to make good all of the advertised representations, it would be exceedingly hard to convict the manufacturer, unless the agent in some way continued the misrepresentation. The court would likely hold that the buyer bought upon his own inspection and his own talk with the agent. In other words, he did not rely on the advertisement.

I think I should say to this correspondent that his remedy is to reject what he bought, notify the seller of his rejection and that the appliance is held subject to his order, and enter suit to recover his money.

An Associated Press report says that French tobacco and cigarettes are now obtainable in Paris only once each week, and even then during the space of but about thirty minutes. During that half hour the tobacconists' shops present about the same appearance as did the coal and wood yards during the fuel famine last winter. It takes from three to a half dozen policemen for each shop to keep waiting smokers orderly while the weekly supply is being dealt out and to pacify those that are still in line when the "No more tobacco" sign is hung out.

Embelished with Horseshoes and Wishbones

A Budget of Trade Information from Up-State

January 7, 1918.

"That illustrious old villain, General Expense, advances on our last line Surplus trenches like a 26-ton British tank!" howled an Albany dealer the other day. "And, just like the tank, this undefeated monster has five machine guns! Instead of being typed in the patterns of Colt, Lewis, Vicker, Browning, or Remington, these more effective weapons are better known as Rent, Help, Light, Heat, Incidentals. Then, too, they travel, tank-like, in companies of five, 20 to the battalion. For, with the numerous subdivisions of the Army of Disbursements, these overhead items even excel the tanks. Crushing everything in their path, these terrible brutes forever endeavor to conquer their natural born enemy, Net Profit. But N. P. is an artful dodger. With half a chance on an open battle front, assisted by his allies, Increased Prices and Reduced Sizes, perhaps the strategy of Net Profit will pull through after all! 'It's wan foine foight,' as Mr. Dooley remarks, 'an' moight th' bist mon win!'"

Right in line with this idea, the Cameron Tobacco Co., of Richmond, sends a revised price and size list under date of January 2nd. Their Eutopia Mixture is slightly reduced in weight, prices as formerly. Jefferson Mixture sizes and prices are both changed, the one downward, the other upward. Alex Cameron says, in passing, that tobacco, labor, supplies, and so on, have advanced 100 per cent. since the last list was issued one year ago.

From Schenectady comes another letter on this subject. It is written by Jonathan Levy & Co., the tobacconist-grocers, wholesale only. And it very politely, concisely, emphatically announces to the retail trade that, beginning January 1, all merchandise will be sold strictly one week's credit!

Terms of ten days net from manufacturers and supply houses have compelled the Levy firm to adopt this course. Their customers are likewise urged to eliminate delivery, and sell on a single cash basis.

Effect of this movement is almost immediately apparent. In Mechanicville, many retail merchants have assembled to decide what their future policy shall be. At the first meeting it was proposed that each member of a prospective retail association post $300. This will be used as a forfeit fund against those who persist in credit and delivery system.

Up in Whitehall similar action is imminent. Jones objected, persisting the plan was not feasible: "Why, if you do that, you'll drive all your old trade into the big chain stores, then both your business and your money's gone!"

Brown jumped up: "Well, Jones, in thirty to sixty days more my money will be gone anyway if this extended-time-credit-charity continues, so I guess I may as well retire from business on a cash footing, with what little money I've now got!"

Where is Watt? Not Mayor Watt, of Albany, but Boss Watt, of the Liggett & Myers' tobacco division. Since he removed from Albany to Utica last October the lower Capitol District hasn't seen much of him.

However, Watt's scouts are busy. Messenger Myer Azie is out somewhere in the wilds of Schenectady, Fulton, or Herkimer counties. He, and all the other L. & M. tobacco boys are working a 36-pound deal from jobbers' stocks. Five cent cigarettes count as 6 pounds, and 10 or 15 cent cigarettes go as 12 pound to the gross in this offer. As a bonus, 8 cans of Velvet are free.

Over in Penn Yan (New York State, though it does sound like China), a barber named Harry Morgan has been at the business 32 years. Ever since he was 18, Harry has been cutting hair. And he now figures some 200,000 straight and round cuts, Buster Brown and plain John Brown styles, as his present numerical record.

Some such extensive register as this is due Max Frumkin as a tobacconist. Max has a long list of years behind him as a Schenectady jobber and retailer.

But he has now cut out the retail. This has been sold to a Greek syndicate, who'll run the State street business at the same location, next the trolley terminal.

Hereafter, Max will devote his total time to wholesale. Two or three roadmen will cover Schenectady, Amsterdam and surrounding territory. And his coal business will automatically run itself for awhile at least. Or until warmer weather permits the railroads to bring in more of the $9.15 ton chestnut, which costs only $4.75 to Scranton consumers.

Inventory is now complete at the wholesale and retail departments of the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., Albany. After holiday business has been extremely quiet, the better times are hoped for with the anticipated above zero weather.

"Here I am again," greeted George Thompson, upon his return to the capitol District after a holiday vacation at his New York home. "All the boys of the Fatima department have reported back on the job, factories are busy, transportation is bad. And it's hard to get less than entire car-lot shipments through from New York and Richmond in less than eight to ten weeks just now. Albany is the sole spot in the greater Capitol section where such a consignment of six million cigarettes can be used in a capacity car-load. Other districts take considerably less, therefore deliveries are delayed in partial or mixed cars."

Uncle Bill Keeler has gone away. Seventy-five years ago he came to Albany. Seventy-five years he worked here, building up the most successful hotel-restaurant-cafe-cigar business in the district. And now he has gone!

Everybody liked the quiet old Sheriff. Born here March 23, 1843, he lived to die in Norfolk, Virginia, January 4, 1918.

He had recently gone south to his Virginia oyster beds to escape the severe cold weather. His health had been poorly for some months, though his rather sudden death was a tremendous surprise to those who knew him from Coast to Coast.

Starting trade in his eighth year, as a messenger boy for oyester sloops coming to this port, William H. Keeler acquired his first big round dollar on New Year's Day of '51.

From that very day to the date of his death the benevolent, plainly finished gentleman made more money than he could conveniently use. So he helped, in many and various ways, to assist those he had always known, who were less fortunate.

Two sons, John and Rufus; two daughters, Mrs. Sanford and Miss Grace, with his stepson Charlie Mann and five grandchildren, survive in the family circle.

Wednesday morning, January 2, 1918, anno mundi, there was a gatherin' of ye clan! Blanda Jordan, boss of the R. J. Reynolds Capitol District crew, blew his trumpet mightily, an' the laba-laba boys came a-runnin' from Welterveden an' Weehawken!

Inspection proved that every man had his blue berette cocked at the proper angle upo his bean, while his equipment of haversac contained the required implements of com mercial warfare.

Pencils, sharp, order books ready, vacatio forgotten, business on the job! Such was th report of the Prince Albert battalion pr paratory to its new year charge against th intrenched brigade of unsuspectin' jobbers a retailers.

Instructions were issued to the men in th ranks that a soft pedal must be placed upo Prince Albert and Camels. Railroads ar steamin' an' snortin', still the shipments ar short! Coal must be moved first, tobacco a cigarettes last!

And those dealers who were fortuna enough to have sufficient stocks of P. A. i 16 ounce glass and 8 ounce tin, may just a well know now as later that these sizes ar not only rare but practically off the marke Boss Jordan isn't sure, yet he believes th larger packages of the jimmy-brand will b off the slate entirely in a very short tim Material for glass and tin is in class wit Vichy water in the Sahara—impossible to g just now.

Thirteen cent tins of Albert, two-for-a quarter, are fairly numerous, though, whil Camel cigarettes in 20s are still selling for 1 an' 13 cents, with a Kid Wedge hump o nearly everything else in th' beautiful snow bound Mohawk-Hudson Valleys.

At last! Horseshoes an' wishbones! A in roses, per attached cards via florists an greenhousemen! Good Luck, Best Wishes

For the occasion was the g-r-a-n-d openin of M. J. Canaday's new cigar stand in th Ten Eyck Hotel, Albany. New Year's Da however, saw almost everything complet and in proper place. Moved from the sunse to the sunrise side of the large lobby.

After weeks and months of tantalizing de lays, the fixtures were finished eventually and the stock transferred. And such a stock

Call for anything you wish, sir, M. J. Cana day an' his faithful folk can supply it! Im ported? Yes, sir! Monterey, Romeo, Carc Jina, Bock, Manuel Garcia, Coronas. Or dc mestic Habana, perhaps? Garcia-Vega, Mar tinez, Webster, Solace, William the Fourth and the compatriots of these brands. Whil in domestic blends, sir, the Canaday case offer Admiration, Que Places, America Cabinet, Blackstone, with all their relation and connections!

Socialists and republicans, democrats an suffragists came. They got here January firs and, being senators, assemblymen, their wive and husbands, of course, the Ten Eyck wa the objective.

That is, the State Capitol with its nev legislative session was the direct cause o this pilgrimage from Mount Marcy and Man hattan. But, before the gang got through with the little shindig of Professor Shaw's or the 16th floor, every man in the crowd wh could smoke a smoke, was puffin' on one o M. J.'s segars or sigarets, else yonder mandu at ye portal refused to permit passage t mine tuan gusto!

"Like the yap I was," Irving Fulder de clared, "there I stood looking at the new women conductors on the street cars in New York! I went down to the lightless, coalless eatless town for my holidays, and I tell you honestly I had to simply stare at those war conductors gather in the nickels! They wear a uniform, with pants, just like a man, and the people down there don't pay any more at tention to them than they do the falling ash of their smokes.

"Surely," Irving proceeded, "the business around here is dead as a nail, but we look for improvement just so soon as father starts out on his territory in a couple of weeks. Meantime, the house of Fulder will continue to sel s many cigars as possible until Albany and vcinity recovers from the holiday relapse."

Along about the time Harry Lauder first me to America, before Lauder & Carnegie tok most of removable America over there, Clarence Russell made his initial trip to Scotlnd.

At that day and date George H. Russell, pp to Clarence, was interested in the Howard layn retail store, Maiden Lane and James sreet, Albany.

So Clarence went in to bid Howard goodye: "Look up my old friend Sandy Macherson, Clarence, when you arrive," urged loward, "and let me know how he is."

And Clarence, not being aware at the time iat Sandy MacPherson in Scotland was smilar to John Smith in the U. S. A., promied Howard he would faithfully perform the uty.

Germ-any had not then put the unterseebten on the trail of the Anchor Line, so Clarence eventually landed safely in Robert Burns' own country.

Going up the street, from wharf to hotel, friend who accompanied Clarence, spotted typical old Scotchman a-sittin' ne'er his oorway, smokin' a stubby Thomas Dorni, a ere inch or so afront of his fiery red whisers.

"Hello there, Sandy!" greeted the friend great joy, "How-areye? Glad I am to e ye agin, ye're lookin' gude t' th' eye! Be equainted with m'frien Clarence Russell, of ' States, o'er here on a little pleasure."

And the Scot appeared to be equally glad see both of the Americans, not forgetng to remind Clarence that he must remember old Sandy to his dear friend Howard ayn, of Albany.

To this day, however, Clarence Russell ispects that perhaps Dave Kinnear and loward Payn put over a Highland sketch, rearsed in the ancient corner cigar store, on im. For, he afterward discovered another andy MacPherson, in kilts or out, on nearly very little journey he made o'er th' moor hile lookin' at th' strange sights of th' yidisher iceland!

What fire didn't burn in Catskill on New ear night, the dynamite, used by the firemen in the Main street disaster, did destroy. ven Joe Jefferson's original Rip Van Winle theatre, Uncle Sam's Postoffice, and no nd of stores and dwellings went up in the 150,000 conflagration. About the only thing aved was a small stock of cigars in C. J. Hammer's place. And it was 12 below zero, oo!

"Can't get used to writing that figure ight," grinned A. C. Bente, as he changed ne 1917 dates on his day's orders of Fatimas, Chesterfields, Richmond Straight Cuts, and Piedmonts. "Anyway, our factories are ight weeks oversold on all Liggett & Myrs' cigaret brands, so I guess this here "8" our lucky numeral this year.

"Yes," he continued, "our two New York ity plants are making only a couple of ciaret packings at present. Girl help is exensive there, also hard to get. They earn ood money two or three days a week, then ay off 'til the cash goes. Result, not enough mokes for his highness, the American Genleman.

"Our new 1918 deal, by the way," Bente ent on, "is for Chesterfields. We're giving his combination cigaret case and dice cup, of lack leatherette, gilt and covered by the telecope top, with every sale of a 100 packet, nd an extra 20 bundle free in the outfit."

Down the river, at Kingston, about 1200 ands are busy in the three largest cigar lants there. At the American Cigar factory, pproximately 500 people are on the payroll. n the Fitzpatrick & Draper shop, almost 00 men and girls are working. And the G. V. Van Slyke & Horton concern employs nearly 500 more. Help is rather scarce in Kingston, everybody holding on to those they have, while fishin' for those the other fellow has!

Little cigars in the Capitol District are almost as difficult to find as coal and sugar. What few there are obtain retail prices like these: Prime Puffs, 18c.; Flexo, 17c.; Bengals, 16c.; Hoffman House Magnums, 18c.; Telonettes, 16c.; Between the Acts, 11 to 12c.; Piccadilly and St. Leger, the same; while all packets of former five-cent goods sell for 6c., new sizes of eights for 5c. And smokers shop for them as juffrouws do for ribbons!

"Once again I'm a free citizen," laughed former mayor J. W. Stevens, as he stood behind the breastworks at his State and Broadway store, Albany. His duties as Catskill Watershed Commissioner require only three or four days each week, so the desk at the old corner will resume relations with the Lord Mayor upon the original business basis. During the reception to Mayor-Elect Watt on New Year's Day, every visitor to the City Hall came away with a Lord Mayor cigar in his boca. Manager C. J. Shaxby reports the January inventory nearly off his hands, after a busy week or more at it.

"Wow!" yelled Eddie Englebrecht, "What do you think of this Fahrenheit weather? Here it is high noon, in the so-called warm rays of yonder sun, and it's still 3 below zero out there on that corner pole! And what's the consequence? Orders are dated a month ahead, there's no immediate business, I'm spending Fitzpatrick & Draper expense money! Alright! Keep it up! Let's have some F & D Perfectos for a hot smoke on a cold day! This thermometer will break before June if it goes on in this bug-house way!"

Theo. S. Moker was waitin' for a chap in the State street, Albany, financial district 'tother day. Along came Joking-Joe McElveney. "Looking for a job?" asks Joe, "For, if y'are, just stand here for me a half-hour in front of this bank—there's money in it!"

Some one who knows all about it has said that an ostrich can eat anything. Also, that the big bird thinks he is fully covered and protected when he buries his head in a sand hole!

That this must be so is further attested by the trade-mark of Otto Eisenlohr & Brothers, Philadelphia. Because they have their famous Cinco champ engraved on the firm's New Year card with a horseshoe in his mouth. And the very fact that the feathered-fellow hails from Phillie is evidence enough he has his head in a hole!

There are just two things, however, which will extricate the plumed hat-rack from his predicament. One of these things is the popularity of the Cinco. While the other item is the sincerity of the Greeting, which the house has mailed to every customer in the Capitol District.

"Just back from New York," confided Paul Wessels, "where all our road representatives put in three days at the annual conference of the M. A. Gunst Branch of the General Cigar Co. Did you get your notice of price change on Owls and White Owls? This advance puts the Owl in the $43 class, all unfilled orders being shipt at the new figure. White Owls will retail now at 7c., or 3 for 20c. Business is slow right now, as you're aware, but we're still 40,000 behind our local orders. Cigarmakers are shy, leaf is shootin'".

THE SMOKER.

J. Littman, formerly with the Martinez-Havana Co., now seeks a Tampa or Key West factory on a commission basis.

UNTIL THE WAR ENDS

High Officers of the Tobacco Corporation of America Will Serve Uncle Sam—The Big Company Makes Plans for the Future.

Willingness to fight, desire for active service in this war, notably has been shown by officers of the Tobacco Corporation of America. President William Ziegler, an eager volunteer, now is a First Lieutenant in the Ordnance Department. Walter S. Velie, the treasurer of the Company, is an Ensign in the Navy. William J. Demorest, the assistant treasurer, is a Lieutenant in the army. And from the office and factory forces, the volunteer enlistments in the army and navy were noteworthy.

During the war, the absence of important executives necessitates a re-assignment of high responsibility in the offices of the big company. Vice-President J. Curry Watson, the father-in-law of William Ziegler, will assume, for the time being, the duties of the presidency. G. W. Ziegler has been elected vice-president and made a director. Scretary G. H. C. Lichske will have additional work to do.

As before, Vice-President Max A. Kreielsheimer will supervise the manufacturing and selling. And there will be no let up in the company's activity. Frank Gleichman, Joseph Herzog, J. H. Dobbins, Frank A. Green, Joseph Lichtenstein, David Keith and P. Lederer, on the road for the Tobacco Corporation of America, are expected to develop business that will keep the factories operating to capacity.

La Sultana, the brand that the company made a phenomenal favorite, from coast to coast, in record time, has been advanced to the six cent class and is now known as La Sultana salute.

A new process, originated by Mr. Kreielsheimer (utilizing half long filler fashioned to prevent any particle of tobacco from getting into the smoker's mouth, when the end of the cigar is bitten off) gives added value to the popular brand. The boxes labeled La Sultana, "improved process, standard quality," contain cigars that appeal most favorably, in fact, they sell and repeat more rapidly than the nickel La Sultanas did.

Other brands that the Tobacco Corporation of America will feature during the coming years are Duke of Flanders, in three sizes, William Gillette in two sizes, T. A. C. selected smokers, Contest, in two sizes, and Little Flanders.

Though it is proposed to move the general offices of the company soon to Allentown, Pa., where the main factory and shipping department is located, the probabilities are that the executive board will continue having an office in New York.

EXCELLENT CIGAR

THINGS THEY DON'T FORGET IN CHICAGO

Looking Back Over 1917

CHICAGO, January 5.—Annals of 1917, in Chicago show a very remarkable, perhaps the most trying year the cigar and tobacco trade ever experienced. Prices soared to heights hardly dreamed of, before. A thousand things, of which labor troubles were not the least, added to the difficulties of manufacturers and dealers. Production was retarded, transportation delayed, big and vexatious strikes occurred, much happened to interfere with the regular transaction of business. Yet, sales in the aggregate, were the largest known.

Undiscouraged retailers opened numerous new stores. Great and rapidly acquired popularity was attained by several shade grown wrapped brands and today these mild havanas have a strong hold on the Chicago market.

Cigarette sales jumped forward by leaps and bounds. Chicago did amazingly large cigarette business.

Imported cigars increased in sales while clear havanas about held their own.

During the month of January, 1917, Chicago lost a very well-known cigar man, George W. Anderson, who for almost thirty years represented the jobbing house of Reid Murdock & Co. as cigar department manager and chief of the sales staff.

Ira Stover resigned from the sales force of Liggett & Myers during the month. Up to that time he had spent almost thirty-five years in the tobacco business always holding a position as sales manager.

The old established importing firm of C. Jevne & Co., which went into bankruptcy in 1916, was finally wound up by the creditors. C. Jevne & Co. were numbered among the largest importers and dealers in fancy groceries in the Middle West.

John Mante became manager of the Monroe Cigar Co. Harry Allen, who previously held this position, resigned and withdrew from the cigar trade.

Ed. Wodiska entered the firm of Salvador Sanchez & Co.

Grommes & Elson, manufacturers of "Ben Bey" cigars, dispensed with their sales force. This order let loose several good cigar salesmen who quickly connected with other houses.

February witnessed the passing of one of the best known cigar salesmen in the United States, Michael Rosenfeld, who represented Salvador Rodriguez for almost twenty-five years. "Mike," as he was known to everybody, was 72 years of age. His son William took over the territory shortly after his father's death.

Another death that caused a lot of sadness was that of Ralph Hamburger a partner in the Clayton Cigar Co., who died on February 7. Ralph Hamburger had been in the cigar business for many years and no man was better schooled in retailing than he.

Dan Dowling, who represented M. Melachrino & Co., also passed away during the month.

Sid Lowenstein resigned his position as city salesman with the San Alto Cigar Co. to become a partner in the firm of Lopez Garcia & Co.

As the month was closing G. W. Faber, Inc., announced to the trade that the house had secured for distribution in the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and part of Illinois La Flor de Cuba brand which formerly had been handled by Best & Russell Co.

March saw the passing of two prominent cigar men, Charles Voltmer, a popular retailer, and A. H. Hoefer, a salesman known to everybody throughout the Middle West.

Harry L. Harris surprised the trade on March 24 by announcing he had resigned as general salesman for C. Waldbott & Co. and had connected with Harris-Schwarz Co. of New York to represent them throughout the Middle West.

Anderson, Thorson & Co. incorporated to operate a fancy grocery and cigar store. The incorporators formerly were connected with C. Jevne & Co.

Cliff George resigned from the sales force of the Havana-American Co. to again represent his first love the jobbing house of J. & B. Moos.

The Rex Window Adv. Co. of New York opened a Chicago office at 500 South Wabash ave.

The Palmer House Invincible a big seller locally was withdrawn from the market.

Joe Feiger a cigar man formerly of Milwaukee became manager of the Schulte chain of stores. Feiger took the place of Stanton Harris who left Chicago to make his headquarters in New York.

Walter Bloch for years connected with Leopold & Mergentheim resigned and entered business on his own account. He has one of the largest private box trades in Chicago.

I. Briskin moved from 516 South Halsted street to larger quarters in the loop at 167-169 West Lake street.

The first large failure of the year was that of H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. who operated seven large restaurants. They did a very large cigar business. Liabilities were placed at $500,000 and assets at $325,000.

W. P. Mussey & Co., of 67 West Madison street, bought the business of W. S. Fenner & Co. of 11 West Monroe st.

April saw the sales force of Ruhstrat-Cowley & Co. hard at work on the Mozart brand which E. M. Schwarz & Co. had placed in their hands for distribution.

The McLean Drug Co., owners of the Central Drug store chain, increased its capital from $100,000 to $500,000.

Morris Willner, salesman for the house of Grommes & Ulrich, was taken by death.

The jobbing house of I. Briskin took on Banderos of E. M. Schwarz & Co. Best & Russell Co. were its former distributors.

George Smith resigned from the sales force of the E. H. Gato Cigar Co.

Fred Steenbock of the Havana-American Co. several years away from the Chicago trade returned to work La Preferencias. He made regular calls during the year.

L. C. Widduck, formerly salesman for Berriman Bros., decided to enter the retail field. He bought out the old established business of H. R. Swezy at 116 North La Salle street and now conducts a large jobbing business in addition to his retail trade.

Charles K. Link resigned as manager of the Inter-Ocean Building store of Schmerhom and embarked in the retail business with Chas. Abraham at 51st and Prairie ave. as Abraham & Link. Later in the year they sold out and Link returned to his former position.

In April Albert Breitung, Chicago's largest independent retail and chain store owner, leased for a number of years the store at the southeast corner of La Salle and Monroe streets in the Borland Building. This store is one of the best cigar locations in Chicago today.

The La Kurba Cigar Co. of Chicago and Benton Harbor, Mich., increased its capital from $20,000 to $75,000.

Ruhstrat Cowley & Co. gave up the distribution of the Alexander Humboldt brand.

Adolph Myers, a well-known salesman, passed away on May 19 after a long sick spell. He was one of the best known men that ever carried the grip and his death was a shock to everybody connected with the Chicago trade.

On May 25 sorrow came again when Martin Hensel passed over the great divide. He was 64 years old and for over 30 years he represented the J. C. Dill, selling Dill's Best and other brands of tobacco.

T. W. Clayton, of the Clayton Cigar Co., opened his new store at the southwest corner of State and Van Buren streets early in May. Best & Russell Co. formerly occupied this location.

Peter J. Reinhart withdrew from the firm of E. G. Bennett & Co. to enter the paper business in St. Paul on May 1.

Mi Lola cigar factory of Milwaukee opened a Chicago office with Jos. Loeser in charge. Mi Lola's which had been jobbed formerly by Thorwart & Roehling were made an open brand and sold direct.

Several strikes in cigar factories took place during the month.

F. H. Peterson became the representative in the Middle West for S. Palo & Co. of New York. He made a great showing of the Palo brand in a short time. Palos are distributed by Thorwart & Roehling.

Schmerhorn, Inc., opened a new store at the northeast corner of Dearborn and Monroe streets, a location that had been occupied by the "United" for many years.

Julius Herschman sold his store to his brother and retired from the cigar business to deal in a novelty line. The Herschman store at 234 East 58th street is one of the finest on the south side.

Thirteen members of the local Cigar Makers Union were indicted and held to the grand jury on conspiracy charges growing out of strikes.

Julius Fernbach & Co., makers of Cyrilla clear Havana cigars, launched their shade wrapped Baron Forbes brand on the Chicago market.

Walter Tobin opened a new store on Washington street in May.

Another store to open was that of Thorsen & Co. who had filed papers of incorporation in March.

Federal Judge Landis confirmed a composition of settlement of the bankrupt firm of H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. whereby the creditors were to receive 33⅓% in notes due in three years and 66⅔% in common stock of Kohlsaat & Co. a corporation that was formed to take over the bakery end of the business.

McNeill & Higgins Co., cigar jobbers and wholesale grocers, took over the distribution of the Apropo brand, made by Ruy Suarez & Co., of New York. Prior to this Apropos were controlled here by the Steuben County Wine Co.

S. R. Poe, a well-known salesman, covering part of the Chicago trade and points in the Middle West for Berriman Bros., resigned and entered the talking machine business.

Libenfeld Bros. worked a big advertising deal on La Azora cigars during the month. Large ads were carried in all the daily papers and the consumer if he bought 5 La Azoras and was not satisfied with their smoking quality could redeem the bands and get his money back.

July started with a really interesting bit of news, when the trade heard that Wm. M. Best, Jr., of Best & Russell Co. would succeed Alfred Esberg as vice-president of the General Cigar Co. with headquarters in New York.

The cases against the members of the Cigar Makers Union who were indicted were dismissed.

Art Goodman, liquor and cigar salesman, who was connected with the wholesale house of Hannah & Hogg, passed away during the month.

Another well known man taken by death was Louis T. Hiller of the leaf house of Hiller & Kollenburg.

Sam Zuckerman, pipe salesman, withdrew from M. Linkman & Co., pipe manufacturers, and connected with Wm. DeMuth & Co.

Nick Arial resigned as Middle West representative of Lincoln Bros., manufacturers of First Consul and Monte Cristo brands.

The Brevoort Hotel was sold by Hannah & Hogg to L. R. Adams of Chicago and E. U. Matthews of Cleveland.

Fuller-Morrison Drug Co. took on the distribution of the Prince Hamlet brand made by Bayuk Bros. The deal was for the retail drug trade. I. Briskin took on Prince Hamlet for the cigar trade.

Clark Cutler, representing Alvarez, Mendez & Co., placed the Alexander Humboldt brand with the following jobbers: P. J. Rubey, Sam Bloom and Chas. Barker Co., who cover the trade outside of the loop. James Sheridan was engaged as salesman to work through these houses.

August saw another cigar jobbing firm enter the field. Iwan Ries & Co. opened at 104 North 5th ave. Mr. Ries for many years was the partner of Louis Neuman in E. Hoffman & Co. A full line of pipes were stocked by Ries & Co. who aim to feature smokers articles to the trade.

Harry Pethick entered the box business for himself at 902 Heyworth Bldg.

Walter Tobin & Co. gave up their store at 24 East Monroe street and opened a large cigar department in the fancy grocery house of Stanton & Co. at 30 West Washington street.

Jacob Berolzheim entered the trade again with offices in the Kesmer Building, catering only to the box trade. He used to operate the well known Horseshoe Cigar Co.

A big surprise late in the month was the news that I. Briskin, of I. Briskin & Co., large downtown jobbers, had disappeared. Trustees were appointed to continue the business.

The Chicago factory of the Havana-American Co. was closed for the second time during the year on account of labor troubles.

The Schmerhorn, Inc., chain of stores added to their stock the La Sultana brand.

"Bob" Delaney, a cigarette and tobacco salesman known to everybody, resigned his position as manager of the sales force in the Middle West of the Standard Tobacco Co., which he represented for 5 years. He joined the sales force of Schinasi Bros.

Walter Sloman, who represented the Hansel and Gretel factory for several years in this market, resigned to become representative here for Mendel and Co.

Lemuel Lemuel, for nine years manager of the Old Colony building cigar store of Albert Breitung's chain, passed away.

September was a month of ups and downs. The increase cost of goods made the dealers change all retail prices.

The Federal Cigar Co. incorporated for $15,000.

Hiram Wiltse, a 33rd degree Mason and a man well known to the tobacco trade of Chicago for a great many years, returned to the field as manager of store number 12 of the firm of Albert Breitung.

Frank Patton & Co., who had represented Bayuk Bros., of Philadelphia, in the Middle West, resigned and joined the sales force of Francisco Torre & Co., of Tampa.

Otto Lormatsch celebrated his fourteen years of service with Albert Breitung. He started in as errand boy and worked up to the position of manager of the Rookery Building store.

S. Anargyros placed on the market its latest smoke "No. 25A," a cigarette that sold at 35 cents for 10.

The Chicago Daily News started its smoke fund for the boys in France. The United Cigar Stores Co. in all of their 105 stores in the city acted as agents for the fund.

Ramon Dobler on his return from a visit to New York advised the trade that he had taken on the states of Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, part of Ohio and Kentucky in connection with his Illinois for Park & Tilford territory.

Albert Breitung closed a lease for the store at the southwest corner of La Salle and Washington streets. This store was for many years the headquarters of the old established firm of Leopold & Mergentheim, who gave up after the death of both partners. Breitung opened this location on September 5.

E. C. Frisch came from Fort Worth, Texas, to become city salesman of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co.

James Sheridan resigned from the sales force of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co. He connected with Spector Bros.

The Bankers Special, a 25-cent cigarette, made by Theo. Photiades, was placed with the city trade.

Jos. H. Weiss, the owner of J. H. Weiss & Co., who run two retail stores, entered the candy jobbing business with Clarence May as the May-Weiss Co.

Thorwart & Roehling placed with their trade a new brand called Thorwart's Seven Centers made by E. Popper & Co.

During the month several large loop accounts took on the Romeo-Garcia brand of Harris Schwartz Co. of New York. The sales on this well known brand have increased each month.

A big failure took place when the Colonel Buffet went to the wall with liabilities of $50,000 and assets around $8,000.

Another failure that caused much talk occurred when J. E. Stove closed his store at 529 West Madison street. Stores liabilities were $7,000.

McNeill & Higgins Co. closed a very important deal when they secured control of the imported Eden brand of cigars.

The Brown Cigar Stores Co., owning a chain of stores on the north side, signed a lease for a store at 16th and Michigan ave., on the south side for a term of fifteen years.

Mrs. Briskin, wife of I. Briskin, who disappeared some weeks ago, had her son Jack and Sam M. Grossman appointed receivers for the business of I. Briskin.

A new size of Tom Moore cigars, called Royals, was placed with the trade by Clarence Hirschorn & Co., Chicago's distributors of the Tom Moore brand.

Ernest McKenzie was successful in placing El Roi Tan cigars at the Post Exchange in Camp Grant, Fort Sheridan and the Great Lakes Naval station.

Samuel Gessler, head of the Havana Importing Co., was appointed by Mayor Thompson a member of the Library Board of Chicago. This was the first time the honor was ever given a Chicago cigar man.

The striking cigar makers of the Havana-American Co. returned to work.

George Cameron, who was connected with Best & Russell Co., resigned to become general manager of P. J. Rubey & Co.

Robert Burns brand of cigars were increased in price. New sizes were put on the market and the three for 25-cent size taken off the list.

The Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers' Association was organized.

Local jobbers got together and formed the Wholesale Tobacco Association, Inc. Louis Neuman, of E. Hoffman, was elected president. Its object was to better conditions in the jobbing business. The board of directors comprised Carl Sanders, of Clarence H. schorn & Co.; Arthur Simpson, of Best Russell Co.; John Morrison, of Ryan & R. phael Cigar Co., and R. Ruhstrat, of Ruhstr Cowley & Co.

November found business in poor shap The increasing prices demoralized things.

With the starting of the month the first b selling 5-cent cigar to go up was the we known Bachelor that advanced to $44. It w followed by the San Felice brand, which i crease in price to $43. Many other big selle went into the 6-cent class.

The tobacco funds for the boys at the fro and in the different camps reached large t tals as the month drew to a close. Th Tribune, Herald, Best & Russell Co., Unit Cigar Stores Co., A. Schulte and the Da News turned in many thousands of dolla which was exchanged for smokes and fo warded to the front.

Wm. A. Vohauer & Co. advised the tra that their private brand, S. & W., and the S lome cigar, jobbed by them, had advanced a was a 6-cent seller.

E. Regensburg & Sons advanced the pri of their Admiration brand and discontinu some sizes.

Another firm to send out notices advancir prices was the Harris-Schwarz Co., of Ne York, who have a large sale here on the mild Havana "Romeo-Garcia" brand.

The Harmon Cigar Co., which entered th retail business during the summer, opene store Number 3 at 115 South Dearborn stree

The Independent Drug Co. opened sto Number 11 at 55th and Halsted street.

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. put ne packings of Piermonts on the market ar Chesterfields packed in packages of 16 eac Home Runs were packed in packages of 20 retail at 10 cents.

McNeill & Higgins Co. took on for distribu tion the Henry the Fourth brand of the Pr ferred Havana-Tobacco Co.

The International Cigar Makers' Union America settled their differences with I Kurba Cigar Co., of Chicago and Benton Ha bor, Mich. The union fought the La Kurl firm for four years and and forced them move their large factory to Benton Harbo

December found things picking up and th dealers all in better spirits. Having becom used to increased prices consumers becam accustomed to "the odd cent."

Dealers were advised that the few wel known 5-cent brands that had not gone will advance during January. These brand being El Proposo, Owls and Tom Keene which went to 6 cents, and White Owls to cents.

One of our old and highly respected dealer Simon Lichtenstein, passed away Decembe 9. He was the owner of two downtow stores.

As the month drew to a close Steel Wedeles Co. announced that their cigar de partment would be run separate from the large wholesale grocery business, startin with the new year, and that no grocery sales men in the future would book orders fo cigars.

Joe Cowley, who retired from Ruhstra Cowley & Co., signed up to represent the ciga manufacturing house of Grommes & Elson.

Paul Alberty, a very popular cigar sales man, surprised the trade with the news tha on January 1 he would forsake the cigar field Alberty for a number of years represente the New York house of Frederick Fleishma Co.

Another surprise came when Bob Delane left the sales force of Schinasi Bros. on De cember 1 to go into the chemical business.

The United Cigar Dealers Co., jobbers o the Cyro brand, gave away five $50 Libert Bonds to the five dealers who turned in t them the most Cyro bands.

The Pequot Brings Manila Cigars to America

In 1817 the American ship Pequot sailed from the Philippine Islands with the first Manila cigars for the United States, arriving at Salem, Mass., in July, 1818. The record of the Pequot's adventures together with the description of her cargo is contained in an old letter written by a Salem merchant, Saltonstall. Of the Manila cigars he wrote:—

> "Manilas are of a style approved by Spaniards who excel in knowledge of cigars. They burn handsomely and have a flavor very agreeable. A man may smoke many during a day and not be surfeited or made ill."

The character of Manila tobacco has not changed since then. The quality of cigars has improved and the quantity imported into the United States is counted in the hundred millions.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., January 4.—Severe winter weather has prevailed largely during the week, but stripping has proceeded upon the farms where the bulks were not permitted to become frozen too hard. It appears more of the crop is ready for delivery in the northern sections than the southern counties, for several firms have already started warehouse handling there with stock on hand sufficient for steady operation. Some receiving is also under way in the lower section, but only one or two warehouses have started warehouse operations yet. H. T. Sweeney received a few lots on Wednesday for Cullman Bros., who have received at other points during the week. Packers are beginning to wonder if the car shortage will interfere with the concentration of their purchases from outside delivery points and what effect it may have during the handling season, provided their tobacco cannot be forwarded at the time set for delivery, for they generally receive directly in cars at such points.

The market for cured leaf brings no new features.

There are plenty of orders on hand for shipments out of storage warehouses, but little is moving because of rail facilities on eastern connections.

The Bentley warehouse, No. 9, owned by Rose & Wobbe, of New York, has recently been sold to E. M. Hubbell.

M. H. Bekkedal has secured control of the tobacco warehouse at Cashton, Wis., which the General Cigar Co. had leased for some years. This adds another link to the chain of warehouses the Rosenwald-Bekkedal firm operates in the Vernon county section, about a dozen in all.

C. E. Shannon, after being with the General Cigar Co. in charge of their Wisconsin business for twenty-one years, has resigned his position, to take effect July 1. He will be succeeded by his brother, A. B. Shannon, of Portage, as the firm's western representative.

NOT FORGOTTEN IN CHICAGO

During the month McNeill-Higgins Co. started their selling campaign of the Eden imported cigars. They also announced that they had discontinued the Apropo brand, which they worked for the past year.

An important deal was closed by the Mendelsohn Co., of Cleveland, with the jobbing house of Thorwart & Roehling, who were appointed as distributors of the Paramount brand of cigars.

G. A. Johnson, who had been cigar manager for the wholesale house of Franklin MacVeagh & Co., resigned as the month closed.

Omar and Lucky Strike cigarettes came into the market in their new packages of 16 cigarettes, selling at 10 cents and 15 cents.

During December downtown dealers found a big sale on the latest offering from the Harris-Schwarz Co. factory of New York. The brand was the Romeo-Garcia, packed in Boite nature boxes of 10 cigars.

P. Lorrilard, through their Chicago office, put out the finest cigarette windows ever seen here. The brands featured in these displays being Murads and Egyptian Deities.

The cigarette factories flooded the market with holiday packings that sold well. Among the finest seen were Condax, Benson & Hedges, Phillip Morris, Egyptian Deities, Murads, Moguls, Pera, Pall Mall, Omar, Lucky Strike, London Life, Helmar and Turkish Trophies. The demand greatly exceeded the supply, and at Christmas time they were very hard to get.

Don't overlook the most remarkable sal record ever established by a new cigaret Lucky Strike, which came on the market he ten months ago. Today it is the second lar est seller in this city, and while the number cigarettes contained in the package is le than formerly they have not lost any of th popularity.

I. Briskin, the jobber, who disappeared August, was located in December in Los A geles suffering from mental troubles.

Lucius Berdan, of Berdan & Co., Toled O., passed away at the Auditorium Hot Much mystery was attached to his death.

Seth Laycock joined the sales force of Rul strat-Cowley Co. Laycock had been up this time general sales representative of t J. C. Neuman Cigar Manufacturing Co., Cleveland.

Dealers are advised that new sizes of Roi Tans will be out during January.

Bert Cunningham resigned from the sal force of the Best & Russell Co. to becon sales manager for Henry Straus, of Cinci nati.

As the year came to an end the few remai ing well-known brands that had not gone u in price were raised. These included Cuest Rey, Frats, El Talento and Perfecto Garcia.

PROFIT NOT PROPORTIONATE TO OUTPUT

Fit in Cigar Production Tampa Made a Splendid Showing in 1917—Manufacturers All Busy Making Plans—Cuesta Returns from Cuba—Santaella Will Do a Larger Business —Tampa Hopes to Build Many Ships.

Tampa, January 6.—Manufacturers hre finished 1917 with an output rord of 357,408,602 cigars to their edit, this being an increase of 44,-00,000 over the record of 1916. The aount paid into Uncle Sam's treasry through the internal revenue ofe was $1,314,911, while customs col-tions totalled $1,959,986. From an ctput standpoint the record by far as the best in Tampa's history. Yet w of the manufacturers admit havig made any money. In mapping out te campaign for the present year the nufacturers are doing everything ssible to meet the increased cost materials and war tax without placig too heavy a burden upon the alers and consumers. There is ttle concert of action in the matter making increases, however, it is id.

Matthew W. Berriman of Berriman os., has been ill several days. His lment is not of a serious character, wever.

A. L. Cuesta of Cuesta, Rey & Co., turned recently from a trip to Cuba. "he year has been a big one with us om an output standpoint," said Mr. uesta, "but, as is known, conditions the industry are anything but satfactory. I hope some changes will recorded during the year that will ove beneficial to all."

A. Santaella, head of A. Santaella Co., is in Tampa mapping out the 18 campaign with Manual Alvarez, e resident manager. Mr. Santaella, hose success with the Optimo brand as for years the talk of the trade, expects to greatly increase his output during the year.

Archie Goehring, western manager for Balbin Bros. Inc., is in Tampa from Salt Lake City.

That Tampa is to be greatly benefitted from war preparations is becoming increasingly evident. Reports from Washington indicate that the Naval Base Commission is certain to name the city as the site for the proposed Gulf naval base, which means an expenditure of millions, and efforts are now being made to secure the big steel shipbuilding plant which the Shipping Board proposes to erect on the South Atlantic or Gulf Coast. Preparations have about been completed by the Oscar Daniels Company of New York, for the construction of ten steel steamships, while the Williams Shipbuilding Co. is preparing to build five steel ocean-going tugs and five steel barges.

William H. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, a company of which is producing the picture, "The Birth of a Race," stated while in the city this week that he proposed to buy a large tract here and establish a permanent studio. It is understood that Mr. Sherrill proposed to buy the Sulphur Springs tract, on which the company is now working, at a cost of about $250,000.

For six weeks Tampa, with the rest of the country, has been suffering from cold weather, the intensity of which was increased by the blizzard which recently struck the Atlantic Coast.

A SOLDIER'S LETTER

Private John J. Kelly, Machine Gun ompany, 165th U. S. Infantry, writes is family that New York's first regi-ent in France is better off now than it as at Camp Mills. The organization is ell liked by the French. Kelly mentions e mythical battle in Flanders, which a rench newspaper invented as a co-pli-ent to the American Expeditionary orces.

"Somewhere in France, November 20, 917.—We are quartered in a little town f about 50 houses, up in the garrets and barns. You should have heard the unch roar when they saw the places—ecause, believe me, they were not very lean. But we weren't in very long until e had them clean and homelike, and ow we are as well off as ever we were camp; in fact, I think we are better ff. The food is just as good as ever, xcept a little short on bread, but the ooks have not had a chance yet.

"We were some tired bunch when we ot here, and we were darn glad to get rest. We have had no drill for four ays and most of us are sleeping our eads off. Poor Bob Holmes hasn't had ny rest yet. He is on a detail at some ther town and hasn't even arrived yet, ut I guess he will get his time off.

"'Seeing France from a box-car,' we called it. We didn't get to Paris and I don't think we ever will.

"The trip over was uneventful and we didn't care whether we got 'hit' or not. We had a colored regiment on the same boat with us. We had them jigging for us at our vaudeville shows. Yes, we ran a show every night, even in the war zone and they were pretty good, too.

"We are near enough to the firing line to hear them once in a while when the big guns get going. France surely got an 'awful kick.' It will take them a long time to get over it, but they are battling along. Every inch of ground is cultivated, even the mountain sides. The French people like us all right.

"I have just spent the last four hours washing clothes, and it was some job, believe me. I hope they are clean, but I cannot find that out until they dry. Send some chocolate candy in bars. That is the best way. Also some 'Edgeworth' and 'Bull Durham' tobacco, lots of it, and some 'Zigzag' cigarette papers.

"By the way, the American boys who are in the 'fight' are showing them a thing or two. There was a position that the English and French had been trying to take for two months, and the Yankees came along, scratched their heads and took the whole works in three days. The fatalities are very light, and most of them are caused by the fellows being overanxious."—New York Sun.

Six Cent Cigar Reigns in San Francisco

Pacific Coast Bids Farewell to Most Nickel Smokes—Important Men Attend Conference of Judell Sales Force—Factory Representatives find Traveling Less Convenient Than Formerly—Cantonment at Camp Fremont an Assured Fact —Other Items of Interest.

San Francisco, January 2.—The King is dead, long live the King! Midst scenes of revelry and joy or silent, watchful, prayful devotion, at midnight the last day of last month the bells of San Francisco tolled their farewell to the 5-cent cigar of standard make and size. The King, which has ruled in the thoughts of so many men of this city, had passed away, and in its place appears a lusty youngster, the Six-Center. At once he was hailed as king and his faithful subjects are earnestly hoping that his reign may be as long and as happy as his predecessor. There are some "Bolshevikis" who are inclined to rebel at the rule of the new king, but they are not organized, and the better class of the citizens have gone over to the new ruler, and wholesaler, retailer, jobber and commission man are giving him their wholehearted support. With this strong backing it is believed that the malcontents will be held in check and that the new rule will be a happy one. For weeks past the new heir to the throne has been getting support among the former friends of the 5-cent cigar, but with the closing of the old year the Owl, Rocky Ford, Bandero, Ruskin, R. B. and the S. & W. went over to the ranks of the 6-center and save for a few small sizes and some Manila cigars San Francisco is now on the 6-cent basis.

For the past two weeks the city has been full of cigar salesmen, who have come in from the road to enjoy a well-earned vacation and talk over plans of a new campaign. Today saw an outpouring of the knights of the grip towards the interior, the rich, fertile valleys of the State and the great territory to the north and south. Some anxiety is felt among the salesmen over the possibility of the Government taking off many of the local trains and upsetting their schedules. The announcement that the Pennsylvania Railroad had discontinued, at Government suggestion, over a hundred trains, makes the salesmen fear that changes of the running time of the Pacific roads may hang them up in small places where there is little or no business for a longer time than their business justifies. Like the entire trade, this matter is on the knees of the gods. But in these unsettled times a man must worry, so why not worry over the trains operated under a new management.

The local cigar and tobacco distributors are rejoicing over the announcement that a large cantonment is positively to be located in the neighborhood of San Francisco. The camp at Camp Fremont, down the peninsula from San Francisco, is now an assured fact. Between 30,000 and 40,000 men are to be stationed there, and the cigar men feel that this means that many more possible customers at their door step.

H. L. Judell & Co. have adopted a new method of handling their business for the present year. On the last Saturday of the old year they called together their salesmen in convention and had a general talk. Among the speakers were Milton Esberg, vice-president of the General Cigar Co.; Ed Cohen, advertising man, and W. W. Richards, of the sales force of the same company. Mr. Esberg spoke of the manufacturing problem, which comes to the cigar makers, Mr. Cohen outlined an advertising campaign and Mr. Richards spoke of sales problems. Harry Green explained the Manila cigar situation, especially as it bears upon the Fighting Bob, which the salesmen are pushing, and Arnold Pollock told of the bright future of the In-B-Tween. Milton Glass, Fred Peterson, Mannie Cohen, Harry Sklute and Milton Smith of the Judell sales force were present. They became so enthusiastic that each man took a voluntary allotment to sell so many cigars during the present year, and the home office, not to be outdone, promised a substantial bonus to all who made good on their allotment. The boys have all started off on their trips enthusiastically determined to get that bonus.

Charles Webster McCormick, of the Y. Pendas & Alvarez, had hoped to be present, but he was called to New York before the convention met. He sent a greeting to each member of the sales force in the shape of a box of choice Webster cigars.

J. Rinaldo has been appointed distributor of the Glad cigar, which is now selling for 6 cents.

La Confession, formerly 10 cents, has been advanced to the two for a quarter class in this market. The Van Dyck has been advanced to 11 cents.

Sam Isreal reports that he did a wonderful business in Cardinet's candies for the holiday trade.

Major Burrows is well satisfied with his new headquarters in the Santa Marina building, and says that it is better adapted to his needs in the distribution of the Jose Lovera Co. and E. M. Schwarz & Co. lines.

Trade and the War

Few people are so unreflecting as to believe that business can really go on "as usual" when the country is engaged in a great war, which takes millions of men from the ranks of labor and requires millions more to keep the armies supplied with equipment and subsistence.

The idea that the person who spends $100 or $1 needlessly, instead of lending it to the government, thereby enables some other person to lend it to the government, and so helps more than by lending it himself, is made absurd by the mere statement. It is evident that the more the original sum is passed around, and the greater the number of people who must be paid for their services out of it, the smaller will be the remainder which can possibly reach the Treasury. The sum cannot possibly increase and is constantly diminished.

"We take it," says the publicist of the National City Bank of New York, "that most of those who have shown concern about the effects of the plea for economy have been pleading for time for business to readjust itself from peace conditions to war conditions, in order that a period of disorganization and confusion might not intervene. In all discussion of the subject we have recognized this plea and emphasized the desirability of having the government assume the task of reorganizing the industries. But we have also recognized that with employment complete, wages high and general prosperity throughout the country, trade was bound to be in heavy volume, despite all that might be said for economy. Such has been the case, and probably will continue to be. The impulse to spend and habit of spending do not yield readily to mere economic argument."

However, now that the holiday trade season is past, and the critical state of the industrial situation and its relation to our war preparations is more apparent than ever, perhaps there will be more general recognition of the sober truth that every day lost in organizing the industrial forces of this country behind the army means peril to the allied cause, delay in getting our army into effective action, and prolongation of the war with all that means in loss of life and treasure.

CIGAR DEALER IN MANDAMUS PROCEEDINGS.

In an endeavor to force the city trustees of Porterville and city marshal Thomas Monroe especially, as license collector and issuer, W. H. Tullos, who has been operating a pool hall and cigar store at 211 Main street, Porterville, Cal., has filed a suit for a writ of mandamus in superior court. Tullos was refused a license recently by the city marshal on instructions from the city trustees on the grounds that he had been conducting a resort contrary to the laws of the city, county and state. He plans to fight the ordinance under which his license was refused and further demands damages in the amount of $500.

Courtesy Pays 500 Per Cent.

L. Friesner, a salesman in the United Cigar Store in the Flatiron Building, is an optimist, and he has a hobby, that of passing out a kind word and a smile whether a man buys fifty dollars worth of cigars or asks for two nickels for a dime. He believes that the average man will respond readily to courtesy.

The other day a customer came in carrying a grouch, and asked to see a couple of boxes of mild cigars. Mr. Friesner gladly brought down two fresh boxes and opened them, his smile in action all the time. The customer selected one, saying: "You didn't have to go to all that trouble. I could have taken one from one of the boxes in the case."

"I didn't think that what I had there would please you, and as I am here to please I showed you the others."

The customer looked up, a surprised expression in his eyes.

"Say," he smiled, "I've been in a dozen stores today, and you're the first salesman that seemed to think that I might appreciate a little courtesy. I'm going to Boston today, but I'll be back in a few days and you can rest assured that I'll give you an order for five hundred cigars."

And Friesner bowed him out with a smile, ready with another one to greet a laborer who came in for a paper of five cent chewing tobacco. Even when the man handed Friesner five pennies the salesman smiled.

The Available Supply of Tobacco in Cuba

Leaf of All Grades, Open to Purchase, Is Said to Total About 50,077 Bales—A Fair Quantity of Vuelta and Semi Vuelta Remains—Crop Prospects Grow Brighter—A Busy Two Weeks—People in Havana Shiver When the Thermometer Registers 51 Degrees Above Zero—A Shortage of Flour.

HAVANA, January 4.—The new year opened with cold weather, 51 degrees above, which for thin-blooded people in a tropical climate is about as bad as zero in New York. People here have no arrangements for heating houses. They have to wear overcoats in our apartments to keep "tolerably warm." To make matters worse there is a great scarcity of flour, and the poor people had to go without bread for days.

The leaf market was undeniably lively during the last fortnight of December. Prices reached a high level for Remedios, first capaduras, as your correspondent advised you by cable on the 31st ulto. The sale then reported was the finest escogida, which had been held at $95 per qq. While the exact price has not been divulged, nor the name of the New York buyer, the commission merchants here were Walter Sutter & Co.

There now remain only about 400 bales additional of first capaduras in other hands, and perhaps 1,000 bales of seconds and possibly 4,000 bales of thirds, manchados, loose leaves, botes, as well as a few wrappers, besides these there are no further supplies in the country. Of Partido wrappers and resagos, with a sprinkling of fillers (which latter however, the holders refuse to sell separately), there may be some 15,000 bales still for sale, or more eventually, as owners now will not declare their actual stocks. Of Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta there is a fair supply for sale yet of all grades, although not everything would suit American buyers. The total stocks, as declared by dealers to the TOBACCO correspondent, figure up to 50,077 bales, but some of the vegas may be optioned. One can expect no further receipts from the Santa Clara province, at least possible buyers are so assured that there remains nothing for sale. But from the Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta districts there yet may come in some further supplies, although no large quantities. Prices are exceedingly firm for all grades, except Partido resagos.

Prospects for the coming Remedios crop continue cheerful, and unless something unforeseen occurs to cloud the present outlook, we may have as big a crop as ever was raised, giving us all grades, light and heavy styles. The former were almost absent last year. Seedlings have been cheap of late, and a big acreage has been planted, therefore all hope depends upon the kind of weather we may have during the growing season in the next two to three months. What the size of the crop will be, who can say? Reports from the Vuelta Abajo are mixed, as far as the rainfall is concerned in the different districts. While a good crop seems assured on the north coast, the lowland districts are uncertain yet, as more rain will be needed owing to the sandy soil, which does not preserve the moisture long.

Sales during the last fortnight of December totaled 15,847 bales, which were divide as follows: Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelt 8,343; Partido, 1,058, and Remedios, 6,44 bales.

Buyers were: Americans, 7,766; exporte to Europe (France and England), 2,027; shi pers to South America, 4,445, and local manu facturers of cigars and cigarettes, 1,609 bale

Exports per Ss. Mexico totaled 463 case containing 2,691,800 cigars, which were con signed to the following countries, viz.: Grea Britain, 2,030,375; United States, 563,900 Argentine Republic, 48,775; Canada, 19,000 British Africa, 17,500; St. Thomas, W. I., 6, 500, and Brazil, 5,750 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco from Havana fo the week ending December 22, 1917, totale 4,249 bales, which were distributed to the fol lowing countries, viz.: To all ports of th United States, 2,364; to Canada, 534; to Grea Britain, 24, and to the Argentine Republic 1,327 bales.

Among the leaf buyers who arrived thi week were Fred Meyer, of John H. Meyer & Son, Peter Wohl, of the Wohl-Comstock Co. both of Chicago. David del Monte, who wa accompanied by his family, of David de Monte, of New York. There also returne to Havana from New York Dionisio Gonzales of Peso & Co., leaf dealers, and C. del Peso & Co., owners of the Flor de Tomas Gutierre cigar and cigarette factory.

Manuel Suarez Co. were buyers of 2,60 bales of leaf, for account of their customer during December.

PROSPERITY ATTESTED

By Reports of the Salesmen for the Penn Tobacco Co.—A Company Banquet at Wilkes-Barre.

With a dinner at the Sterling last night the annual meetings of the salesmen employed by the Penn Tobacco Co., which started on Thursday, came to a close. At the business sessions, which were held morning and afternoon, matters referring to future business of the concern were gone over by the salesmen and officers of the company.

Despite the extraordinary conditions brought about because of the war, reports of the salesmen indicated that the last year had been successful. Salesmen present were particularly enthused over the immense popularity obtained by Honeymoon tobacco, the latest brand of the company.

Fred C. Kirkendall was toastmaster. Addresses on salesmanship and efficiency were given by Charles Hoyt, president of the Hoyt Service, Inc., of New York, an advertising concern that handles much of the tobacco company's advertising throughout the country, and George L. Maurer, also of New York, a director of the Hoyt Service. Remarks were also made by the officers and salesmen of the company.

The following attended:

West Pittston—John A. MacGuffie, district sales manager of Eastern Pennsylvania.

Scranton—Joseph Hourigan.

New York—W. B. Benning, Charles W. Hoyt, George L. Maurer.

Sunbury—H. A. Smith.

Freeland—J. E. Kisner.

Pittsburg—F. B. Harrower, district sales manager Western Pennsylvania; D. L. Probst, W. H. Smith, Joseph F. Ward and W. R. Hayes.

Greensburg—W. W. Case.

Youngstown—O. J. Tines.

Ballston Spa., N. Y.—F. J. Byrne.

Buffalo—J. Kessler.

New Haven—Carl Obst.

West Orange, N. J.—S. C. Marum.

Rochester—A. E. Rase.

Wilkes-Barre—J. T. Williams, Bruce Peters, M. Peters, C. C. Fureron, J. W. Gingel, J. A. Lindner, George Andes, W. W. Wakesman, F. C. Kirkendall, Henry Weigand, John Uhl, J. C. Bell, H. G. Marcy, George Drury and W. B. Schaeffer.—Wilkes-Barre Record.

HAVANA NOTES

of Vuelta Abajo, mentioned last week, per Ss. Venezuela, consigned to the French Regie.

The Cuban Land & Leaf Tobacco Co. received 1,000 bales of leaf, on account of previous contracts, during the past fortnight.

La Moda cigarette factory added another 500 bales of colas to its holdings, during the past two weeks.

Don Pepin Rodriguez is expected to arrive today from Spain by the Ss. Alfonso XIII. Romeo y Julieta is working as strong as ever, having received fresh orders from London customers.

Partagas also has received large orders from Great Britain, with a time limit, to be shipped not later than March 31, 1918, besides having plenty of delayed orders.

Punch is doing well as ever on steady orders from all its customers.

Belinda is busy on a good order slate ahead, working with the same forces.

Hoyo de Monterrey, while less busy for the American market, nevertheless is kept fairly busy on the different calls from various other countries.

La Corona is fully occupied for the United Kingdom, while the American market is in abeyance.

Por Larranaga is still very busy executing orders for Great Britain.

Calixto Lopez & Co. are working strong.

Ramon Allones, Flor de Tomas Gutierrez and C. E. Beck & Co. are fairly busy. ROSAM.

DEMUTH EMPLOYEES GIVEN LIFE INSURANCE.

Wm. Demuth & Co. recently gave every one of their employees a life insurance policy, the face value being equal to the annual salary of each employee. This display of generosity and appreciation is simply in keeping with the democratic policy that Wm. Demuth & Co. have followed for a long time. In addition to receiving the policy, the employees are offered an opportunity to share in the profits of the company's business. Up to the present time bi-weekly dividends have been 12 per cent, and some weeks they have exceeded this sum. Just prior to the Christmas period an extra dividend was declared, making a total of 15 per cent.

On Wednesday afternoon, December 19, the annual Christmas party of the Demuth employees was held at the factory in Richmond Hill, Long Island. A Christmas tree reaching to the ceiling was illuminated by red, white and blue electric bulbs. An excellent entertainment program was offered by the employees, enabling every one to have a good time.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS

& Langsdorf Girard cigar is going better than ever at the advanced price of $75. The manufacturer's liberal policy, both to dealer and smoker, have made a great success of the brand.

Arthur Meyer, Pacific Coast representative of Preferred Havana tobacco, says that Jose M. Diaz, president of the company, is expected in San Francisco about January 20.

Informing Consumers Concerning the Facts

Even Independents Admire the "United" Circular That Explains Why Prices of Cigars, Cigarettes and Smoking Tobacco Are Higher—Pertinent Comment of Horace K. Leach—Burglary Epidemic in Philadelphia—Safe Crackers Attack the Treasure Chest of Bennett Hollard—The Labor Supply and Factory Locations—Disquieting News from Lancaster—A Rush to Buy Clay Pipes.

PHILADELPHIA, January 7.—Independent dealers in this burg are silently thanking the United Cigar Stores Co. for tipping off the well-known consumer to some of the facts in the tobacco and cigar business, which is done well in the circular headed, "You Are Entitled to Know," which circular has been distributed at all the United stores here during the past ten days. As the United generally makes this kind of a move nation-wide, the dope in this little flyer just about hits the members of the new association where they live.

"Why are they kicking—the few that are—about the business of the chain stores?" asks Horace K. Leach, president of the new local association, which meets this week, too late to classify. "Why?" says he, and then proceeds to answer it. "Because they stabilize prices, because they all charge the same, and because in many ways they give more service to the consumer than the average independent store. Because they let the average customer grumble when he gets an increase of two or three cents on a pack of cigarettes and thinks it represents a half-cent tax or thereabouts to the dealer, and the rest profit, instead of telling said customers all about the increases in the cost of everything under the sun."

And as one may gather, the United is telling 'em just that. But of course, this United campaign being a country-wide affair, as we said in the first place, it had to overlook a good local bet. It says nary a word about the cost of burglar insurance, or burglars, not to mention the damage to fixtures and fittings caused by same. Yet that is getting to be an important item in Philadelphia, so much so that one of the first problems of the new association will probably be the formation of some kind of a self-defense measure. Robberies in stores are getting so common that little attention is paid to them. But last week some second-story boys did a little subway work for a chance and tunnelled their way into the Bennett Hollard place at 2036 South street, Mr. Hollard being a wholesale cigar and tobacco merchant. And having got in, they might have got away with everything in the shop, only in their absolute contempt for the cops, they got too indifferent and put too much "soup" in the charge. Any expert cracksman will tell you that too much nitro sometimes jams the doors, and that's what happened in this case.

For some time Philadelphia has been swelling up, with additional cigar factories snooping around hunting for labor, but now one of the big firms has decided that there are too many of 'em in this town for its purposes. And accordingly the firm of Jacob Langsdorf's Sons has moved from 551 North Fifth street to a new plant at Souderton. Offices are to be maintained in this city in the Drexel building. Anybody who finds a half respectable labor market nowadays in the cigar business refuses to talk about it for fear of bringing in competition, and we don't want to tip off the Langsdorf company, so we'll confine the explanation of th removal to the firm's statement that "more fa vorable arrangements" have been made at Sou derton.

Speaking of labor, manufacturers and dealer in this town and vicinity who started even mino repairs within the last few months are begin ning to wish they hadn't. Labor is darnec scarce, with Hog Island shipyard still hoggin 'em. However, since the new building wa completed at 12th and Filbert streets, Morri Jones has one of the nattiest retail cigar store in the city. One big humidor case for cigar runs the length of the store, and there are two others for pipe displays. The fixtures and sign are far above the ordinary, and the place is attracting no little attention—meaning business.

Big manufacturers here are beginning to bite their finger nails, to put it literally, over the situation up at Lancaster and in other tobacco growing centres. Labor is enough of a proposition to worry over at home, they say, but on top of that they've got to figure out what kind of a crop Lancaster is going to plant for 1918. And Lancaster won't say. But the reports are disquieting. Farmers are beginning to believe that "P'raps the only fellers who'll be left on the farm next year'll be them as is growing things to eat, by heck," and some of them are said to have decided to lay off the tobacco game. And in the meantime the price of the well-known leaf is still sauntering over thirty cents a pound.

Some months ago we had occasion to refer to the shortage of corn cobs, which is still on, more 'r less. Just now, however, the dear old local market has been invaded by a clay poipe, d'ye moind, to raytail at foive cents, which is a big seller, they do be afther telling us. Also, a prize of $5 for the best colored pipe returned to the manufacturer is to be paid in one month. We have bought wan, and pwhiniver we get the price of a bag of baccy we'll start coloring it.

"Additional revenue levied under the ew law, now in force, $70,000,000, aking a total tax of $173,000,000, over 7 per cent. increase in taxes.

"(a) The increased cost of tobacco leaf,

"(b) The new cost and scarcity of labor,

"(c) The addition of $70,000,000 to the tax on tobacco manufacture,

"(d) The advanced cost of all material used in the production and marketing of the merchandise,

"make it evident that the costs of all tobacco products must increase the prices to the consumer."

A PRICE FIXING CASE

A complaint has been filed against the J. F. Hillerich & Son Co., of Louisville, by the Federal Trade Commission. This case has to do with restricted prices placed on the "Louisville Slugger" baseball bat, and February 14, 1918, has been set as the date for the hearing.

The current action does not mean, of course, that the manufacturers must forthwith drop their schedule of standardized resale prices and the means for persuading retailers to observe such fixed prices. It does signify, however, that the Hillerich concern, having failed to avail itself of the opportunity afforded to present its specific case in connection with the recent general hearings on price maintenance, must now appear individually before the Trade body on pain of being found by default to be operating in violation of the Clayton Act and the Trade Commission Act.

In the eyes of the members of the Trade Commission the selling plan of the Louisville bat manufacturers has the same objectionable features that have lately been pronounced offensive as allegedly practiced by the makers of "Old Dutch Cleanser" and the Mishawaka Woolen Mfg. Co.

FAVOR "DAYLIGHT SAVING" PLAN

WASHINGTON, January 6.—The Daylight Saving bill which passed the Senate last June will be considered by the House soon after the emergency railroad and other war legislation recommended by the President is finished.

Speaker Clark, Majority Leader Kitchin and Representative Theatus Sims, chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, will work for the passage of the measure.

The bill, which provides for the advancing of the clocks of the nation one hour from the last Sunday in April to the last Sunday in September, is now "under consideration" by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House.

THIS WAS NO "BUM STEER!"

On New Year's day strange sights are to be more or less expected, but the guests in the lobby of the Biltmore Hotel, New York City, really wondered if it was the day after the night before, when they saw a 1600-pound steer led through the hotel to special quarters in the baggage room. John McE. Bowman, president of the hotel, purchased the steer, Merry Monarch, which was the international grand champion for 1917, to prove what scientific cattle raising can do.—Hotel World.

INCORPORATED

THREE STATES—This is a favorite brand among smokers who insist on a High-Grade Mixture. It contains the very best grades of Kentucky Burley, Virginia and Louisiana Perique, and is made after an old formula that never fails to satisfy the demand for a blend of these fine tobaccos.

YALE — This famous old brand is a mixture of Long Cut and Granulated Plug Cut; its unique blend of Virginia, Turkish, Havana and Perique is especially pleasing.

GARRICK—This famous brand is known all the world over and has a host of friends in America among high-grade smokers who prefer a mild, "light" tobacco of top-notch quality.

Trade News from Near and Far

During the last year $21,500,000 worth of farm loan bonds were sold, according to the Federal Farm Loan Board, and additional bonds are being issued at the rate of approximately $3,000,000 weekly. They bear 4½ per cent. interest and are entirely free from taxes.

The Preferred Havana Tobacco Co. has just shipped 400,000 Eden cigars. Numerous orders for this brand are coming from South Africa and Australia. Humboldt and Henry the Fourth are selling exceedingly well. P. Verplanck of the company is still in the city. So are all of the salesmen. The latter will start out for new business on the 15th of January.

The tobacco warehouse of T. E. Hamilton & Co., at Newport, Ky., was burned January 3. Firemen were handicapped in fighting the flames on account of frozen water plugs. The blaze was spectacular. Women and children in adjacent houses were forced to flee their homes on account of the heat. One fire captain was burned severely when his clothing became ignited. The loss has not been given out.

Julius Klorfein had a setback resulting from frozen pipes and lack of light. During the past week he has been using a suite in the Broadway Central hotel for an office. By the latter part of this week everything at the Broome street office will be running smoothly. Just at present Klorfein has twelve salesmen on the road, who are keeping the Garcia Grande factories busy filling orders. A. Levey has enlisted in the army.

The General Cigar Co. has bought the factory of the Hilson-Schloss Cigar Co. at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., which factory, from now on will be known as the Luzerne branch of the General Cigar Co. It will be operated in connection with the other manufacturing enterprises of the General Cigar Co. at Wilkes-Barre. The making of the Mark Well brand, erstwhile a leading production of the Hilson-Schloss Cigar Co., was discontinued on January 1.

"These are times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis shrink from the service of his country; but he who stands it now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell is not easily conquered, yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph." Thomas Paine sent that message to Valley Forge, during the Revolutionary War. But, as respects sentiments and weather, it is just as timely and appropriate to-day.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued a call Sunday, in the name of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, of which he also is head, for a Nation-wide Loyalty Week during the week of Lincoln's Birthday. This is to be observed by branches of the alliance and by central bodies of the Federation as a blow at enemy and pacifist propaganda. It is estimated that on Lincoln's Birthday about 500 meetings will be held throughout the country, and that millions of pieces of literature will be distributed.

William C. Muschenheim, proprietor of the Hotel Astor in New York, is the first subscriber to the fund that is being raised with the assistance of The Merchants' Association for the Community Hall at Camp Upton. Mr. Muschenheim headed the subscription list with a contribution of $1,000, sending his check to General Bell. The Camp Upton Community Hall is intended to accommodate several thousand soldiers at one time and it will be used especially for community singing. It has been found that the choruses, in which all the men join, not only promote patriotism but aid in bringing the men together and increasing their feeling of comradeship.

John Sullivan, secretary of the Association of National Advertisers, has sent to the members of that organization a bulletin containing the results of a questionnaire sent out by the H. Black Co. of Cleveland, concerning this year's advertising expenditures. According to a summary furnished by A. W. Newman, sales and advertising manager of that company, out of 145 replies received, 50 advertisers, or 34 per cent of the total number, have increased their advertising appropriation for 1918. Sixty-two, or 43½ per cent., will spend the same amount as in 1917; 13, or 9 per cent, have cut down their appropriations, and 20, or 13½ per cent., are uncertain as to the amount they will spend.

WOULD AMEND THE LAW.

WASHINGTON, January 9.—Corporal James Bethel Gresham, one of the first American soldiers to fall on the battlefields of France, left a dependent mother, Mrs. Dodds of Evansville, Ind., who is unable to realize any benefits from the war risk insurance law, the House was told today by Representative Denton of Indiana, who introduced a bill to amend the law to meet the case.

Soldiers who die without having applied for insurance are deemed, under the insurance act, to have applied for insurance if death occurs within 120 days after publication of the act, but payments to a mother can be made in such cases only if she be a widow. Gresham's mother had remarried, but is now said to be without means of support. Under Representative Denton's amendment widows in such circumstances would receive $25 a month during their life.

POSTOFFICE SAYS "DON'T."

WASHINGTON, January 9.—The Postoffice Department today announced that parcels addressed to men of the American expeditionary forces in France will not be accepted for mailing if addressed "in care of the commanding general, port of embarkation."

SPEAKING OF STOGIES

Speaking of stogies, the Newark Star Eagle says: "The war has knocked the stuffing out of them, or, rather, it has taken the stogie stuffing away to fill cigars of more aristocratic shape. Profit is all but gone. Prices climb, but so also do the objections increase against paying the higher rate. Taken altogether, the chances for the stogie are as slim as itself.

"Once it was possible for many Americans besides professional cigarmakers to manufacture their own smokes. Hospitable folk of the rural districts thought it the fine thing to offer their guests cigars which had been made in the house. The stogie was the last of its kind which could be said to have an unprofessional origin, many thousands being rolled by women at their homes in periods of the day when household duties were light. If now the stogie is to disappear, cigarmaking in this country will cease to have even the slightest of the amateur touch.

"Its vanishing it to be regretted, not simply because the stogie was a che smoke, but also because it was pictu esque. It fitted a certain type American face. It went with lo chins, long legs, bodies without supe fluous flesh. The man whose pocke were stuffed with stogies seemed to l armed against lonesomeness and t power of anyone to 'turn him dow Smokers of timid spirit never affecte stogies."

PLAYING WITH THE COINAGE.

The confusion caused by the chang in the design of the new quarter do lar coin—many persons refusing t accept it, suspecting its legality—sug gests the desirability of avoiding a terations in the appearance of an kind of currency with which the peop have become familiar.

On the plea of artistic improvemer in design needless changes are mad in notes and coins, leading to uncer tainty and resulting annoyance to th public. A note or coin with whic the public has become so well a quainted that a counterfeit is readil detected should not be altered or re placed without strong and convinc ing reasons.—New York Herald.

TOBACCO SCARCE IN GERMANY.

The causes leading to the drastic limitations placed on the use of tobacco in Germany, reported in a brief cablegram from Copenhagen to the New York Times on October 20, were recently summed up as follows for the Berliner Tageblatt by a leading German cigar manufacturer:

"Germany's consumption of raw tobacco the year before the war amounted to 114,000 tons, or 10 per cent. of the total crop of the world. Of this amount 34,000 tons were of German production and were valued at $3,808,000, while the balance of 80,000 tons, valued at about $37,000,000, had to be imported. Before the war 225,000 workers were employed in 10,000 tobacco factories. In peace times the annual production of cigars ranged from 8,500,000,000 to 9,000,000,000 cigars and that of cigarettes was 11,500,000,000.

"With the outbreak of the war there was noticed an immediate rise in the army's demand for cigars and cigarettes and the output of cigars increased in the middle of 1916 to 10,000,000,000 or 11,000,000,000, while that of cigarettes rose to 25,000,000,000 at the end of the year.

"Between 60 and 80 per cent. of all the domestic cigars and cigarettes were commandeered for the army. The bureau that controls production for the army and the interior is called the German Central Bureau for the War Contracts of the Tobacco Manufacturers, and it is located in Minden, Westphalia. It acts as a mediator between the demands of the army and those of the civil population and apportions the contracts to the factories.

"In the fall of last year the production of cigars was cut 60 per cent. Therefore, now the annual output of cigars is only about 5,600,000,000, but thus far the production of cigarettes has not been limited. Of the 5,600,000,000 cigars 75 per cent. are used by the army, so scarcely 15 per cent. of the production in normal times is left for the regular trade."

The regulations put into force by the German authorities provide for the sale of tobacco only between the hours of 10 and 12 in the morning and 2 and 4 in the afternoon, and forbid the purchase or use of tobacco by children under 16 years of age.

One Chinese province annually exports more than 150,000 tons of peanuts, all because an American missionary several years ago gave a native convert a quart of California seed.

ENCOURAGING TOBACCO GROWERS IN ITALY

David F. Wilbur, American Consul General at Genoa, reports that a decree to encourage the pursuit and development of native tobacco growing to supply the manufactories of the State provides for the following subventions in money as part of the financial budget of the Italian Minister of Finance:

(a) Premiums for land cultivated in tobacco to be conferred for each crop till 1926, inclusive, at the rate of 20 lire for each unit cultivated where the cultivation of tobacco does not exceed 20 ares (an are equals 0.025 acre); of 1 lira per are if it exceeds 20 ares but not 100 ares; and 2 lire per are if it exceeds 100 ares, always on condition that the area cultivated in cereals has not been diminished.

(b) Co-operation of the State for the construction or adaptation of premises for the curing and keeping of tobacco up to the maximum amount of eight-tenths—in nine annual installments—of the expense, in proportion to the utilizable area of the premises constructed or adapted, from the entry into force of the decree to June 30, 1926, on a plan previously approved by the administration of State monopolies, after ascertainment of the special technico-industrial requisites.

(c) Co-operation of the State for the construction or adaptation of premises for the preparation and storage of the products of cultivation by special concession, up to the maximum amount of two-tenths—in nine annual installments—of the expense as calculated by the administration of State monopolies in proportion to the utilizable area of the storehouses constructed or adapted, from the entry into force of the present decree to June 30, 1926.

(d) Further co-operation according to the preceding paragraph by means of allotment among all the interested firms, and until there is reached, including collection, eight-tenths of the expense calculated by the administration of State monopolies, an annual sum not exceeding 200,000 lire being set aside for that purpose.

(e) For the experimental cultivation of tobacco where such premises for curing or for use as general storehouses have been constructed or adapted, the co-operation of the State is reduced to one-half of that fixed, as already stated, to be paid in three annual installments; except when this amount is raised, respectively, by another four-tenths or by another tenth on account of the experiment being changed into a special concession.

(f) Premiums for organization of concerns for carrying on tobacco culture, to be established in a minimum of 2,000 lire and up to a maximum of 5,000 lire a year until the end of the financial year 1925-26, and to be conferred upon those concerns which have special concessions, both cultural and industrial, which are best organized and conducted, and have given to the monopoly of tobacco results of appreciable utility.

To the cultivators who have given proof of exceptional diligence and perspicacity in the production of tobacco for supplying the manufactories of the State may be assigned premiums of money until the end of 1925-26. The allowance for each fiscal year is 300,000 lire.

Sixty scholarship prizes, each of 1,000 lire annually, are to be conferred by the Minister of Finance, at the rate of 20 in each financial year until the end of 1925-26, for the acquirement in the country of special skill in tobacco culture.

Thousands of transactions are made on a broker's sales memorandum. A broker brings seller and buyer together, and when the deal is complete, he signs a sales memorandum and gives a copy to buyer and seller. Since under the law he represents both parties, his sales memorandum has always been considered sufficient under the above law to bind both parties.

Even if no memorandum was made and signed at the time, if you can get the other party to sign it later, he cannot thereafter get out of his bargain on the ground that the above law was not complied with.

Under many cases this act applies to future contracts as well as contracts for goods on spot. I think I should say also that it does not apply at all where the goods sold are made especially for the buyer and are not a part of a regular line kept in stock by the seller. Such sales are considered sales of labor rather than sales of merchandise, and people who handle them don't need to mind the law at all. A suit of clothes made to measure for a customer, is a case in point. It would not be a part of the seller's regular line. But one hundred cases of tomatoes, such as the packer always puts up, would not be, even though they were packed especially to fill somebody's order.

Payroll Statistics

WASHINGTON, January 8.—The Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, has just completed its work in compiling the figures of employment for the month of October, 1917, and comparing them with the same month of last year.

The figures are compiled from reports rendered by representative establishments in 13 different industries, of which the cigar manufacturing industry is one. The comparison of October, 1917, with October a year ago indicates a decrease in 7 of the 13 industries as to the number of persons on the pay roll. On the other hand, the increase in several industries was favorable. Taking up the matter of changes of wages in October, 1917, the report says:

"One plant in cigar manufacturing gave 8 per cent. increase to 70 per cent. of the force. In another instance there was a 5 per cent. increase, affecting 88 per cent. of the force."

In 61 cigar manufacturing establishments reporting to the bureau for October of last year and this year there were 20,162 persons employed in that month last year increasing slightly in the same month this year to 20,211.

Official Figures That Tell the Real Price-Raising Story

FIERCEST FRIGIDITY

Exceeding Anything Ever Before Reported from the South—Intense Suffering Because of the Cold—"Business Is Frozen Up"

MEMPHIS, Tenn., January 13.—With 29 known dead in six States, the South to-night was slowly recovering from a terrible cold wave.

For 48 hours business and traffic of all kinds in Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky and Georgia have been paralyzed. Intense suffering has been general. The coal supply was so low to-night in many of the principal cities of the South that appeals were sent to Washington. Arkansas and many places in Mississippi were entirely without fuel.

Four deaths were directly attributed to the cold in Memphis. Deaths from cold in other cities are: Fulton, Ky., 1; Atlanta, 7; Augusta, Ga., 2; Natchez, Miss., 1; Chattanooga, 2; Nashville, 4; New Orleans, 3; Jackson, Tenn., 3; Little Rock, 2.

For the first time in the history of New Orleans the temperature dropped to 11 above zero. For the first time in 56 years the famous city of the Gulf, experienced snow. Suffering was acute in every quarter of the city. Few ventured outdoors.

All Alabama, Mississippi and Georgia was swept by the cold wave. Memphis thermometers reached 9 below zero Saturday, the coldest, with one exception, in the history of the local weather bureau. Not a street car has been operated for 36 hours. Trains are from 10 hours to two days late. Only two trains left the city to-day.

Little Rock, Ark., after having been cut off from the world for 30 hours, reported two dead from the cold to-day, and hundreds suffering in heatless homes. An appeal was sent to Memphis, which in turn was forwarded to Washington. There is only enough coal in the entire South to last three days at the longest in case of a continued cold spell.

The temperature began to rise late to-day. Prayers for relief were offered in local churches. Department stores closed their doors Saturday. Because of the fact that there were no street cars running hundreds jammed downtown hotels and office buildings.

It is believed by United States officials here that when all Southern cities swept by the cold wave and blizzard are heard from the death rate will exceed 100.

SIX HUNDRED SALESMEN

For the American Tobacco Co. Will Drop Their Regular Work and Devote a Week to Selling War Savings Stamps.

Six hundred salesmen of the American Tobacco Co. have enlisted in the war savings campaign and will devote the week from January 21 to January 28 to selling Thrift and War Savings Stamps to the public.

The American Tobacco Co. is the first large institution to offer its services to the Government in this way. The week has been set aside by the American Tobacco Co. for its men to get on the job for Uncle Sam all over the country, and during that time they will drop all other work.

It will be the aim of the salesmen to interest as many persons as possible in starting a Thrift or War Savings Stamp card, rather than to sell a large amount of stamps to any one individual. For this reason the 600 men will work in factories, mines, insurance companies' offices, department stores, railroad stations and all other places where great numbers of employees are concentrated.

ALBERT FREEMAN

Well known to cigar dealers in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, this newly enrolled soldier in the National army is a young man of more than ordinary ability.

Graduating from Public School No. 1, he next went through the Hebrew Technical Institute, with honor. Then he was employed by the Brock Supply Co. and ere long he was promoted to be superintendent. Resigning that position, in 1914, he became a salesman for his father, Sidney J. Freeman, the importer of "quality Manilas." A year later he was made a member of the successful firm of Sidney J. Freeman & Sons.

Continuing on the road, he covered his territory thoroughly, developing business in a way that opened the eyes of some of the "old timers."

Belonging to the Tobacco Salesmen's Association, the Knights of Pythias, the United Council and the Mystic Club of Seagate and being secretary of the Star Democratic Club of the Bronx, he didn't have much time unoccupied when he was in New York.

Mention, too, might be made of a charming young lady who thinks that Albert is the best fellow wearing a uniform.

Now with the first recruit detachment of the Heavy Artillery, Albert Freeman will be among "the big guns," naturally, and everyone who knows him is sure that he will make a brave and capable soldier.

bility, thrift, courage and wledge, associated with unitting labor, brought Sam- I. Davis to a high place. He situated where he "could things easy" if he wished. won respect. He accumuld a fortune. But he conued to work until his vitality almost exhausted. No ger able to attend to busis, he sought medical advice. consulted most capable phyans. He was a special ent for months in the Rockler Institute.

Too late!" His case was incurable. The efforts of the physicians only sufficed to ong life for a while. Sunday night, Sam- I. Davis succumbed to the inevitable, gh he made a brave fight to the last.

o perished an able and remarkable man. most interesting character was his. He more than the personification of hard k. His success in the cigar business n't due entirely to continual labor. He ght and studied. He had judgment. He erimented constantly. He investigated ly concerning the desirability of every e and form of tobacco that possibly could sed for cigar purposes. At various times, 'tried out," so it is said, quantities of toco brought from practically every part he world where leaf, susceptible of utilion in cigar making, could be obtained. He lied tobacco as a devotee might search the ptures. Of the knowledge he gained, he le immediately a profitable application. achievements were diversified. He manutured cigars of all sizes and kinds, from cheaper "domestic" to most expensive r Havanas in the finer shapes. And never, ny variety, did he record a failure.

pparently, every requisite for prosperity he cigar business was comprised in his ce-up. Also, his experience covered nearly phases of the trade.

native of New York, born in 1862, he red his schooling in the metropolis. Atted to the South, in his youth, he entered office of his brother-in-law, Lee Roy ers, a cigar jobber in Savannah. Fortuely, in learning the cigar trade. young Sam Davis had an unusually good adviser. For the proverbial ability of Lee Roy Myers (today the president of the Cortez Cigar Co. and Geo. W. Nicholas & Co., Inc., two nationally famous manufacturing concerns) is displayed in the making of "cigars for men of brains."

The Late Samuel I. Davis

Completing his service in the Myers office, Davis became a salesman for the factory of Julius Ellinger & Co., a house notably popular in those days. He traveled West and was especially successful securing orders in mining camps in Montana, Idaho, Utah and Colorado. All along his route, he made enduring friends but miners generally were his best customers.

Whether in the mining regions of Montana or in the rural districts of New York State, "Sam" Davis was a hustler when he started to sell goods. Nor could he be discouraged. If orders were hard to get, he kept "plugging away," refusing to eat, sometimes, until he had made a good sale.

Beginning in rather a small way, in 1886, Samuel I. Davis, assisted by his brother Fred, established a cigar factory on 86th street, in New York. From the first, the business prospered. Steadily the output increased. Across the country trade extended. Succeeding years witnessed the establishment and acquisition of other factories. Sam'l Davis y Ca. obtained important recognition throughout the United States. El Sidelo brand became popular from coast to coast.

In all respects a successful executive, Samuel I. Davis improved each opportunity to increase the scope of his operations. Factories in New York, Tampa and elsewhere made the Davis aggreagtion a considerable factor in American cigar production. Not many companies had an output exceeding 80,000,000 a year.

The "union of interests" formed May 1, 1916, by T. J. Dunn & Co. and Sam'l I. Davis y Ca., made the combination the second largest cigar manufacturers in the world.

When the merger was effected, Fred Davis became the head of the Davis branch of the great concern. Inroads of disease, induced by too strenuous industry, caused Samuel I. Davis to retire. Followed a prolonged but losing battle to regain health and strength. More by sheer power of will, rather than by any assistance the doctors could offer, he endured for two years. His fortitude was praiseworthy. He tried not to show how much he suffered.

To a visitor once, he explained that he liked to meet people, that he took pleasure in conversation, that it was gratifying to be greeted by friends, but his infirmities often forced him to seek seclusion.

In his handsome apartment in the Hotel Ansonia, where he had lived for 16 years, he passed quietly away. He leaves a wife, a son and three daughters.

Devoted to his family, and to his business, in the years of his activity, concentrating his attention steadfastly on his own affairs, he joined no lodges nor did he mix in politics. He was fond of horses and his almost only recreation was an occasional ride in the park.

Because he was so wrapped up in business, his manner did not always reveal the fact that he was a man of many excellent qualities. But his ability was known and his achievements are historic in the cigar trade.

A wealth of floral offerings at the funeral, Tuesday forenoon, attested how kindly he was remembered. The services at the hall of the Ethical Culture Society were semi private. The burial took place in Mt. Pleasant cemetery.

Among those attended, to pay "the last sad tribute to the departed," were: Theodore Werner, A. Bijur, Mortimer Regensburg, Frank McCoy, Oscar Banghart, Ernest Ellinger, M. Rose, M. C. Wobbe, L. B. Weinstock, M. D. Erdrich, and M. Frolich.

ADDING TO THE DRAFT

Administration Bill Expected to Pass Soon Would Make 700,000 Eligibles Yearly—Those Reaching 21

WASHINGTON, January 15.—The Government has decided on draft registration of all young men as fast as they become 21 years old as the means of keeping filled the ranks of the war army. It has decided against raising the draft age limit above 31 years.

An Administration bill was introduced today, at the request of the War Department, by Chairman Chamberlain of the Senate Military Committee, to register for the draft all men who have reached 21 since June 5, 1917, when the draft law became effective. The Administration's supprt seems to assure its prompt passage.

Registration of men who have become of age since the draft law was enacted was recommended in the recent report of Provost Marshal General Crowder as one of the means by which a supply of men for the National Army might be assured without taking those who might have others dependent upon them. It is estimated it will add about 700,000 men to the draft eligibles each year.

The Merchants' Association of New York, has written to Commander D. W. Tood, Director of Naval Communications, calling his attention to the delay in mail to and from the West Indies.

"READY AND UNAFRAID"

Until victory is accomplished, the chief business of the country is to make war. Private considerations are subordinated to the nation's needs. Success and welfare of an individual, or the prosperity of a group, are as nothing compared with requirements for the triumph of the United States. So tremendous is the task, so stupendous is the conflict, no one can know now how much effort, treasure and blood must be expended to succeed. The cost is not counted. Announced only is a determination to win. However high and frightful is the price of success, inability to beat the Kaiser would be more ruinous.

In war time, industry and finance are force and power to be applied for offense and protection. Wisdom demands instant, incessant utilization of every thing that will enable the right to triumph, surely, quickly and gloriously. War is not restricted to battlefields. All noncombatants do not escape injury. Because of war everyone is made to suffer in some way. Losses and privations come to millions far removed from the actual fighting. And some war service is required of each American, though he is thousands of miles away from the firing line.

What form the demand for assistance may assume, who can say? Or, how extensively sacrifices will be called for, who dare foretell? Yet, surely will trade have to adapt itself to war conditions. Business, of kinds contrary to military requirements, either will disappear during the war or exist precariously. Vested rights, inalienable in normal times, may be abrogated or nullified suddenly when a nation is at war. Property may be expropriated. Practically anything is permissible that proper authority deems necessary to serve a military purpose. War work takes precedence. Other operations, entirely lawful and important aforetime, may be halted by a word of command. The affairs of individuals or aggregations may be regulated according to the interest of the nation.

To assure and accelerate the success of his country in this war, a true American will make any sacrifice required. Whatever may be his duty, he is expected to do it. Not anticipating the worst, nor believing evil, he will accept conditions as they develop.

Patriotism, cheerfulness and willingness to serve are distinguishing traits of men in the tobacco trade, though they don't refuse to see painful truths, most tobacco men are optimistic regarding conditions that exist today. Those in a position to be the best informed generally believe that 1918 will be a year more advantageous than was indicated some months ago.

A good market seems assured for all the cigars, cigarettes, smoking tobacco and snuff that can be produced.

The demand for goods is the greatest ever known. The amount of money in circulation constantly increases. Prices may not be entirely satisfactory to manufacturer, dealer or consumer, but as the result of numerous compromises, they are not so very far out of the way, at present. Manufacturers can speak of difficulties in procuring supplies, labor and transportation. And just now there is scant coal from which to obtain heat. Dealers likewise have sorrows and grievances: Consumers, too, think that they have good excuse for "kicking." Yet, when all is said, it must be admitted that neither present condition nor prospects are nearly so bad as things might be.

THE FRENCH TOBACCO MONOPOLY.

Azel D. Beeler, American Vice-Consul at Bordeaux, in a letter dated December 11, says:

"The purchase and sale of tobacco in France is a monopoly of the Government and forms one of the chief sources of national revenue, the business being conducted exclusively through agencies licensed by the Government and receiving their stocks from the Manufacture de l'Etat.

"The production of tobacco by the French planters has declined during the war, partly because of the shortage of labor and partly because of generally unfavorable weather conditions. For the present year (1917) the crops in the chief producing regions (the Departments of Lot, Pyrenees, Dordogne and Gironde) have been still more limited in quantity, though the reports of the Federation of the Syndicates of Tobacco Planters say that the quality is much better. Many planters have temporarily abandoned the cultivation of the leaf.

"Previous to the war the net profits of the tobacco monopoly were increasing yearly, but of late they have fallen off somewhat. In 1913 the net profits aggregated $78,493,400; in 1914 $83,725,063; in 1913, $84,073,269; in 1914, $78,918,345; in 1915, $72,789,092; in 1916, $80,347,498. The figures for the three "war" years are approximates only, based on the total sales and estimated expenses. This decline is due to two chief causes: First, increased expenses owing to heavy purchases of foreign and colonial tobaccos at enhanced prices; and, second, smaller sales of tobacco following the German occupation of a part of the French territory.

"As to the prospects for the monopoly in 1918 it can be said with certainty that the net earnings will be larger than those in peace time. This statement is based on the fact that for the first ten months of 1917 the receipts were $103,402,110, which gives an average of $10,340,211 a month. It is probable that the total will reach $123,000,000 for the year as a result of a 20 per cent. increase in the selling price of all manufactured grades.

"To ascertain the possible net profits for 1918 it is necessary to deduct about $32,000,000 for the expenses of manufacturing and the purchase of 7,305,000 pounds of native tobacco and an increased quantity of imported stock. This will leave a net profit or revenue accruing to the State from the sale of tobacco of $90,000,000 or about $6,000,000 more than ever before.

"Since the war, the home production of tobacco has not kept pace with the damnd, and this year the output will probably be only about one-fourth of the total quantity needed. Much of the imported stock has hitherto come from French colonies and from the Americas, and in the future there will be an even greater demand upon foreign sources, particularly those in North America. All purchases for the French factories and retail stores are made by the direction of the Manufacture de l'Etat."

A resolution adopted by the Credit Defense Committee of the National Association of Credit Men insists that the Government must ask and expect no better position than that of small buyers in the payment of obligations incurred for the payment and delivery of supplies. The necessity for the Government in all of its departments having uniform and adequate systems that will permit the prompt and orderly payment of its obligations was emphasized.

'HE WHEREFORE OF THE SIX CENT CIGAR

(An Interview With Frank C. Niles)

The smoke of the average man, the ıickel" cigar, is no longer five cents. : is six cents straight and, according) good authority, is worth the money.

People who jump at the conclusion ıat cigar manufacturers are "profiteer-ıg," or raising prices just because :verybody is doing it," will find sub-:antial reasons for the added cost when ıey look into trade conditions.

Cigar manufacturers are feeling the ffects of war the same as the flour ıillers, the butchers, the clothing manu-ıcturers and the shoemakers.

Frank C. Niles, president of Niles & loser Cigar Company, Kansas City, hich is credited with being one of the ırgest cigar jobbing houses in America, oints out some of the factors which ave made a difference in the price of igars.

"Nearly all so-called 'nickel' cigars," aid Mr. Niles, "are made from a com-ination of imported and domestic to-acco. These cigars mostly are Sumat-a wrapped.

"Farm products have risen enormous-y in price. The tobacco crop of America ı 1917 according to the latest Govern-ıent bulletin from the Department of ıgriculture, December 1, is valued at 297,442,000 or 24.9 cents a pound at the arm. In 1916 the farm value averaged 4.7 cents a pound and in the years 911-15 it averaged 10.4 cents a pound.

"There, you notice, is an increase of nore than 100% in a few years.

"Sumatra wrappers, which come long listances by ocean freight, are not only nuch higher in price but at times un-ıbtainable because practically all ship-ing facilities are required by the Gov-rnment to pursue the war. Sumatra vrappers one year ago cost $3.65, today 5.35; binders one years ago cost 25 ents, today 40 cents; fillers one year ago ost 20 cents, today 30 cents.

"In the cigar industry, labor has also dvanced, cigar boxes have gone up rom 25% to 200% and labels, gum trag-canth and other incidentals, to say ıothing of taxes, have steadily climbed o higher levels.

"It will be seen from these facts that he new prices are entirely justified. In act, they were justified before war was leclared and before war taxes were lev-ed. That the cigar industry is not un-luly flourishing is indicated by the rec-ords in Washington showing that the ıumber of cigar manufacturers in Amer-ca has decreased over 11,000 in ten ears and over 1,000 in the year ending anuary 1, 1917. The Internal Revenue eports for the last twelve months are ıot yet available so the decrease in 1917 ıas not been announced.

"In deciding how to meet the situation, cigar manufacturers actually had only two courses to choose from; they could lower the quality of cigars and continue selling at the old price or they could maintain high quality as before and make the price six cents instead of five.

"And," concluded Mr. Niles, "retailers report that customers express themselves as being much better satisfied to have the price altered than the smoke."

"WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT A MAN——?"

Profiteering—that is, using the war for personal gain—has become a term of the greatest reproach. It is a fighting word everywhere. You can't say a much more harmful thing about any man than that he is turning the distress of his country, and the sacrifices that other men are making, to his own profit. The more he conceals his methods, the more pains he takes to pretend a public service, the worse he is. But there are other forms of profiteering besides money making. Any man who uses the war for his personal advantage as a profiteer. Bernard Shaw spilling tawdry epigrams on the principles that boys are dying for is as much a profiteer as the grocer who overcharges his customers. The employer of labor who attempts to enforce the "open shop," and the labor union bodies who take advantage of war conditions to order strikes for a "closed shop," are equally profiteers. Any man who looks upon the war as an opportunity to increase his personal or political prestige, to promote the aims of sectionalism, to forward political ideas which the public would not accept in times of peace, to get the people of this country "out of step," is a profiteer. The spite-tax legislation of Claude Kitchin is profiteering. The presidential booms of half a dozen men in Washington are profiteering of a very bad and dangerous sort. Playing cheap politics, giving offices to incompetent men, refusing to give office to competent men in the government of the smallest village—these are all profiteering. Those who engage in it are referred to the familiar words of Mark viii: 36. —Colliers' Weekly.

REPORT OF FOURTH FEDERAL RESERVE DISTRICT.

WASHINGTON, January 14.—Speaking of the condition of the tobacco crop in Federal Reserve District No. 4, headquarters at Cleveland, the Reserve Board in its monthly survey, says:

"The cold weather has retarded the marketing of the tobacco crop, and it is not yet well under way. However, it is selling at the highest price in its history, and should soon relieve any money stringency in the tobacco districts."

WHO WROTE IT?

Who can name the author of the "lines" to a Henry Clay cigar? The little poem, here quoted, appeared in the Albany Journal more than 50 years ago. But the brand is just as popular today.

"HENRY CLAY.

"THOU cloudy Architect
That dost in mist erect
My dreams immortal;
Say, like the Arabian,
Why wilt thou still leave one
Unfinished portal?
"Why do the dreams I dream
In thy pale violet stream
Float all above me?
False, false as life thou art—
Brief as a woman's heart—
Yet still I love thee.
"I must complete the tale,
Hedged in thy feathery pale,
Fading away.
Ere it melts into air—
Bring from the table there
A 'Henry Clay.'"

PURCHASE THRIFT STAMPS

Cardinal Gibbons Specially Urges Everyone to Do a Bit Financially to Aid the Nation

BALTIMORE, January 13, 1918.—Cardinal Gibbons issued the following statement urging all to purchase the war savings stamps:

"To My Fellow Countrymen—The door of opportunity to serve our country is flung wide open for practically every man, woman and child by the sale of war savings stamps. This is the most impressive thing about the movement, which is being undertaken by the National War Savings Committee.

"There can be few people whose circumstances will not permit them to buy at intervals the twenty-five-cent thrift stamp, and with each purchase gain step by step possession of the war savings stamp, for each one of which the credit and resources of the United States are pledged to return five dollars for what now costs four dollars and twelve cents.

"Such a return being produced by the process of compound interest carries the lesson of thrift in a practical and convincing way. I earnestly commend to young and old, and more particularly to parents, this simple and easy method of acquiring the habit of thrift. Many sorrows are avoided and much happiness is to be gained by the timely application of the principles of thrift. To the building of character it brings profitable acquaintance with self-denial and self-reliance. It is a valuable aid to good citizenship and a blessing that once properly grounded is a faithful companion through life.

"We have reached a time in our national life when no loyal citizen of this country can afford to spend a dollar for wasteful luxuries. Such an expenditure resolves itself into a disloyal act.

"Welcome, indeed, therefore, is the opportunity offered through the sale of these war savings stamps to promote the cultivation of thrift and at the same time to serve one's country by lending to it in such small sums the price of the first step—the 25-cent tariff stamp.

"Such is not only a privilege, but it is the clear duty of every American citizen, young and old. I urge upon our clergy and upon parochial schools to aid in every way in promoting thrift through the purchase of war savings stamps.

"Most faithfully yours,
"J. CARD. GIBBONS."

FIVE YEAR GARBAGE CONTRACT.

Under a contract with New York City, the Metropolitan By-Products Co. takes all the garbage from the boroughs of Manhattan, The Bronx, and Brooklyn for a period of five years, beginning with 1917, paying $900,000 for the raw garbage during that period.

The Over-Seas Club Tobacco Fund

Supplies Millions of Smokes to Soldiers

From London, recently, Sir Edward Ward sent a cablegram to the Over-Seas Club in New York, reading as follows:

"Important that you make arrangements for shipping space for 250,000,000 cigarettes required during the next six months by the Over-Seas Club Tobacco Fund for distribution as gifts to troops."

The Over-Seas Club, since October, 1914, has expended $1,500,000 in procuring smokes for soldiers. The largest weekly shipment comprised 5,000,000 cigarettes. Of the shipments made to date, not one package of cigarettes has been destroyed by a German submarine. Otherwise, anything lost or injured in transit was fully covered by insurance. For every 25 cents contributed to the Over-Seas Club Tobacco Fund, a soldier receives 50 Virginia cigarettes, a packet of smoking tobacco and a postal card upon which to return thanks to the donor.

Consider the nerve-wracking environment of the soldier, "over there." Mid the horrors of the trenches—deafening noises, noisome smells, mud, filth, disease, privations, exposure, uncertainty of everything except proximity to death, anticipations of poison gas, hail of bullets, showers of bombs, terrific shell explosions, perpetual artillery fire—facing incessant out-spittings of hell, he who endures the ordeal, whether unhurt or wounded most craves a smoke.

"It is impossible, almost, to exaggerate the continuous need of the men for something to smoke." A smoke is the one form of comfort the soldier in the trench or convalescent hospital ardently desires. The Over-Seas Club is constantly besought by officers and men, by hospital superintendents and chaplains to send the solace that attaches to a full tobacco pouch or a good supply of cigarettes.

The Over-Seas Tobacco Club Fund continually is drawn upon to supply smokes for British and Belgian soldiers. To those of British ancestry and to those who sympathize with the Belgians, it appeals, saying: "We of the Over-Seas Club are especially concerned in supplying the smoke-needs of the armies of the British Empire. Not only English, Scottish, Irish and Welsh, but also the Canadians, the Australians, the New Zealanders, the South Africans, the West Indians, etc."

Accompanying each "collecting list" is the plea: "Please show this collecting list to all your friends .....associates ..... employees, and ask them to join in a gift to the men "out there" who are bearing the brunt of the figh

"Remittances and collecting lists should l mailed to the depositaries of the fund, J. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall St., New York. A knowledgments are sent to every collecto The collecting lists are posted across to Lo don Headquarters, but the money itself transmitted by cable, so that the U-boa cannot touch it. The cigarettes and tobac go in bulk across the Atlantic, insured again all possible contingencies. The 25c. packag of "smokes," made up in England from t bulk stock, cross the Channel in heavil guarded government vessels with other arm supplies."

So the U-boats do not "get" either t money supplied to the fund or the "smokes

The New York office of the Over-Seas Cl is in the Flatiron building. The official charge, until recently, was Francis Jone Called to London to assume the duties of se retary to the "Fund," Mr. Jones has been su ceeded in New York by M. Rittenberg, wh can speak informatively, and from exper ence, concerning how urgently the men at t front are in need of smokes. For he sa active service "somewhere in France," till t doctors declared him to be incapacitated f further duty on the firing line.

The Over-Seas Club is under the patronag of King George V. Viscount Northcliffe the president. Sir Edward Ward, Directo General of Voluntary Organizations (a branc of the British War Office), supervises official the whole working of the Tobacco Fund an distributes the gift-parcels of "smokes" at th front.

Administrative expenses af headquarte are met out of the general resources of th club. The fund is audited by Barrow, Wad Guthrie & Co., 25 Broad St., New York, an E. Layton Bennett, Sons & Co., chartered ac countants, 31-32 Broad Street Avenue, Lon don, E. C.

Only Two Cigarettes in a Trench Occupied by British Troops

nor of "Over the Top" Obtains $3,000 in Providence for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

he man who did his bit so valiantly "over re" is now more than doing his share for i fellow soldiers in France, "over there." l: "man" is Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, n author of "Over The Top," the novel of n great War which has created a sensation his country. Sergeant Empey was three es wounded while fighting the Germans ing his two years of service in the Euro- n trenches. As part of his insistent effort elp swell the contributions now pouring in "Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund," the anization which is supplying the American dier with the much craved "smoke" on other side, Empey played the role of tioneer at the Winter Garden Fete recently en in the Narragansett Hotel at Providence, ode Island, for the benefit of the Fund. ring his auditors to a frenzy of enthusiasm patriotism by a vivid recital of the part ch tobacco plays in the lives of American liers now in France, the soldier-author raised re than three thousand dollars among the embled guests.

he author of "Over the Top," outbid the ders and fairly emptied the pockets of hun- ds of diners and dancers. He first took the r, at his own suggestion, offering an auto- phed copy of his message from the trenches auction. Competition began spiritedly. But lid not satisfy Empey. "Here's your chance show your patriotism," he urged. "They're ting for you 'over there.' Give them this comfort!"

hen the man who went and who knows what kes mean in the trenches plunged into the ding. Under his stimulus, and the example his greater sacrifices, the bidding became tantly keener. It continued until at the max of $1,000 deafening applause and cheers wned the soldier-auctioneer's "Sold."

A moment later, Empey seized a silk Ameri- flag. He held it high and silence fell. ereupon he took advantage of the impressive ment by saying with emotion, "You can't buy that. No man can buy it!" Bidders at once offered for this prize.

"You can't outbid me on that flag," Empey shouted. "I offer $1,000." And a tumult of cheering and applause followed. Soldiers and sailors who attended the fete, rushed to the Sergeant, picked him up and carried him around while an orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Contributing his "bit" necessitated despatching a messenger to find a blank check which the impromptu auctioneer immediately filled out for the tobacco fund. "Believe me, I know what it means," he remarked. But not satisfied with this much, Empey insisted on outdoing all rival bidders on subsequent offerings until his audience resolved to outbid him at all costs.

A PATRIOTIC OFFER

United Cigar Stores Co. Will Give Cash to Former Employes Who Win Promotion in the Army or Navy.

Additional inducements to good work for Uncle Sam are offered in an announcement made Tuesday by the United Cigar Stores Co. Each man employed by the company for six months or more who has left his job to enter the army or navy will receive from the company upon promotion in the Federal service an amount equal to 10 per cent. of his pay from the Government.

Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Co., has sent a letter to former employees saying:

"One of the fundamental principles governing the operation of our company has been the policy to instill a progressive spirit in the individual and in every way possible to promote in him the ambition to advance and by competitive effort to earn extra compensation for exceptionally good work.

"We feel that while you have left our employ to do your duty in the service of your country we want you to know that we are still deeply interested in your progress, believing that the same hard work, the same conscientious and loyal service which won recognition or promotion for you in our ranks also will enable you to climb in the ranks of the army or navy.

"To continue our policy of recognition of merit and ability we will pay to each of you who on or after the date of this letter secures promotion in Government service and who is eligible, as stated below, an amount equal to 10 per cent. of your monthly earnings while in Government service, this amount to be paid monthly for a period not to exceed twenty-four months (or for the duration of the war, at our option).

"It is hoped that the knowledge that the United organization is still with you will add to your ambition to climb as high as possible in the service of the Government."

The list to date of former employees eligible to share in this plan has 159 names. As there may be others the company asks each man receiving the letter to send in the names of United men who may be in the army or navy without the company's knowledge.

Bringing Wounded to a Belgian Hospital "Over There"

At the Approach to the Station

A Chance to Hear About Things Up-State

NEW YORK STATE CAPITOL DISTRICT,
January 14, 1918.

Things ain't allus whut they seem! And Grandma Perley wasn't the only person to say so, either! Moreover, she said it without choking, while she smoked a reed stem corncob, just like Velvet Joe does it!

Then Lionel got his! From everybody. For wasn't he one of those there tarnashun Copperheads, so much disrespected during the Civial War?

And wasn't Gus Thomas doing his darndest to put Barrymore in an awful hole, trimmin' him up with them other Copperheads? While friends, relatives, foes, too, turned from Lionel, leaving him about so popular as the Shuberts are with Klaw & Erlanger.

After forty years of this, Lionel Barrymore came back! With a jury-box packed with noxious neighbors, they at last reluctantly admitted, from the evidence, that perhaps, after all, Lionel, the Copperhead, was no trade-dollar, but 100 per cent pure!

Becuz Marse Linculm, of whose famous Barnard features Lionel exhibited two plaster specimens, had personally sworn Barrymore in as an Old King Brady. So he wasn't a Copperhead, you see, but a shining shadow of the secret service!

That things ain't allus whut they seem also applies to the present character of the tobacco business.

And Grandma Perley needn't tell us about it, neither! For, notwithstanding the rush and crush of many of the big cigar and cigaret manufacturing plants, the jobbing and retailing branches seem to have a Copperhead blight cast upon them!

All the magic of Gus Thomas and Lionel Barrymore in dramatic combination cannot solve this Copperism just now.

It's nothing more nor less than too many coppers piled onto retail prices at a critical time when consumers are kickin' at the mounting costs of meat-wheat-heat!

Question is, tho, can the trade wait for forty years, Lionel-like, 'til the neighbors rush to the rescue with sense-an'-cents?

During the storm, the other night, when the lights in Troy were doused by Federal order, a River street tobacconist was seen groping in the highway.

"What's yer lost?" sympathized the constable.

"My Albia car," sighed the Trojan, "but I see its tracks!"

Local No. 68, of the Cigarmakers Union, Albany, recently issued a statement about the closing of the Payn Tobacco Co.'s Anndora factory on Broadway.

After reviewing the situation, as reported in a former issue of TOBACCO, the Union officials assert that there is no dispute between the company and the men. But they attempt to show that this shutdown is merely another case of a manufacturer endeavoring to produce inferior goods at higher prices.

They say the factory may never re-open in Albany, and, tho it does, the Cigarmakers realize the plant will be managed as an open-shop.

Meantime, the McEwans, who operate the other Payn Tobacco Co. long cut factory in Albany, refuse to make a reply to the Union.

Alright, Vanderlip, he's got one! Sure, it's been proven, shown and satisfied, that Shufeldt has one of your thrift stamps! So you can return to your duties, President Vanderlip, as head of the National City Bank, and manager of the Thrift campaign, worrying no more about that stamp!

When Shufeldt bought it he intended to get some more, right away. But Christmas, New Year's, business, and a million other queer things have butted in to make it well-nigh impossible to purchase the usual quarter stamp each day. In a few days, tho——

For he says, says M. A. Shufeldt, "Altho business is now at this very minute just a trifle quiet, we have hopes. Bold cigars are selling wherever cigars are selling. And the house of L. W. Killeen, Schenectady, N. Y., U. S. A., is receiving its fair share of jobbing trade.

"Workin', Workin' on der Railroad,
All der live long Day,
Workin', Workin' on der Railroad,
Yust ter past der time avay!"

Oh, years an' weeks ago, when Bill Lakin used to sing that swan-song he really, honest-an'-truly did work on a real railroad! 'Course, he didn't never, well, hardly ever, work yust ter past der time avay!

No, no, his previous, past and present record with Waitt & Bond satisfies everyone that Bill Lakin wouldn't lie down on any job!

But, before Blackstone cigars became his bank-check, Bill actually swung the lamp on a Big Bend R. R. in the central west. It was a railroad with rules an' regulations, just like a cigar factory, and one of the things the management insisted upon was this:

At the approach to every station it was Bill's immediate hop, skip, an' jump to joyously depart from the cushion in the lil' darlint red-caboose, and mount the main staircase to the roof-garden.

Well, Bill liked that part of the job, he did! Especially when the weather was Nor'-by-Nor'-East, slippery an' sliddin' like, as it is in most spots right now!

Oh, yes, yes! Bill admired that portion of the rules book! So, in due course of time and date, Bill's conductor yells out:

"Over th' Top, Bill. Y'know yer table!" And Bill, rudely aroused from a sleepy slumber, growls a sweet retort, with all the zzzzxxxx's and the plain an' fancy knittin' crudely eliminated by a Blackstonish censor.

Well, then, 'twas the 'ductor's turn to get mad! And he did! Fact is, says Bill, he got so riled up about it that he ran into a block, then backed into clear, if you know what that sort of R. R. lingo means!

Nex' time you see Bill, tho, kinder look 'im over! Right then you'll instantly come to think of it just why Bill doesn't carry any permanent black-an'-blue lights as a souvenir of the job he thus resigned!

For the Honorable William F. Lakin is one of those six-by-six chaps which such puny weakfish as Big Bill Edwards an' John L. Sullivanosky endeavor to imitate!

And, too, when Bill cocks that 7⅞ size hair-remover over either his right or his left eye, you also directly sorter unnerstan' why the Waitt & Bond sales-manager thinks Bill is some salesman!

Because nobody ever dared to refuse Bill an order—see the cut of the Blackstone Boston factory—Bill fights to flood it!

Says Jimmie Baker: "Our Directory Hotel business is very fair indeed. Quite the same may be reported for the cafe and cigar trade. Transients from the railroad station, opposite, keep both Snyder and myself right on the job, day and night. So things in our part of Albany are not so slow as dealers elsewhere admit."

Don't sent it! For, if you do, one of Uncle Sammy's postal nephews will seize it!

It's solidified alcohol that the postoffice has forbidden to soldiers and sailors, both Ove Here and Over There. Included within th limits of this ban are cigar lighters, torches fuse lighters, storm lighters, even matches!

Packages for those in the service are carefull inspected, so it's no use to suspicion yoursel with bundles packt in assortments of cigars cigarets, tobaccos, mixed with the embargoe articles.

Phone plot: "All these popular blended an seed-Havana 10 cent brands will soon be 1 and 12 cents, there's no doubt of it." And Gi Thompson, the Clinton Square retailer, hung up the receiver with a jounce as he acknowledged this anti-Sherman restraint of trade compact with another Albany dealer's: "Yeh, I guess so!"

"Imported cigars are not selling as they were a year or six months ago," reflected Aaron Pareira, the North Pearl street retailer, Albany. "But blended goods are going better than ever. So it's just as well. Perhaps it's even more satisfactory."

"Understand you put me in TOBACCO," hailed Bernie Levy, sometime soldier, tobacconist, son of a tobacconist, nephew of a tobacconist. "But did you say my command as guardsman, lieutenant of the Capitol provisional company, automatically expired upon my promotion? For it did, and I am now assigned to Company C, 10th Regiment, New York Guard, endeavoring to muster another outfit. This military game changes even more rapidly than the present price schedules of the once calm tobacco trade." And Bernie buttoned up his chesty olive-drab overcoat,lit a Lucky Strike cigaret marching forth to recruit that desired branch of dough-boys for the army in Albany.

"Is it cold in Montreal?" A. W. Hiscoe adjusted his Lord Chamberlain twin-monocles, twirled the half-inch black curtain-cord 'tween thumb an' indexer, deliberately filled an' lighted a pipe-pack of Edgeworth—then thawed out: "I say, now, my wife and I thought we'd perish up there in the Canadian widerness of Quebec and Ontario. Never in all my travels for the Tobacco Products have I seen such weather! It was cold! But things are cheaper and more plentiful in Toronto and Montreal than they are here. Except woolen goods. Food is less expensive, and my new line of breakfast oats are selling up there like hot coal!"

Writing to Henry Hotaling, his old buddy at the Hotel Ten Eyck cigar stand, Albany, former assistant Bill Van Auken insists army life is the stuff! Since he recently married, going to Texas as a 2nd lieutenant in the U. S. Regular Cavalry, Bill swears by his pen-point that the boots an' saddles will remain his permanent occupation, even after the war. Very soon, if his expectations are realized, Bill will become a first lieutenant, with one of those shining silver bars to carry on either shoulder. So the grand old cigar business can go to pot for all Van cares!

He denies it! Yes, sir, George flatly repudiates the somewhat general belief that his middle-central name is Washington! Yeh, George frankly admits Thompson to be his 'tother title. But you notice he isn't issuing any general explanation of just what that there W. stands for.

However, lissen to Geo. W.: "Put me down on your list for a subscription to TOBACCO. It's as comfortable as a Fatima cigaret to a tired traveling pusson, so I must have it! And, speaking of Fatimas, did you know the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. is the largest cigaret manufacturer in the U. S.? Our factories produce the biggest single seller in the country—Piedmont, the marvel of the south and west. While right here in our own Capitol District our increase for last year was something like four to five million cigarets. Delays in transportation are only a few of the troubles. Labor shortage and material advances are some others. That's what's the matter!"

Have you missed it? Sure. It's gone! Noth-

:g remains to mark the spot—not even a single ire!

For the immense electric sign that the Dear-:yne Brothers Tobacco Co. have had across the ntire sidewalk up South Pearl and Division :reets in Albany, is gone.

What with local agitation, anti-sign city :dinances, lightless lights, hooked on to all ose other things which aim to abolish wooden ndians, outside showcases, electric signs, and ie like, the Dearstynes decided to forestall the nticipated laws and regulations by removing ie Sealskin sign.

In a very short time it is generally believed ie streets of Albany will be so idealistic rough the removal of mere commercial acces-ories that our former friend, Vladimir Iljic Iljnav, better known as the Russian dictator, enine, may drive about town in his nice little roshka, and not be offended by the former ames and trademarks of merchandise he used o buy when he resided in the United States.

"Cigars are dead. No bulk or box trade to peak of since the holidays, altho our regular rug business is rather fair." This, notwith-tanding the favorable location of the A. B. Huested Drug Co., State and Eagle streets, lbany, right opposite the State Capitol, and in he downtown path of many permanent and ransient residents of the city. Manager Charlie Krum takes especial good care of the cigar sec-ion, urging the boys in the store to give this epartment their particular attention.

Ralerode Direcktor Genneral: "Plees sur vood it bee askin' two mutch uv yu-uns ef yu ole beck th kole an sugger an hurry a long vif th Sovereign ciggarettes for the Capitole Distreek?"

This heart-burning appeal of Jimmie, the ele-ator-boy, may save a life if it reaches McAdoo n time! For, jobber and retailer alike, all have been out of Sovereign cigaretts in this section for some while. And they are a popular five-ent smoke keenly desired by the boys, big and ittle.

New rations of Egyptian Straights are being ssued to the trade by local jobbers. They are till packt in tens. But they now come in two lozen cartons, instead of the 250 cigarets as efore. While they retail for 12 in place of the 10 and 11 cents of the previous stock.

Ever since those flashy Italian briars came to own the original light and plain finished briars with rubber bits have had a pain in the chest. Because the Kaufmann Brothers & Bondy brand, styled Dinwoodie, and the William De-muth Messina and Lucerne Italio pipes have made the unbaked briars look common in com-parison. These new goods retail for $1 and more, with the emphasis on the more.

"What do you think of that?" jubilated Joe McElveney, "I know where you kin get a chicken dinner for fifteen centavos!"

"Where?" demanded the crowd in the cigar store.

"Why," drawled Joe, "right down the street at the feed store."

NOW KILLITS GETS IT

Attorney General Begins Contempt Proceedings in U. S. Supreme Court Against a Federal District Judge

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—Contempt proceed-ings were instituted in the United States Supreme Court to-day against Federal Judge John M. Killits, of the District Court for North-ern Ohio, by Attorney-General Gregory, charg-ing Judge Killitts with suspending execution of judgment indefinitely against a bank embezzler, in violation of the Supreme Court's specific order.

Judge Killits suspended execution of an im-prisonment sentence against James J. Henahan, who pleaded guilty in 1915. Subsequently the Supreme Court, on application of Attorney-Gen-eral Gregory, issued an order holding Judge Killits had usurped the pardoning power re-posed only in the President, and ordered the writ suspending execution against Henahan set aside. This was called to the attention of Judge Killits on December 15, but on December 26, acting on a new motion he issued another order suspending execution of the imprisonment sen-tence until January 31, 1918.

The only other contempt case ever before the United States Supreme Court came from Chat-tanooga, Tenn., in 1909, when Sheriff Shipp and others were found guilty of contempt in not protecting a negro prisoner from being lynched.

Henahan, whose sentence of five years in Leavenworth Prison was suspended by Judge Killits, was an official of a bank in Toledo, O. He claimed that he had been pardoned by President Wilson under a proclamation issued last August granting clemency to all offenders whose sentence had been suspended by Federal courts. Previously it had been held by the Supreme Court that Federal courts had no au-thority to suspend execution of their own sen-tences.

Speculations Concerning the Cuban Crop

It Is Possible That the Yield of Remedios Will Be Much Greater Than Last Year—Vuelta Abajo Not So Certain—Holders of Partido Resagos Fear the New Crop Will Reach the Market Before They Can Sell—Havana Cigar Manufacturers Receive More Orders Than They Expected.

HAVANA, January 11.—Holders of Partido resagos now entertain some fears that the new crop may reach the market before they have a chance to dispose of what they have, if the pres-ent lull in the demand for Partido wrappers and resagos continues.

Crop prospects grow even more favorable for Remedios, although the cold snap last week re-tarded the growth of the plants temporarily. Since the temperature has moderated consid-erably, all the vegueros feel confident of being able to harvest a large crop, provided Dame Nature only sends them a little more rain this month, and once again in the second half of February. The growth of the principal plant is secure, even if it should not rain, and this alone would yield about the same quantity as last year, therefore the only point in doubt now is, whether if additional rains come the size of the crop will be doubled.

From different reports at hand the Partido crop promises at least to be as large as last year, and as irrigation is largely utilized in this section, the planters are more independent of Nature's blessings, in the shape of rain, than anywhere else on the island.

Vuelta Abajo is still in doubt, as the rains that fell were not well distributed over the whole region. They were sporadic and of a light nature, so in some parts the crop promises well; in others the vegueros still complain of a drought. Although enough rain has fallen on the north coast and the hilly portions, the trou-ble lies chiefly in the lowland section, where usually the finest leaf is grown. A few large planters have the benefit of thorough irrigation systems, and are able to produce acceptable leaf even in dry years, but the great number of small vegueros are not so fortunately situated. Be-sides Nature's way of sending the rains is the best after all, and human knowledge and skill cannot quite equalize the effect of the absence of the sun, and the heavy rain clouds, as well as the general moist temperature, which produce the best growing results. The intelligent farm-ers only supply the irrigation at night time. Neverthelss there is something lacking in the aroma of the leaves treated by human handi-craft, as compared with Nature's process. For-tunately the tobacco plant will withstand quite a long drought and revive wonderfully with a good shower, so there are reasonable hopes of obtaining a good crop in the Vuelta Abajo.

Exports of cigars, per steamship Morro Cas-tle, consisted of 435 cases, containing 2,330,990 cigars, which were consigned to the following countries, viz.: To Great Britain, 1,706,140; to the United States, 500,850; to Australia, 74,000; to Canada, 36,000; to British Africa, 11,000, and to the Belgian Congo, 3,000 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco from Havana during the week ending December 31, totaled 13,222 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To all ports of the United States, 6,889; to Canada, 1,815; to Great Brit-ain, 321; to Spain, 135; to France, 2,013, and to the Argentine Republic, 2,049 bales.

Cigar manufacturers here are busier now than most of them dared to anticipate towards the close of the year. American importers have already begun to order more cigars of the regu-lar current sizes, and this in connection with the unfilled British orders, a fair demand from Spain, France, South America, Australia and other countries has prevented any wholesale dis-charge of cigarmakers, which was feared. Of course not all the factories are so well situated, as the bulk of the orders have been distributed among the largest and best known ones.

The only leaf buyer who arrived this week was Benito Martinez, cigar manufacturer of Chicago.

Don Pepin Rodriguez, the senior partner of Romeo y Julieta S. A., arrived on the 4th inst., after a somewhat tempestuous voyage, but in the best of health and spirits. When we saw him this week he said that he was astonished that the factory had still so many unfilled orders on hand for the United States, Great Britain, France, Spain, South America, South Africa, Australia and some minor countries, and which he had never seen at the beginning of the New Year. Romeo y Julieta has also a big trade all over the Island, notwithstanding the fact prices have increased considerably. The out-look is certainly a prosperous one for Romeo y Julieta.

Partagas also is working as actively as here-tofore, having plenty of orders ahead in all directions of the wide world.

Punch reports the same steady trade which it has enjoyed all along last fall and this winter, therefore the outlook is promising enough.

Hoyo de Monterey, while not quite so busy upon orders for the American market, never-theless has good orders for Spain, South America and other countries.

Belinda is working steadily with the same forces of cigarmakers, as it has not felt any diminution in the receipt of new orders.

Calixto Lopez & Co. are kept busy in their cigar factory, as well as in their cigarette fac-tory, and for which latter they have purchased around 500 bales additionally of Vuelta Abajo Colas, as well as botes of Remidios.

Por Larranga is working strong still for the British market not alone, but also in many other directions.

Ramon Allones, C. E. Beck & Co. and Flor de Tomas Gutierrez are fairly busy.

The Pequot Brings Manila Cigars to America

In 1817 the American ship Pequot sailed from the Philippine Islands with the first Manila cigars for the United States, arriving at Salem, Mass., in July, 1818. The record of the Pequot's adventures together with the description of her cargo is contained in an old letter written by a Salem merchant, Saltonstall. Of the Manila cigars he wrote:—

> "Manilas are of a style approved by Spaniards who excel in knowledge of cigars. They burn handsomely and have a flavor very agreeable. A man may smoke many during a day and not be surfeited or made ill."

The character of Manila tobacco has not changed since then. The quality of cigars has improved and the quantity imported into the United States is counted in the hundred millions.

business man recently, while in consultation it his attorney as to ways and means for ging his excess profits tax, was suddenly onfronted by the intrusion of a collector for a a sufferers' fund. Did the irate siness man follow old Father William's exam-erise up in his wrath and kick the collector nstairs? Nothing of the kind. He made the check and handed it over without ques-on and then turned back to consult with his wer as to how he could save half his chari-le contribution by evading the profits tax. n fact is that during the present conflict phi-nropy has been much more efficient than the ernment. The art of taking has been trans-med into a pure science and the art of giving become as easy as rolling off a log.

The secret of the new science consists in the overy of a new psychological principle, to d that it is easier to make a man give a sec-d than a first time, with geometric decrease of fficulty as the number of his gifts increases. r instance, it may require the most wily plot-g the most careful approaches, through thers-in-law, through a wife's sister, through an who once rescued him from drowning, to rw a rich prospect to the sticking point; you a have to give him a dinner, mellow him with l wines, or you may have to play golf with and let him beat you disgracefully; in short, ay require all the wisdom of the serpent d the tact of the dove to lure him to the bait d make him take it. Once, however, he has ed the apple of philanthropy, has used his kbook on behalf of charity, you have him. n old way used to be to let a contributor e, as soon as he had given, on the theory he had exhausted himself. Business men are baited ne challenge that the campaign is not being on business-like lines. Very well, let them in and organize it. A marvellous net is woven through whose meshes not the lest fry can wriggle, by the business process covering the territory." A sort of fever es, the rivalry in taking money away from people for philanthropic purposes is found quite as fascinating as the rivalry of selfish ness. For many men the slogan becomes a that "if business interferes with your col-n of money for the children of Northern France, cut out business." The newspapers catch fire; the glory of giving more than you can afford thrills in the air. Special orators develop, with a special gift for piping pledges out of the pockets of people at mass meetings. Ministers and rabbis neglect the souls of their congregations in the more formal sense, while they occupy themselves extracting money for the physical needs of a world of sufferers.

As the New York Evening Post says, editorially: "The phenomenon of generosity which has sprung up, mushroomlike, during the last three years, is a marvellous plant, almost unknown hitherto in the botany of national impulses. Without a Savonarola to excite us, we fling our valuable vanities gladly into the bonfire of charity. And we do this without thinking once of the emotions of gratitude aroused by what we do.

"Only those who have the duty of distributing our gifts in Europe and Asia can testify to the unending gratitude and, above all, the unending amazement of 'them that receive' at the seemingly inexhaustible source of American charity. Always the same question is asked from day to day: 'Will they be able to send the next hundred thousand?' And always the comforting return telegram is received, laconic and to the point: 'Please draw on the State Department, account of..... Philanthropic Commission for the sum of one hundred thousand dollars.'"

HOW BURLEY DEVELOPED

Originating in Brown County, Ohio, in 1864, One Type of Tobacco Has Attained Tremendous Popularity.

The world's annual yield of tobacco exceeds two billion pounds; the United States produces about one-third of all the tobacco raised, and the State of Kentucky grows about 450,000,000; North Carolina, second, raises some 300,000,000; Virginia comes third with 150,000,000, and Tennessee and Ohio each yield 100,000,000. these being the leading tobacco growing States.

"The bright Virginia type, largely led from the first in popularity in the world's demand, it being mild and fine in texture, and in color lemon, and no other type is suitable for plug wrappers, and no other type has—till recently—been used for cigarette manufacture, and its use as a pipe smoke also, has naturally made it the most largely used type we grow in the United States. We are supplying this type to almost all the nations of the earth, in greater or lesser quantities, as, so far, no other country has seemed to have the requisite climate, soil and skilled labor to produce this peculiar type of tobacco," writes E. T. Robards in the Southern Tobacco Journal.

"This type was first introduced to the English trade about the year 1586 by Sir Walter Raleigh, and at one time, historians tell us, 'tobacco was used as a medium of exchange in place of money.'

"For a century or more, in Kentucky, there was but one type, known as the Pryor, which was mainly grown in western Kentucky, and also in Tennessee, and while there was a limited home demand for this type, our main customers for this product were Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Austro-Hungary, Belgium, Africa and occasionally Russia. This type of tobacco was too strongly impregnated with nicotine to ever become universally or extensively used, for all beginners—who have not acquired the taste and stood the first shock of 'nausea' from its use—may as well prepare themselves for it, when they first begin, and few there be who, if they knew in advance the results, would ever tackle the Pryor type to learn the habit.

"In 1864, in Brown County, Ohio, a man by the name of Burleigh, passing through his field one day, discovered a peculiar species of tobacco, grown at the root of a tree. From whence it came he knew not, nor had he ever seen its like, or heard of such a species. He planted the seed, and grew it, and was pleased with its appearance. Then it was carried into Mason County, Kentucky. The area of its growth was gradually expanded, till it was produced all over Kentucky. The leading manufacturers found it had qualities of mildness, owing to its low content of nicotine, and being very porous, it would carry the desired quantity of licorice and sugar as a sweetening, to meet the taste of the beginners, and also the older men, whose stomachs could no longer handle the Pryor type products; so from a few millions in the 70's, we now find Kentucky, Ohio, Missouri and West Virginia all producing this type almost exclusively, till they are producing near 300,000,000 pounds annually. It has not been more than a score of years since there was little Burley used as a pipe smoke, but now this branch of the consuming demand has grown so rapidly that it is hard to tell which has the greater sale, the plug and twist combined, as a chew, or the pipe smoke.

"Another branch of the tobacco industry that has recently made friends with the Burley type is that composed of the cigarette producers. To secure color and texture, this type of the weed has been carefully bred by expert growers in central Kentucky, in the limestone lands, so that they are producing the classiest leaf, and meeting the manufacturing demand for cigarette wrappers, as well as fillers. It has been only a few years since that to sell a crop of Burley at $15 per hundred pounds was an unknown thing. yet last year the State average was more than this, and this year it is sure to be $25, and many farmers have sold at $30 and $35, and one we heard of sold for $40, and another refused $50 per hundred crop round, which means from $300 to $500 per acre, or more than the land is worth, on which this product is grown. We have seen these fancy 'cigarette wrappers' sell loose on the floor from $60 to $80 on up to $100 per hundred, and a few years ago before the loose-leaf markets came, and gave the planters training, and a market for the small lots, these 'fancy lots' were not known, and were wasted by packing in with the commoner grades, thus all this classy stock was a total loss to the farmer, as well as the growing needs of the manufacturer, who now pays the farmer well for his care. Last winter we saw the sale bill of a farmer in Madison County, who had measured off an acre and one-seventh of land, and he realized over $634 for the lot, or over $500 per acre, and the way prices are starting this year, we are destined to see all high records smashed."

One of the most expensive bonfires ever set off in Oshkosh was arranged by John Winteler, cigar manufacturer, in the yard at the rear of his factory at 44 Main street. In the pile was a good sized stock of leaf tobacco, cigars and boxes which became damaged by smoke and water when a fire started recently in the stockroom of the cigar factory. Several hundred dollars' worth of property went up in smoke in the bonfire, the tobacco being consumed in the presence of George A. Finch, deputy collector of United States internal revenue. According to the law Mr. Winteler was obliged to destroy the stock damaged by the fire in order to insure that it would not be used for the making of cigars for the trade. He has replaced the damaged materials with new stock. Adjustment of the fire loss has not yet been completed.

Steamer Olivette Stranded Near Havana

P. & O. Liner from Tampa Caught on a Cuban Reef—No Lives Lost—Vessel May Be Rescued—Cigar Manufacturers Hope to Make New Records in 1918—Jaime Pendas Re-elected President of Centro Asturiano—Railroad Building in Florida.

TAMPA, January 12.—Almost without exception, the local factories are working full forces, the new year having opened up in a manner that indicates that 1918 will "hang up" another remarkable production record, as many manufacturers have bowed to the will of Necessity, and increased prices to meet the pressing needs of the present, the year will undoubtedly yield greater revenue than 1917.

Cigar manufacturers and others of the trade who visit Cuba annually will regret to learn that the steamship Olivette of the Peninsular & Occidental line, which has been in service between Port Tampa and Havana for years, went aground on the Cuban coast four miles east of Havana last Thursday. At the time the report was received other vessels were standing by and by this time the steamer may have been taken from the reef.

At the annual meeting of the Centro Asturiano (Spanish Club) Jaime Pendas, the well known cigar manufacturer, was re-elected president, while B. Cosio, a manufacturer of equal prominence was made first vice-president and Manuel A. Garcia second vice-president. Alfred Pendas is treasurer and B. Pascual secretary. The club sent greetings to the press and all other clubs and proffered its aid in all phases of war work.

Railroad extension work is going on in Southern Florida to a greater extent than in any section of the South. Work has just begun on the cross-state railroad between Fort Myers, on the Gulf Coast, and Miami on the Atlantic, which will eventually touch Tampa; a charter has been granted to the Manatee River Railroad, eight miles of which have been constructed and headquarters of which are in Tampa, and work on the Tampa Southern, connecting Tampa with Saratoga, is being pushed rapidly. Reports from Washington also indicate that provision will soon be made for reopening Florida's phosphate mines in full blast, these having been partially paralyzed by the European war. It is now regarded as practically certain that Tampa will be selected as the site for the Gulf naval base.

Matthew W. Berriman, of Berriman Bros., manufacturers of the Jose Vila cigars, who recently went to a hospital for a minor operation, has improved rapidly.

Jerome Regensburg, resident manager of the Regensburg factories, has not returned from his holiday visit to New York.

A. Santaella, in addition to attending to business at the Santaella factory, is golfing on the local courses. He is expected to be in Tampa for some time.

Jerry Kohlberg, the well known shade grown leaf dealer of New York, is spendi some time in the city.

J. A. Garcia of the Perfecto Garcia fact is in the city from Gotham.

Effective Work for the Robert Burns Brand

Careful Analysis Precedes the Application of Publicity

eviewing national advertising, as applied he marketing of branded cigars, Newspa-dom says: "The facts uncovered about the r market in general are extremely interest-There are in round numbers 30,000,000 of smoking age in the United States. Of e men, approximately 7,500,000, or 25 per , do not smoke, or smoke so little as to be a ligible factor. There are left, therefore, 00,000 men who are smokers of cigars, s, cigarettes, or combinations of them. It estimated that about two out of every three kers are not cigar consumers. Therefore, present cigar market, in general figures, is third of the men who smoke, or 7,500,000. anvass of those in a position to know showed they were unanimous that the average cigar ker uses about 1,000 cigars a year. On this s, the 7,500,000 cigar smokers would con-ie 7,500,000,000 cigars.

Of the national production of cigars, more one-third is represented by those retailing less than five cents, namely Cheroots and gies. The remainder, about two-thirds, or 5,000,000,000 cigars, is consumed by two-ds of the cigar smokers, or 5,000,000 men. se smokers are just 5 per cent of the popu-on. The market for three for 25 cents and er cigars is estimated by careful check-up e at the outside 20 per cent of the 5 cents up market, or 1,000,000 smokers. On the 0 per year average these men consume 0,000,000 cigars. Of cigars at three for cents and up, made in the United States or orted, there are, according to the best trade horities, just about an even 1,000,000,000.

There is a marked difference, however, between the consumption of ten cents and over cigars as found in cities of 25,000 and over, and in communities from 2,500 to 25,000. The larger cities show a ratio of about two to one over the smaller places. Therefore, about 2 per cent of the population in the larger cities and 1 per cent in the smaller cities were used as a working basis. Cities of 25,000 and over total population—34,469,034—2 per cent of this representing "class" smokers, 689,380; cities of 2,500 to 25,000 total population—16,687,566—1 per cent of this representing "class" smokers, 166,785; total "class" smokers in towns and cities, 856,165; balance, 143,835—total, 1,000,000.

"The above calculation leaves a balance of 143,835 smokers scattered through the remaining half of the population. This means people in towns under 2,500, and in farming and mountain territory. The foregoing calculations were based on cigar production as it stood in 1916. Much more than half of the ten-cent cigar business is done by the high-class stands, principally located in the business centers of cities and towns, that is, by the good hotel, tobacconist and drug-store stands. This means that the cigars are kept in good condition and are moved rapidly.

"The National campaign was inaugurated to do several things for Robert Burns, chief among them to link up sales with demand, and to broaden and strengthen the Robert Burns market. It is the belief of the company, however, that advertising is not intended primarily to build up demand, but that fully 90 per cent of its value lies in making the advertised brand easy to sell. It is by co-operation of salesman and dealer, along with the increased prestige and publicity a National campaign affords, that increased sales can be expected. The fact that the company is making public the talking points in favor of Robert Burns is urged on the dealers as an excellent reason for keeping Robert Burns constantly before the customer, so that he may link up the advertising with sales. For this reason certain dealer helps are provided, such as a transparency with the Robert Burns trademark head, and the words that fittingly close each ad, "Have you tried one lately?" They have also substituted for the picture of the factory that formerly appeared on the fly-leaf of every Robert Burns box, a story of Robert Burns cigars.

"The advertising copy itself plays up the idea, "A modern cigar," "A moderate cigar." Moderate combined with the modern idea of efficiency is the backbone of the advertising. The man who would keep his head clear and his nerves steady and who would, at the same time, smoke an all-Havana cigar is the man who will smoke Robert Burns. "Have you tried one lately?" written in script, closes every Robert Burns cigar advertisement. Little Bobbie goes hand in hand with Robert Burns. It is never advertised singly, but always gets a bit of the space of the ten-cent cigar, and his sales have always been two-and-a-half times greater, or even more, than the sales of the Robert Burns, on which the advertising has been done. This is probably because the five-cent market is at least four times as great as the ten-cent market.

"The whole scheme of Nationalizing Robert Burns, and incidentally Little Bobbie, involved primarily the education of the jobber and dealer. It undertook first to show the jobber and the dealer the potential market for Robert Burns as yet unworked in their own territory, and by openly outlining their proposed campaign they took the dealer into their confidence and kept him closely in touch with their progress through their monthly house organ.

PHILADELPHIA, January 14.—Now that the local association has become a reality after being a foregone impossibility for so many years in the imaginations of the very guys who are now its most active members, the organization is beginning to show signs of sprouting up and growing into a big feller even before it gets out of its swaddling clothes, so to speak. The very latest idea in said association is to merge it with the organization which has been under a full head of steam for some time over in Camden, which is in New Jersey, just across the Delaware from Philadelphia.

By way of the first step in this direction, W. S. Rodman, president of the Camden Association, attracted to the neighborhood of the Adelphia at 13th and Chestnut streets last Wednesday night by the noise made by the new baby among tobacco organizations, wandered over and got himself enrolled as a full fledged member in good standing. He thereupon bowed to the chair and the gentlemen present and announced that he will immediately put before the Camden body a proposition to establish one general association, with local divisions for each city, on the old "in union there is strength" theory.

The membership committee did itself proud in its report. Not only did it trot in a fine new collection of members, but it also announced a tentative plan, which was approved by the association, for a real live membership campaign, with sectional sub-committees, to go to every man in town who sells the weed in every form and either line him up as a member or find out why. The new members are, in addition to Mr. Rodman, Allen K. Moore, Oscar G. Link, Aufderheider & Son, Kuenstner Brothers, Stephen J. Bradley, I. Rabinowitz, Ellis Karr and Thomas A. Allely.

Progress was reported by the charter committee. The plan to canvass the city for new members was worked out by Charles Lehman. Sub-committees in various sections of the city are to work under Charles Leiber, the live wire chairman of the general committee on membership. Just to show that it isn't going to be bound down by red tape and get sot in its ways right at the start, the association moved, seconded and adopted a proposition to tinker with the constitution. Nothing very important, however, merely the changing of the meeting dates from the second and fourth Wednesdays to the second and fourth Tuesdays. Next session, January 22. Buffet lunch (that brings 'em out).

The entertainment committee also got a shake-up that injected some new blood and promises to bring out some real stunts at the sessions to come. As now constituted it consists of Charles B. Lloyd, chairman; Daniel S. Ostrow, G. Wachter, J. C. McDonnell, W. T. Bushell, S. B. Rosenberg and W. S. Rewalt.

As predicted, the association got down to business in the way of discussing trade topics, such as the gross return needed by the average cigar and tobacco retailer to make a fair living, stock turnover and similar subjects. Although no definite action was formulated, the discussion gave some of the members a much clearer idea of what they are up against in some respects. Leading members of the association believe that the average retailer needs a gross of thirty-three and a half per cent. to come out sufficiently ahead of the game.

Now that the New Year has had a fair young start Philadelphia manufacturers, just out of the throes of inventories and what proved to be the joys of annual meetings of salesmen and distributors, are beginning to wear that harassed look once more. In most instances it was cleared away temporarily by the returns for 1917, not to mention the fine prospects for the current year—providing, that the labor shortage and the coal shortage and other shortages get no shorter.

Two of the most successful of this year's meetings so far held were those of Bayuk Bros. and Antonio Roig & Langdorf Co. Bayuk's took the lads down to Atlantic City and fed 'em up, also giving them a chance to inhale the salt sea air and get a lot of pep for 1918. "Joe" Carlisle got a nice little Christmas present in the form of an announcement that hereafter he's to quit rounding up orders directly and is to sit in the conning tower, so to speak, and show others how to do it as general sales manager. Among those present at this session were Clyde McClure, Charles L. Steffens, George Weymer, H. D. Gayster, Thaddeus Griffin, E. C. McAllister and James Keough.

The Roig & Langsdorf session was held in a cafe in this city, those present being Jacob L. Langsdorf, Jack Kraus, manager; Leo F. Weiss, salesmanager; W. Belson, R. W. Nassauer, W. A. Yocum, Warren Lessor, Sam Gottlob, Charles H. Hamburger, J. J. Murphy, W. S. Rewalt, W. Weil, T. H. Ryan, J. H. Bradley, S. Dietz, Jonas Shaw, Sam Woelter, H. S. Martin and E. H. Davis.

A. G. Will, formerly with the Roig & Langsdorf Co., has gone over to the G. H. P. Co., makers of "Producto" and other brands, this city. Samuel Wachter, who has been conducting the retail stand in the Commercial Trust building at Broad and Market streets, has become a member of the Roig & Langsdorf sales force. He will continue to run the stand.

The General Cigar Co. has added to its string of Pennsylvania factories the plant and fixtures of Hilson & Schloss, Inc., at Mt. Carmel. Possession of the factory was taken on January 2. It will be known as the Luzerne branch.

Dealers here are trying hard to stop laughing over the Christmas vacation experiences of Arthur L. Holt, manager of the cigar department for Theodore Netter, at 5th and Market streets, and Jules Jacobs, Philadelphia representative of the I. Lewis cigar manufacturing company, of Newark. Having the interests of the cigar business at heart, they decided to go off together on one of those mixing-business-with-pleasure, or vice versa, little trips. So they hied them South and took a casual look at a few of the Florida plants, with that lofty air of the man who is going over to look at the real growing tobacco plants in Cuba. And then they hurried for the boat. Whereupon they ran smack up agin Uncle Sam, who said to them, through his duly accredited representative at whatever their port of departure was to be, "Nothing Doing" or words to that effect. It seems they had gone off without such little things as passports, and accordingly they couldn't get out of the country. So they decided they didn't wanta go to Cuba anyhow and went instead to Tampa, Jacksonville and Key West.

A THEATRICAL PROTEST.

Big theatrical interests in New York City on Monday, submitted a petition to State Fuel Administrator Alfred H. Wiggin, protesting against any plan to close the theatres in New York City for purposes of fuel conservation. William Travers Jerome, former District Attorney, who was retained by the managers to take charge of a fi against any curtailment of their fuel sp plies, said that a closing down of the e atres for three nights a week, such as s been suggested as a possibility by the H eral fuel administrators would really fo the theatrical houses out of business al gether, throw thousands of actors and ju ployes out of work, lose the governm thousands of dollars in war taxes, and wo save only a comparatively small amount coal.

CASE OF "COALED" BEER

Speaking of the use of coal and taking case of the breweries "for illustration only" New York Tribune says: "The Internal R enue reports for 1917 show that there w brewed in New York State during the y 9,535,744 barrels of beer. This, reduced pints, makes 2,365,856,512. E. D. Leach, sistant Food Administrator of Ohio, investiga this situation some time ago, and the figu which he issued show that the yearly output beer averaged a consumption of approximat one pound of coal to each pint of beer. N taking these figures for the entire State, t would amount to 1,182,923 tons of coal for year, or 3,240 tons per day during the ye This coal would heat 131,600 homes, with allowance of 100 pounds per day for a period six months, which is more than the ordin period in which heat is required. In ot words, it would heat for that period all of homes required in a city of 658,000 peopl

EL ROI-TAN

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

"Speeding Up" Sales in Chicago

Business Starts Off Better Than Expected

CHICAGO, January 11.—Frank Braynard has returned from a business trip to New York. F. B. is the manager of G. W. Faber, Inc.

Business has started with a rush at the factory of the Congress Cigar Co. All the boys are on the road again and orders are piling up for La Palina cigars.

A. T. Farvus now is representing E. Hoffman Co. He was formerly with the house of Moos.

Dulce cigars are as popular as ever. L. C. Marks & Co. do a good jobbing business on this clear Havana brand.

Wm. A. Vorhauer & Co. report that sales of Flor de Bustillo brand are increasing.

The Colonial Bar at 125 North Clark street, which failed for $50,000 a few months ago, has been purchased by A. Tierney, who operates the Auto Inn, a popular South Side cafe.

George Freitag, division manager for the American Tobacco Co., has returned from a visit to New York headquarters.

The new royal size of Tom Moore cigars has been placed with the trade. This size retails at 2 for 25 cents.

Harvey Vreeland has not come back to his Chicago office as yet. "Harve" must be having a good time in dear old New York, where he went to visit his firm, Benson & Hedges.

The La Salle Hotel cigar department ran a big ad in the local papers recently recommending La Salle Hotel B. Panatelas, of which they sell a pile.

William Jennings Bryan has been selected to play the final card for the prohibition forces in the great game between the wets and drys for control of Chicago. W. J. B. will be here at the end of the month to start the campaign.

Steele Wedeles have put Tom Keene and El Proposo brands in the 6 cent class. They now go to the trade at $43.

W. F. Datz, at 600 East 39th street, was held up recently. He lost $300 in cash, besides merchandise. Yeggs are still busy.

"Because of the war," they say, the material for women's dresses will be three and one-half yards. Goodness, it doesn't seem possible the girls use that much now, does it?

Frank Elliott, the C. B. Perkins Co. representative, has not returned here yet. Frank went East last month for the holidays.

A. Luebeck is no longer representing the jobbing house of Ruhstrat Cowley & Co.

Dealers report that 5 and 6 cent cigars had a very poor sale during the holidays. They could not account for it.

Burglars tried to enter the store of Bernstein & Schey recently. A large window of Romeo-Garcia cigars drew the yeggs' attention to this popular store. The firm suffered no loss as the robbers were frightened away after breaking the plate-glass window.

An important notice from the factory of Harris-Schwartz Co., Inc., New York, has reached all their customers in the city. It advises them that goods will have to be sold on the basis of 2 per cent. for cash in 10 days.

Little Penns, Little Bobbies and Little Toms will still be 5 cents. The new price oi the brands is now $37.50 per thousand.

"Pipe" the lines jobbed by Steele Wedeles & Co., Charles the Great, Theobald & Oppenheimer Rough Havanas, San Felice, El Toro, Tom Keene, William Penn, El Verso and Dubonnet. Some lines of big sellers; we don't blame Manager Bert Christian because he is so happy these days. Eight new cigar salesmen have been added to his force and his crew now consists of twenty-two well-known cigar ambassadors.

El Hijo Prodigo clear Havana brand made by Jose Escalante & Cia, of Tampa, has come to the front very fast. This brand is made in all the fine imported shapes, and its local distributors, Lilienfeld Brothers, find sales increasing rapidly.

The American Club, 4445 Grand Boulevard, do quite a cigar business. They carry several brands. The American was formerly the Colonial Club.

Mollie Monroe, an experienced cigar saleslady, has charge of the Hotel Stratford cigar department. Miss Monroe reports business very good.

The Hotel Bismarck has a very neat display in the Randolph street window, featuring Egyptian Deities Cigarettes.

Report is that 5 cent packages will soon be a thing of the past, some factories having already discontinued making same, and in the future only the 10 cent tins will be manufactured. "What's coming next?"

Thorwart & Roehling, the jobbers, put their efforts on La Famoso, S. Palo, Cuesta Rey and Thorwarts Seven Centers and, take it from us, they sell a raft of these four brands.

Can you imagine a jobbing house these days handling only goods made by their own factories? Well, we have one here and they are most successful. They are one of the largest jobbers in Chicago. We speak of Lilienfeld Brothers who job Idolita, El Modelo, Corina and El Hijo Prodigo from their Escalante factory, and La Azora, Charles the Eighth, Plantista and Le Selona from La Azora factory. Their retail stores like the jobbing end of their business carry only their own makes in the cigar line.

On meatless days one feels inclined to agree with Lamb's bon vivant who had only six courses, "counting fish as nothing."

A big Cyro campaign will be started shortly in Milwaukee. Harry Welcher, of Welcher Brothers, made arrangements for it on his visit to Peckarsky Brothers, the distributors, last month.

If you don't think Shoemaker & Co. are selling a lot of Gato and American Maid cigars, just glance at the shipments from Key West. Both are big sellers with this firm.

Salesmen are coming in again and we expect to see the same old chaps making their regular trips during the coming year.

Dealers report good sales of Dutch Masters. You see them on sale in new places every week.

Kenwood High Life and Grant Park cigars have a steady sale on the South Side. They are made by H. C. Schleeger.

In-B-Tweens keep right on selling. Don't seem to be any let-up in calls for this popular short smoke.

Fred. Oakes will be back shortly. He is now somewhere between Key West and Chicago. Fred. went East last month to visit the Gato factory, which he represents.

Sam. Cohn, 504 East 47th street, was "cleaned out" by burglars a few days ago. Sam. lost several thousand fine Havana cigars.

Charles Beck is the manager of the Harris Trust Building cigar stand of "Breitungs." Charlie is a hustler and has a host of friends. He naturally is doing a big business.

Condax cigarettes are coming back fast. You see many fine displays around the city on this well-known brand.

Mi Lola in the badger size are carried by many dealers. The 10 for a dollar box is in several places. The glass jar of 50 can be seen on almost every counter.

"Sanchez & Haya No. 1 Panatellas," selling at 5 cents, are seen in all the displays of the Best & Russell stores.

C. Krist at 47th street and Forrestville avenue, feature Romeo-Garcia, Robert Burns, El Roi Tan and Cyrilla brands.

A riot call summoned a wagon load of policemen to East End Hall, Clark and Erie streets, when the Cigar Makers Union meeting broke up in confusion and someone turned the lights out. Chairs crashed against the walls and men shouted. Everything had gone smoothly until after the election of Henry Chapp, president; Edward Delop, secretary, and Jerry Cain, business agent. Then H. Bailey, a cigar manufacturer, attempted to make a speech and the union men wouldn't permit him.

The Fromherz Cigar Co. are placing with the trade a new 6 cents cigar under the title El Troyo. A neat glass cover that fits the box makes it an attractive counter offering.

L. A. Sweezy is meeting with much success in placing the various brands of Steele Wedeles & Co. with the South Side trade. Lou is an old time retail man and was formerly in business with his father.

One of our largest cigar manufacturers expresses his opinion as follows regarding prices: "The price levels of labor and raw materials of before the war have gone forever, they will not return with the close of the war. The prices of to-day will continue after the struggle has been decided and dealers and jobbers generally may as well get used to paying the current prices, for they will not get any lower; in fact, I look for them to go still higher in the next few months."

William Waldman, of Francisco Arango & Co., is out on an extended Western trip, taking in all the large points throughout the Middle West.

The United Cigar Dealers Co., distributor of the Cyro brand of cigars have notified the trade of a raise in price.

Emergency Rations

WASHINGTON, January 13.—Capsule food has been made a reality by Uncle Sam as a war measure.

Victims of German frightfulness who are cast adrift upon the seas in future will have a day's ration of 2,400 calories of food,, all sealed and waterproofed, stored away in their pockets. Soldiers cut off in No Man's Land can lie down and feign death and munch a full meal at regular intervals. Aviators compelled to make a forced landing out of touch with civilization will have food if nothing else.

For weeks food experts of the Government have been quietly at work on the emergency ration. They have discovered the secret. It looks, smells and tastes more or less like a dog biscuit. There have been times, however, in the lives of many men when a dog biscuit would have looked better to them than a seven course banquet to an epicure.

The ration is made of 96 parts wheat flour, 96 parts meat and 64 parts died milk, cooked to a brown. With each biscuit goes a little tinned and paraffined package of peanut butter to add relish and give the necessary food value. With the peanut butter each biscuit is a complete meal so far as human requirements are concerned. The peanut butter supplies the necessary oils or fats and the proper balance of protein. The wheat, milk and meat supply the carbohydrates and other necessaries of a technically adequate meal. The peanut butter cannot be cooked with the biscuit because the whole thing would turn rancid.

The United Cigar Stores Co. will open a new place of business in the Caldwell building, at Fourth avenue and Ninth street, Huntingdon, West Va., within the next few weeks. The company more than a year ago procured a lease on the building to become effective January 1, 1918. Many improvements will be made in the building before the store is opened for business.

Boston Cigar Men See the Fuel Commissioner

Protesting Against the Edict That Would Close Stores and Deprive Small Merchants of Much Trade—Steps to Improve the Coal Situation—Taylor, Flannagan, Korn and Strauss the First Travelers to Arrive.

Boston, January 14.—Fuel Commissioner Sorrow's request to close all stores at 10 P. M. and open not earlier than 9 A. M. except drug stores and those that distribute daily papers, has raised a storm of protest from cigar dealers and others that do not come under the heading of the stores exempted. Committees representing the retailers have called on the Fuel Commissioner, endeavoring to show that the hours from 7 to 9 are very important for the commerce of the working man, and the financial loss to small merchants would be great. Further they argued that there would be no saving of fuel by opening at 9. There is hardly any coal in Boston. When a lot does arrive, mostly it is sold in 100 pound lots. There is much suffering among the poor. Theatres raise curtains at 7.45 and close at 10.15. All electric advertising signs have been shut off; electric car service has been curtailed; in fact everyone is trying somehow to alleviate the coal situation.

Potentates of tobaccodom are beginning to arrive. William Taylor, Ambassador of the Romeo y Julieta brand, was one of the first to appear in Boston this year. Next was J. V. Flannagan with the cigar that Kipling immortalized, Por Larranaga. Followed the two cherubs, the heavenly twins, Al Korn, of S. H. Durgatch & Co., and Ben Strauss, representing A. Sanetela & Co. They formed an optimistic or Optimo party as Ben Strauss insisted on naming the bunch, all believing that despite high prices and shortage of tobacco, 1918 will be a banner year.

Edward U. Harrington, Eastern representative for Larus Bros. Co., Richmond, Va., is making his annual visit to the factory.

The United Cigar Stores Co. has leased the corner of Summer and Kingston Streets, now occupied by a gent's furnishing store. It is said that the store now conducted by them on Summer Street between Bedford and Kingston Street, will be discontinued.

The Liggett Co. closed the store at 31 State Street, known as the Candy Box.

DISTRESS OF SMOKERS IN PARIS.

In Paris, shop after shop exhibits signals of distress conveying the unwelcome message that there is no longer any French tobacco or cigarettes on the premises for sale. As a sequel, there has been a prolonged "run" upon the various imported brands of both, notwithstanding the higher prices, of the imported article. American and British soldiers in Paris, or elsewhere in France, who have not yet got accustomed to the totally different qualities and flavor of French tobacco, remain unmoved at the situation—so long as they are able to obtain their favorite brands of American cigarettes and tobaccos. But the Frenchman is not so easily consoled, and in the last few days the entirely novel spectacle of the poilu "en permission" promenading the boulevards smoking expensive Havana cigars has almost reached that stage when it ceases to excite comment. Meanwhile, the average French citizen is earnestly hoping that the "no tobacco" problem will end.

IMPETUS TO HEALTH INSURANCE.

Organized labor is giving a strong impetus to universal health insurance for wage earners and prevention of sickness, as a need emphasized by the war. The advanced action recently taken by the federations in California, Wisconsin, New Jersey and New York is regarded as a positive indication of the growing conviction among the unions that health insurance must come soon in this country along the lines of similar protection afforded the workers in Europe. At the New York State Federation of Labor conference at Albany, January 8, with 150 delegates in attendance, a resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote endorsing universal health insurance and including this measure in the Federation's immediate legislative program.

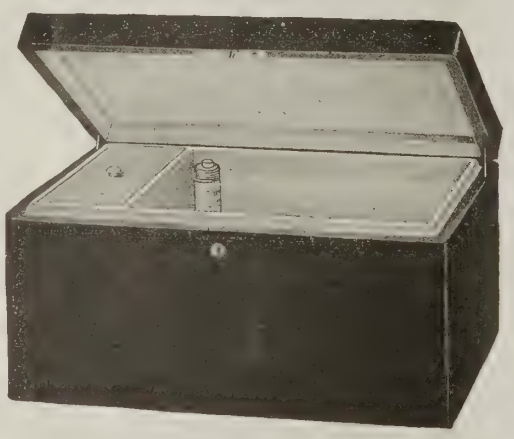
Sales of Manilas Increase in San Francisco

Philippine Goods Strongly Pushed by Important Dealers—M. A. Gunst Branch Distributes a Million Alhambras a Month—Harry Green Closes a Big Deal with Judell—Boquet-Cohn Cigar Co. Makes Each of Seven Stores an Isabela Depot—Marks Bros. Have Great Success with La Insular—Green Incorporates—New Company Contracts for Entire Hawaiian Tobacco Crop

San Francisco, January 9.—With practically all the popular American, erstwhile Five Cent Cigars now priced at six cents, the economical smoke consumer is in a quandary. What is he going to do? Some of them have acquiesed gracefully and are planking down the extra cent with their nickel, or are picking up four coppers change out of their dime with a more or less sheepish grin. Others are experimenting with unaccustomed pipes which sowehow don't taste the same and still others are grimly passing up the smokes in favor of chewing gum. Like the faithful of old they are wandering about in a wilderness. Now comes the manila cigar, pushed as never before by active importers, distributors and retailers. Perhaps it will prove the Moses to lead the poor Man-Looking-For-A-Five-Cent-Smoke out of the wilderness. Manila cigars have been sold here for several years, but they have never been actively pushed. Now they are being featured and the smokers are taking to them like ducks to water. M. A. Gunst is said to distribute about a million of the Alhambra a month. Harry Green, who is one of the heaviest Manila importers has just closed a deal with H. L. Judell & Co. to distribute about a half million Fighting Bob's a month. Marks Bros. are heavy importers of La Insular and in their retail stores are making this and other Manila brands household words. La Isabela has been handled as one of the brands of the United for some time and now the Bouquet-Cohn Cigar Co., has made each of their seven stores an Isabela depot and are heavily featuring this brand. With all these forces working for the island cigars they are bound to become much better known on this Coast, and eventually throughcut the country. Notwithstanding this drift towards the Manila cigar the local distributors say that the orders for the new year are coming in in good style for all the old standard brands, and they feel confident that the Six Cent Cigar will prove a success.



The Bouquet-Cohn Cigar Co., has just bought the Griffin Cigar store, at 167 California street. Mr. G. M. Cohn, the manager of the company, intends to feature La Isabela cigar here as well as in his six other retail stores in this city.

The retail store of the H. Bercovich Co., located for many years in the Flood Building at the corner of Market and Powell streets, has been closed on account of the failure of the cigar company to make the arrangement for enlargement it desired before renewing its lease. As Bercovich had another store across the street the company decided to abandon the site rather than forego the improvement it wanted to make. This leaves eleven stores in the Bercovich chain. Mr. Bercovich says that he has had a very prosperous year and that he is busy making arrangements to meet the requirements of 1918. The revisal of prices, he says, overshadows all other conditions but he is very hopeful that the public will meet the advance with full understanding of the conditions which confront the trade.

Harry Green has incorporated his business under the name of Harry Green & Co., Inc. with a capital of $50,000. Fred Rothschild who recently became associated with Mr Green is secretary of the new corporation. On the 17th inst. Mr. Green sails on the steamship Empress of India on a trip to Manila in the interests of his own business and those of H. Duys & Co., Inc., of New York. He will be away about three and a half months and will be accompanied by his wife. During his absence Mr. Rothschild will be in charge of the business in San Francisco.

Harry Green & Co., Inc., had a contract for the entire 1917 crop of Hawaiian tobacco, wrappers, fillers and scrap. Mr. Green says that it is now arriving and that the fine grade wrappers are the equal of any tobacco of similar description in the country.

T. W. Harris, president of the Tobacco Co. of America, left recently to visit the American Tobacco headquarters at New York.

The Paganini-Bricca Co. has obtained some good results from the illuminated billboard advertising which has been done on the El Palencia cigar of John H. Boltz Segar Co. Besides the Palencia this firm handles the El Castillo Brevas, a ten cent size, which it finds to be a good seller.

S. Bachman & Co. has issued a new list of cigars which brings all their leading nickel brands into the six cent class and the Club House and Waldorf sizes of La Confession from 10 cents to two for a quarter class.

Louis Cohn has been a recent visitor from Portland. He travels Idaho, Washington and Oregon for the Hart Cigar Co., of Portland. During his stay here Mr. Cohn has been making his headquarters at S. Bachman & Co., whose lines are distributed by the Hart company in their territory. He reports conditions in Portland and the northwest generally as excellent.

Since Ed. A. Goodman moved to his present location on lower Market street he has doubled his business and incidentally has built up a nice little ladies' trade for which his present location is well suited. Ed is making a specialty of Manila cigars.

Tobacco for the troops and sailors in France is coming from many sources, but perhaps one of the most unusual is from a State prison. Yet the 2,300 prisoners in San Quentin prison this State, have voted to devote one half of their tobacco supply to this cause. The first consignment, two fifty gallon barrels, was started to the boys at the front from the prison last week.

A REPORT FROM MADRAS

Lucien Memminger, American Consul, Writes Informatively Concerning the Tobacco Industry in South Hindustan.

Regarding conditions in the tobacco industry in Southern Hindustan, Lucien Memminger, American Consul at Madras reports that about 216,000 acres were under tobacco cultivation in 1915-16, but the curing is frequently done very carelessly, thereby damaging the value of the crop. Exports of tobacco in 1916-17 increased by nearly 1,000,000 pounds, amounting to 3,950,000 pounds. The value increased to $308,536. The trade in leaf tobacco amounted to 3,440,000 pounds, valued at $198,229. As usual, the chief consumers were the Straits Settlements and the Federated Malay States. A quantity of 850,120 pounds, valued at $36,985, was sent to the United Kingdom.

Shipments of cigars, 80 per cent of which went to the Straits Settlements and the Federated Malay States, further declined from 748,908 pounds to 466,346 pounds in quantity and from $137,884 to $100,899 in value. Higher grade cigars to the value of $26,604 were exported to the United Kingdom, against $21,412 worth in 1915-16. There are four cigar factories in South India employing 960 hands. Indian cured tobacco does not give an attractive outer wrapper, so foreign leaf is imported (chiefly from Straits Settlements and Sumatra) as wrapper for the better grade cigars made locally.

Imports of raw tobacco, part of which consisted of these wrappers, amounted in 1916-17 to 71,979 pounds valued at $37,634; 36,594 pounds from the United Kingdom, 31,705 pounds from Holland, and 642 pounds from Ceylon. A consignment of 1,908 pounds was imported from the United States for the first time. Imports of cigarettes improved by 103 per cent in quantity. The United Kingdom supplied 133,044 pounds, as compared with 65,765 pounds in 1915-16. Egypt sent 906 pounds, where as none was sent in the previous year. Imports of cigars were 328 pounds and other sorts of tobacco 23,713 pounds.

TIME FOR LENIENCY PAST

News that the Government is to follow the registration and finger printing of alien enemies with sterner measures to curb their hostile activities will meet with general approval. It has been felt for some time that this country has shown too great leniency toward these people and that the only way to suppress them is to deal with them with a heavy hand.

A good illustration of the excessive consideration shown them on various occasions is furnished by the case of the man who insulted some soldiers the other day in the Grand Central Station. He was rescued from a crowd that was beating him up and taken before a Federal official, who released him because he had naturalization papers. The fact that he was a citizen made the offense even more serious.

It is high time that steps were taken to make alien enemies and enemy sympathizers understand that the United States will no longer treat lightly offenses against the laws.—New York Globe.

The prison industries of New York could be utilized to marked advantage in the production of munitions of war, according to James M. Carter, State Superintendent of Prisons. In his annual report to the Legislature he states that the total number of men employed in the shops is 1,580. He says three shifts of eight hours each could be operated in making underwear, socks, shoes, blankets, caps and other wearing apparel.

The Wellington is made of genuine French Briar, seasoned by our own special process. It breaks-in sweet and mellow. The bowl is guaranteed against cracking or burning through. The "well" catches the moisture as well as all stray crumbs of tobacco. Any tobacco tastes better in a Wellington.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Wellington advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

Don't let another season go by without carrying a full line of W. D. C. pipes—the Wellington in particular. Tie up with the largest pipe manufacturer in America and your pipe business will grow in a way you never thought possible.

Gladly will we send you further information on request.

Regarding Reconsignment

WASHINGTON, January 14.—A very important decision was rendered last week by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the famous reconsignment case. In their syllabus in this case the commissioners say:

Upon consideration of increased charges and changes in regulations affecting the diversion or reconsignment of carload shipments, proposed by practically all of the carriers of the country; Held:

1. Proposed charges of $2 and $5 per car for change in name of consignor justified to the extent that they do not exceed $1 per car.

2. Rule providing that if request is made for the diversion or reconsignment of freight in carloads the carrier will make diligent effort to locate the shipment and effect the desired service, but will not be responsible for failure to do so unless such failure is due to negligence of its employees, justified as a continuation of the rule now in effect.

3. Proposed charge of $2 per car for diversion or reconsignment in transit prior to arrival of shipment at original destination or terminal yard serving that destination justified.

4. Proposed charge of $2 per car for diversion or reconsignment when order for that service is placed at billed destination in time to permit instructions to be given to yard employees prior to the arrival of the car justified.

5. Proposed charge of $2 per car for stopping car prior to arrival at billed destination to be held for orders justified.

6. Proposed charge of $5 per car for diversion or reconsignment at original destination to a point outside the switching limits, on orders received by the carrier after arrival, or too late to permit instructions to be given to yard employees before arrival, justified; but held that the same charge proposed for reforwarding to a similar point cars which have been placed for unloading but have not been unloaded has been justified only in so far as such charge will be lawful under the fourth section when considered in connection with the charges approved in rule 7.

7. Proposed charge of local tariff rates for reforwarding to a point within the switching limits cars which have been placed for unloading but have not been unloaded found justified.

8. Proposed rule found justified providing that—

(a) A single change in the name of the consignee at first destination, and (or) a single change in the designation of his place of delivery at first destination, will be allowed without charge if order is received in time to permit instructions to be given to yard employees prior to arrival of car at first destination or at the terminal yard serving such destination.

(b) If such orders are received in time to permit instructions to be given to yard employees within 24 hours after arrival of car at terminal yard a charge of $2 per car will be made.

(c) If such orders are received subsequent to 24 hours after arrival of car at terminal yard a charge of $5 per car will be made.

9. Proposed application of charges for reconsignment regardless of the method of freight rate construction justified.

10. Proposed regulation prohibiting reconsignment to an embargoed point justified in part.

With respect to certain provisions not included in the general rules; Held:

Increased charges for diversion and reconsignment proposed by certain New England carriers not justified.

Charges proposed by some respondents for transferring the contents of certain reconsigned cars not justified.

Charges proposed for diversion or reconsignment of grain and certain other commodities at Pittsburgh, Pa., and other points not found to be unreasonable in so far as they do not exceed the charges proposed in the general rules herein approved, but not approved because unjust discrimination would result from their application.

LITTLE THINGS!

"By George!" ejaculated a New Customer, "you've certainly got me mixed up in a peck o' trouble! Here I accidentally bumped into this store the other day for a few smokes. I got 'em, and, in the change you gave me all new money. What's the answer? Why, my folks insist that I hereafter trade entirely with you, just to get the nice, clean bills and silver. And even the kid says he'll bite me if I don't bring home one or two of those bright, new pennies every night! You've surely tied me up to you!"

'Course it's a bother to go to the bank every morning an' change the old for the new cash! And some banks kick like the deuce about shovin' it out, too!

But you just tell those sassy payin' tellers that you'll withdraw your big balance unless they fork over the goods!

They've got the clean change back there in the vault. They'll hand it over like gen'men, also, providin' you make th' necessary arrangements with the proper people.

Then, when you get it, don't be afraid to put it out! Even to the chaps who'll run in, now more offen, just to get change for a five! Give it to them! Some clear day they'll come in an' spend a copper wi' you-all!

And, if you just can't make your regular banking house help you run the scheme, write to Washington.

Those fellers down there in the soft chairs don't know your politics. Nor do they care. But they surely will exchange your rotten old dough for the crisp chink if you write 'em kindly, care the U. S. Treasury, or its nearest sub-station. THE SMOKER.

SERVICE FLAG WITH 19,070 STARS.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., January 8.—A service flag so large it has to be hung in sections will be stretched over the heads of the delegates to the convention of the United Mine Workers of America when they meet in Indianapolis, January 15.

The huge banner will contain 19,070 stars. It cannot be carried in the parades or placed over the street. Women have been working two months putting it into shape, and it will cover practically the entire overhead space in the big convention hall.

Officials of the association expect the flag to go far in doing away with the idea that mine workers are disloyal.

While other Iowans were sending "smokes to soldiers," Elmer Pullen of McGregor, Iowa, has been growing tobacco. Just now he is bailing his crop ready for shipment to the tobacco manufacturer, who has contracted for it. He has 10,000 pounds of tobacco. He grew it on six acres of land and has sold it for 22 cents a pound. This is a return of about $365 an acre, which is probably one of the largest returns for any crop grown in Iowa. The same land has been growing tobacco for eight consecutive years.

Freeze Injures Cigar Business in Cincinnati

Retailers All Complain of a "Let-Up" in Trade—Annual Election of the Cigar and Tobacco Association—Wittrock's Apt Obseravtions—Attempted Robbery of "United" Store—Lee Cahn, a Veteran Dealer, Passes—Liggett Drug Store the First of a Chain of Twenty—Straus Advertises Owls Extensively

CINCINNATI, January 14.—The severe cold weather of the past several days has sapped the life out of retail business at the downtown cigar shops, according to statements of leading dealers. Up to Friday of last week, trade was quite satisfactory with most of the larger houses, but the sudden drop of 35 to 45 degrees in temperature put a halt to the ring of the cash register, and total receipts on Saturday were in many instances 60 per cent. below the usual Saturday sales.

With the let-up in retail business, the jobbers likewise noted a slacking-up in the demand, but they state that the decrease in business is only temporary, and with the return of more moderate weather, trade will again become active.

Directors of the Cincinnati Association of Credit Men, of which a number of the larger retail cigar merchants are active members, are considering the establishment of a bureau in connection with the office of the association, the service of which will be opened to retail merchants of Cincinnati and vicinity.

It is planned to permit retailers to consult with the representatives of the association relative to the proper method of taking annual and semi-annual inventories, adequate bookkeeping systems, valuable plans in connection with the extension of credit to retailers' customers, proper method of collecting retailers' back accounts, problems resulting from over-buying and numerous other important subjects. The bureau will be in charge of the secretary, and will have counsel of several members of the local organization. It is creditable, surely.

The Cincinnati Cigar and Tobacco Association held its first meeting of the new year on last Friday evening at the Gibson Hotel, at which session the annual election of officers was held. The association was organized just one year ago and has established an enviable reputation in that brief period.

New directors elected by the association are as follows: Charles B. Wittrock, Peter Ibold, Jr., David Straus, Joseph Strobl, George E. O'Brien, Harry T. Davis, Edward Nagel, Rawlings D. Best and Carl Ibold.

"If all other lines of business did as little kicking as the tobacco industry, the progress of the war would be advanced considerably," said President Charles B. Wittrock, in addressing the members prior to the balloting.

"Through this organization a lasting cooperation has been effected in the tobacco trade of Cincinnati and vicinity that was never realized before, and a great many movements calculated to operate to the benefit of all branches of the trade have been launched during the year and carried to a successful conclusion. With the imposition of the new war taxes fresh problems confront manufactureres, jobbers and retail dealers alike, and the Cincinnati organization is doing much to clarify the situation," continued President Wittrock.

In a daring attempt several nights ago to rob the United Cigar Co. store at 615 Vine street, directly adjoining the Cincinnati Enquirer office, two bandits struck down the clerk, Dolph Harteveld, 23 years old, the only occupant. Harteveld fell, but recovered immediately and grappled with the man who had struck him. His shouts for help caused both men to run from the store. Harteveld followed and with a score of pedestrians who joined in, chased one of the men down Vine street to Sixth, where the man disappeared. The other bandit was lost early in the chase.

The men entered the store when Harteveld was standing in front of the counter checking up for the night. As he turned to go behind the counter he was struck on the back of his head with a "black jack" and caught by his assailant. The other bandit did not interfere when the assailant dragged the clerk into a corner, where he tried to choke his victim. Several persons saw the men run from the store and heard Harteveld's cries for aid.

Lee Cahn, 78 years old, Hotel Alms, widely known in Cincinnati and throughout the country as a wholesale and retail cigar dealer of this city, died several days ago, following an extended illness.

Mr. Cahn, who retired from the cigar business several years ago, was born in Bavaria, Germany, August 23, 1839, and came to this country when 11 years old.

When quite a young man he accepted employment here as a cigar store clerk, and later entered business for himself, occupying for many years the cigar shop in the Union Trust Building, Cincinnati's first skyscraper, at Fourth and Walnut streets. Upon Mr. Cahn's retirement from business, this store was taken over by the firm of Henry Straus and added to their chain of retail stands.

Funeral services were held from the residence of Mrs. Julius Kline, 4057 Beechwood avenue, Avondale, and burial was in United Jewish Cemetery.

Mr. Cahn is survived by his widow, two daughters, Mrs. Kline and Mrs. Leon Israel,

Millions of Dollars of Taxes Involved in an Internal Revenue Decision—The Case of Mitchell Versus Doyle

WASHINGTON, January 12.—On advice of the Department of Justice, the Bureau of Internal Revenue to-day decided to leave to the Supreme Court determination of whether, in figuring income and excess profits for the last year, inventories may be made on the basis of either original cost or present market value, whichever is lower.

Income and excess profits tax return forms are, accordingly, changed and will be issued next week with provision for reporting on both cases. Taxes eventually will be collected under the optional system if the Supreme Court sustains it, or on cost if the court decides against the optional plan. Returns must be filed by March 1, but the court will not hear argument until March 4 on a case involving the disputed point. This case, known as Mitchell vs. Doyle, was brought originally in the District Court in Michigan.

The Treasury next week will issue a formal order embodying the new decision, which is regarded as one of the most important under the war tax law. The optional plan of reporting securities was intended mainly to eliminate the necessity of actually selling holdings of depreciated value in order to record losses. Millions of dollars of taxes are involved.

CINCINNATI NOTES

New York City, and a son, Alvin S. Cahn.

Liggett's first Rexall drug store, being one of the twenty that is planned for Cincinnati, will shortly be opened at 1116 Main street, just leased for a period of 18 years, at an annual rental of $8,400.

Other locations secured by the company so far are stores on Race street, near Fourth, opposite the Arcade; the northeast corner of Sixth and Vine streets, and a store room in the office building southwest corner of Fourth and Walnut streets.

Joseph Knecht, well-known cigar manufacturer of this city, has just notified his trade and the public of an increase in the retail prices of his brands "Tampico" and "La Azonas World's Famous" from five cents to six cents straight.

The firm of Henry Straus, local agents for the "Owl" cigar, is carrying on an extensive advertising campaign in the daily newspapers on the "Owl," retailing at six cents, and the "White Owl," retailing at seven cents. Sunday's editions carried big quarter-page spreads.

THE PASSING OF JUNIE McCREE.

Junie McCree (whose baptismal name was Gonsalvo Macrillo) died Sunday in his home at 270 Convent avenue, New York. Born in Toledo, O., fifty-two years ago, he ran away from home when a boy and joined a circus. Reaching San Francisco, he "deserted the sawdust" and sought success on the stage. He appeared first at the old "Bella Union" and afterward was a favorite at the Wigwam. Later, he played with Eddie Foy in "The Wild Rose," with Miss Virginia Earle in "Sergeant Kitty," "The Girl Question," and in "The Babes in the Woods" and other English pantomimes produced in this city. Since he retired as a player, Junie McCree had been a writer of sketches, burlesques, and musical comedies. He wrote "The Happiest Night of His Life." For four years he was president of the White Rats. He belonged to the Authors' League, the Chicago Press Club, and the Great Neck Golf Club.

W. L. VanDyke, sales manager for Eli Witt of Tampa, took a day off and went to St. Pete last week with J. C. Riley of the American Tobacco Co. He says the town is sure full of people.

Fred Dalton of the Eli Witt sales force, has been taking in St. Petersburg, Gainesville, Orlando and Ocala, Fla., introducing some new size packages of Tampa Nuggets and Above the Average cigars.

John MacLaren, formerly financial editor of Saturday Night, is now advertising manager of the Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal, Dominion Dental Journal and the Canadian Bicycle and Motorcycle.

The Internal Revenue office at Reidsville, N. C., sold revenue stamps to the amount of $1,415,760.05 during 1917, compared with $781,857.22 sold the preceding year. Practically the entire amount was for tobacco.

Thomas F. Coffey, cigar manufacturer, has moved from the third floor of 123 East Pearl street, corner Grand avenue, to a vacant store in the Jefferson building in Grand avenue, near North Front street, West Haven, Conn.

J. J. Stephens, of the Snow & Bryan crowd, of Tampa, is working for a law to make it a shame for anyone to chew anything but his brand of tobacco. Mr. Stephens even chews it himself. This confession was wrung from him.

The United Cigar Stores Co. is adding to its chain throughout the country by opening new stores in Huntington, W. Va., Hopewell, W. Va., Fort Dodge, Iowa, and Stubenville, Ohio. In New York City the United has 385 stores.

Of the 1,500,000 pounds of fine Turkish tobacco recently imported by the Standard Commercial Tobacco Co., the entire amount has been sold. But the company expects to receive other large shipments in the near future.

Philip Frieder, accompanied by Mrs. Frieder has gone to Manila to investigate the cigar business in the Philippines. He will make some connections, if possible. He will open a Manila jobbing house in Cincinnati, if he is successful.

The Farmers House broke all tobacco price records there, last week, selling 20,105 pounds, at an average of $29.71, and nine baskets at $50 to $53. Offerings were heavier and the market much stronger. The crop of Wright & Monday, 5,310 pounds, averaged $41.20.

W. L. Paige, who covered Maine territory for the American Tobacco Co., has just been promoted to the position of supervisor for Western Massachusetts and Vermont. J. J. McCarthy will work the district formerly taken care of by Mr. Paige.

The Boston Club cigar made by The Commonwealth Cigar Co., of New York, introduced only a few weeks ago, is meeting with wonderful success. Every jobber handling the line is sending repeat orders. The four factories making the brand are rushed to fill the orders.

Whitcomb & Co. have negotiated a long term lease to the United Cigar Stores Co. of America, of the corner store and a portion of the basement in the property 79 Summer street, Boston, and after extensive improvements a "United Store" will occupy the premises.

Prisoners confined in the State prison at San Quentin, Cal., have voted to send one half of their tobacco allowance to the men of the American expeditionary forces in France and the first allotment, two fifty-gallon barrels filled with tobacco, was ready for shipment, January 6.

Another Tar Heel prodigy has come to the front in tobacco raising, as shown by this item from the Oxford Ledger; "Master Nathan Cannady, age 10 years, who lives with his uncle, D. H. Currin, on Route 6, raised two thousand hills of tobacco which netted him $137, which he immediately put in the bank."

W. A. Hagen, district sales manager for the P. Lorillard Co. in Montana, has returned to Helena from a holiday visit to relatives at Manitowoc, Wis. While on the trip he visited Milwaukee and the Twin Cities. Mr. Hagen had a very successful business year in 1917, and says the outlook for 1918 is highly encouraging.

The Steber cigar factory at Warren, Pa., employing 150 skilled cigarmakers, suspended operations last week. The men threatened to strike if their demands for an increase in pay from 10 to 12 dollars a thousand were not granted. Refusing the requests of the men, F. A. Steber, head of the concern announced his retirement from business.

The Havana Production Co. is about to feature two new high grade brands, Lord Byron and La Valliere, which will come in the most beautiful packages offered to the public for many moons. Business with the Havana Production Co. for the past 12 months has been excellent. Ben Lesser, representing the firm, is out west, Tom Gray is in western territory, and R. V. Falkner is in the sunny south.

A cablegram received in New York by the Standard Commercial Tobacco Co., Tuesday, stated that Vice President George O. Jones was in Harbin, Manchuria, en route to Japan and from thence to the United States. On his journey around the world and on his various long business trips from one end of Russia to the other, Mr. Jones has been accompanied by his wife who was Miss La Belle Fisher Stancliff of Kentucky.

The defense committee of Albany local 68, Cigar Makers' International union, Sunday night, a week ago, issued an official statement denying that any labor troubles had caused the B. Payn's Sons Tobacco company to discontinue the manufacture of cigars. The union believes that newspaper articles regarding the Payn company's plans have created the impression that the change was due to labor troubles. This, they say, is not the fact.

John Albright, a retired cigar manufacturer, died recently at his home, No. 61 South Franklin street, Lancaster, Pa., of Bright's disease, aged sixty-five years. While in failing health for the past few years, Mr. Albright was able to be about. His end was most unexpected. For more than thirty years he and his brother, Jacob, conducted a cigar store and factory at No. 105 East King street, Lancaster. They sold out the business to Henry Sachs about six years ago.

La Giralda cigar factory which burned down last November in Manila, has been replaced by another large building which the Philippine Co. leased as soon as possible. Work was resumed and some big shipments now are on the way to the United States. Also the Philippine Co. made connections with three other factories and have been importing very heavily. Ernest J. Moss, sales manager, reports that business has jumped beyond all expectations, the distribution of cigars amounting to millions each month.

At Newark, N. J., the library has a business branch in the center of the city and makes a specialty of "print for business men," including trade journals, house organs, directories, maps, etc. The library buys yearly about $3,000 worth of journals of all kinds. The museum, which is in the library, makes a specialty of industry. It lend thousands of objects to schools for visual instruction, among them over 800 small exhibits illustrating material and processes in industries of all kinds, and has many more demands for these than it can supply.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Connecticut Tobacco corporation held at the Silver Lane plantation, near East Hartford, Monday, a week ago, it was agreed, pursuant to a vote of the directors on December 3, to dissolve the corporate existence of the company. The corporation recently merged with the American Sumatra Tobacco Co., and that company will in a few days take over all property of the Connecticut Tobacco corporation. The meeting was the final transaction for the completion of the merger.

Edward Reagan, a retired clay pipe manufacturer, who died recently at his home, No. 207 Cayuga street, Syracuse, N. Y., Mr. Reagan had been in ill health for more than three years. Prior to his retirement a number of years ago, he had been engaged in the clay pipe industry in Syracuse for 34 years. He served as city sealer of weights and measures for several terms. His widow, a daughter, Mrs. George Vedder; a son, George Reagan; a sister, Miss Katherine Reagan, of Syracuse; a brother, Martin Reagan, of Union Hill, N. J., and a grandson, George Reagan, jr., survive.

Supplying the most profitable demand should be the tobacco raiser's aim, and the present selling season has demonstrated that a small production of fancy leaf is relatively less profitable than commoner tobacco grown upon the same area of land. These is —and will continue to be—an insatiable world-wide call for the commoner leaf, and it is the thing that should engage the grower's attention. Every pound of home-produced fertilizer should be saved for use, and then every square foot of whatever area it is practicable to devote to tobacco should be cultivated on the intensive plan. Thus the farmer may easily double his income without increase of expense—provided his labor be guided by common-sense, re-enforced by energy and elbow-grease.—Southern Tobacco Journal.

On the New York Curb, January 10, a bid of 125 was reported for $50,000 of the scrip to be issued by the Amercan Tobacco Company in lieu of dividends in the current year. The bid meant that the $24 was offered for a $20 dividend, the quarterly rate which the company has intimated will be continued in scrip. The paper bears interest of 6 per cent and may be converted into Class B common stock at the end of three years. The premium presumably was influenced by the convertible feature of the scrip, although the terms of conversion have not been made public in detail. As the scrip-dividend plan immediately preceded the abrupt rise in the shares, it was assumed in brokerage offices that a "bull argument" was contained in the plan. Whether this was the case or not, bidders found very little stock about when they went into the market. American Tobacco common has always been closely held.

Trade News from Near and Far

J. & O. Altschul Tobacco Co. of New York, has increased its capital from $5,000 to $75,000.

Fred Littlefield and Arthur Stout have purchased the Lewellen Cigar store in Houston, Tex.

At Bombay, India, tobacco valued at $1,432,572 was imported in 1916. The total for 1915 was only $596,967.

Hilson-Schoss, Inc., at Mt. Carmel, Pa., will continue to manufacture the Broadwell brand, despite reports to the contrary.

Wade Wightman has let the contract for a two-story concrete building to be built at 747 East Douglas avenue, Wichita, Kan. The structure will cost in the neighborhood of $3,500 and will be occupied by a news stand, cigar store and shining parlor. The location of the new building is just east of the old Rock Island depot.

Joseph P. Day's Chain Store Department has leased for fifteen years to the Schulte Cigar Co. for about $300,000 total rent, the ground floor of the Riggs Building, in Washington, D. C., formerly occupied by the Riggs Cafe. The cafe was closed when Washington became dry on November 1. The Schulte company has leased several other Washington stores, the locations of which will be announced later.

A cigar manufacturer of Waterford, N. Y., adopted the name of L. A. W., signifying League of American Wheelmen, for a certain brand of cigars and after making use of the title for a number of years was notified that a party in Cincinnati had a copyright on the name and he must cease using it. After consultation with a lawyer it was suggested the periods after each letter be omitted, thus making the name "L A W," which has been continued.

The employes—sixty of 'em—of the Mino Cigar Factory, at 1820 St. Claude street, New Orleans, staged a strike which was shorter than the average Western Union messenger "labor disturbance." The sixty cigarmakers walked out Wednesday at noon, having presented a flat demand of $1 more per thousand cigars, no quarter asked or shown. At 4 o'clock the same afternon, A. Kossman conceded their demand and the cigarmakers returned to work at once. "They walked right out, and got their raise, and walked right in again."

Having doubled their business in 1916 and again in 1917, Norman Bros., cigar manufacturers and jobbers, recently moved into more roomy quarters at 973 Michigan avenue, Detroit. Nathan Norman, who returned recently from an eastern trip, said, "Our holiday business exceeded all expectations. All through 1917, in fact, we enjoyed a wholesome expansion of trade. During my trip east, I purchased several million cigars for our 1918 business. We are now handling over a hundred brands of cigars, including the three brands we manufacture, Norman's Club and the Detroit Press, five-cent brands, and our favorite, Judge Gainey.

Regarding recent speculations in tobacco stock, the New York Sun said, on January 10: "The tightest squeeze administered to bold shorts hereabout in some time is that inflicted on those who, believing American Tobacco was going to pass its dividend, sold accordingly. The thumbscrews were adjusted nicely and comfortably day before yesterday and the squeezing started. The stock gained 10⅛ points. Yesterday the machinery got a few extra twists and it gained 9⅝, closing at 164¾, compared with the opening of 155¾, the high of 165 and the low of 155¾. The gain is, of course, directly in response to the decision of the directors to pay its 20 per cent dividend in scrip for three years. The issue of scrip permits payment, speaking broadly, of the $25,000,000 in notes recently sold, which will place the company in a strong position with an ample supply of working capital. Meanwhile most of the short interest has succumbed to the turning of the thumbscrews, wishing all the time that Sir Walter Raleigh had never discovered the weed."

Notes and Quotes

E. Popper of E. Popper & Co., left New York, Monday, on a Southern trip.

As Don Marquis remarks: "It looks as if the amusement business might be facing a frost."

R. Bray, office manager for Ernest Ellinger & Co., in Havana, is calling on the trade in New York.

Irvin Studwell, who succeeds Walter Pierson at Park & Tilford's may not reach New York before the first of the month.

Henry Miller, the cigar magnate of the City Investment Building, is more than pleased with the way the trade has been keeping up.

Accused of violating a law which forbids attaching a tin can to a dog, a man was fined for tying a bulldog to his fliver at Salina, Kan.

Reports received from Red Lion, Pa., intimate that cigar factories there may be idle for a while because of inability to obtain coal enough to keep the buildings warm.

The factory of the East Prospect Cigar Co. at East Prospect, Pa., has been leased. The lessees plan to employ 150 people if that many hands can be secured.

One of the largest handlers of Havana leaf summarizes the Cuban crop situation thus: "Remedios looks good, Portido very good, Vuelta Abajo will be good but short."

E. M. Freeman of Sidney J. Freeman & Sons, starts, Sunday night, on a trip over the territory covered previously by his brother Albert in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Marie Corelli, famous novelist, has been fined heavily for hoarding food in England. "Now Marie," invites the Tampa Times, "come along with another edition of 'Wormwood.'"

Retail cigar dealers in New Orleans have advanced the price of all 5-cent brands to 6 cents and 10 cent brands to 12 cents, with a proportionate increase in the price of all other cigars.

Col. E. P. Cordero, of E. P. Cordero & Co., is in Cuba. He will tarry there until the weather becomes warm again in New York. Incidentally, Col. Cordero, who is a most competent judge of tobacco, may select a supply of leaf for Mi Hogar factory.

John Moriarity, manager of The King Cole Company, received 45,000 cigars of the fiddler size on Monday, and by Tuesday afternoon he had shipped 42,000. The thing that bothers Moriarity is how to get cigars enough.

On Saturday, January 19, all the Schulte cigar stores will give a ten per cent discount to customers on purchases from one dollar up. On this day the salesmen in the stores will receive five per cent of the entire profits. And Schulte has been generous in other ways, for up to the present time, stores have contributed a little over $14,000 to the Sun Smoke fund.

At a luncheon given at the Hotel McAlpin, Monday, in honor of Felix M. Warburg, president of the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies, on the occasion of his forty-seventh anniversary, Jacob Wertheim announced that workers in the drive for 50,000 new members, had pledged themselves to raise $1,000,000 for the organization. It was announced that 3,500 additional members had been obtained. Addresses were made by Dr. J. Magnus and Edwin Goldwasser, a director in the Federation.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

"Daylight saving is not an experiment," says the New York Sun. "Its practicability and good results have been proved in England, in France, in Italy, in Germany, in Austria-Hungary, in a number of other countries. It has worked admirably under war conditions. It results in conservation of fuel, in improved health, in bettered living conditions.

"The Senate has passed the Calder daylight saving bill. The President has indorsed it. Labor unions, business men's associations, individual employers in large numbers have given their approval to it. There is no opposition to it from anybody who has studied daylight saving abroad and its possibilities in this country. There was a time when its adoption did not seem to be of pressing importance, but that time has passed. As a war measure, daylight saving should be instituted in this country at the earliest convenient moment.

"Under the Calder bill all timepieces would be set ahead one hour at 2 o'clock on the morning of the last Sunday of April—it happens to be the twenty-eighth of the month this year—and set back sixty minutes at the same hour on the last Sunday of September, this year, the twenty-ninth of that month. There would be no confusion, no difficult adjustments. Most of us would get an hour less sleep in April and an hour more in September. Neither would be an inconvenience. To compensate us we should gain an hour of daylight every day for five months. We should save the artificial light. We should have more time for outdoor work and play.

"The Calder bill is now in the House of Representatives, awaiting action by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce."

"DON'T SURRENDER!"

"The story of the J. L. Luckenbach's four-hour battle with a German submarine recalls the most glorious traditions written by Americans into the records of the sea," says the New York Mail.

"Under a rain of shells from the submarine, her engine disabled by a shot and evidently doomed to destruction by a relentless foe, the Luckenbach after a running fight of two hours got a distant message from an American destroyer: 'Don't surrender!' The reply sped promptly over miles of ocean: 'Never!'

"And the gun crew, backed by the ship's company, gallantly served their guns for another two hours until the destroyer got within range and fired the shot that sent the under-sea rover plunging into the depths for safety.

The order sent to the Luckenbach and the reply from the commander of the Luckenbach's gun crew deserve t be adopted as the mottoes of the nav and of our merchant marine in th struggle for the freedom of the seas

"'Don't surrender!'

"'Never'!"

FATHER TIME EATS THE SANDWIC

The local police court decision to th effect that a drink served on Sunda under a hotel license need not be ac companied simultaneously with food i a sensible one. The practice of throw ing a sandwich made of rubber, papie maché or even of stale bread and "sal horse" before the customer, whether h had ordered it or not, was an absurdity In many cases it is the habit of bon fide diners to order drinks before speci fying a regular meal. It is fair to le this cover the situation.—New Yor Sun.

THE FOOD PROBLEM

Write a high brow from Washington: The feeling is deep-seated here that he successful conduct of the war, the handling of the food problem for Amer- cans and for the allies, the handling of the coal problem, and the keeping of American industrial energy at high pitch, depend largely on the success of government operation of the railroads and other transportation lines.

President Wilson is expected to de- liver his special railroad message to con- gress Friday or Saturday of this week. He has already said what compensation he will recommend for the use of the railroad systems—a guarantee of the three year average of net operating in- come for the period ending June 30, 1917.

Director-General McAdoo favors this compensation, and the President will adhere to it in his recommendations to congress. In recent conferences with some of the members Mr. McAdoo has taken the position that this amount should be guaranteed.

It is probable that this compensation will be allowed, but not without some tempestuous opposition. It will prob- ably take several weeks at least for the enactment of the legislation on com- pensation. The opposition will decry guaranteeing the roads such heavy earn- ings as they obtained in their "peak" years, and, furthermore, will denounce the idea of allowing different roads widely varying percentages of return, when in theory the government is uni- fying the whole railroad system and making each line bear its share of the work of handling the country's trans- portation.

A phase of the situation, which also will receive attention in congress, is the future of the Interstate Commerce Com- mission. That body has strong support in House and Senate, and many mem- bers do not take kindly to the idea that under the new regime it is to drop down to the rank of a sort of clerical bureau.

The debate on railroads will take the widest range. Government ownership will be discussed, and strong sentiment is sure to be voiced in favor of this, fol- lowing government operation.

REFUNDED AFTER 40 YEARS.

Postmaster Touhey at Hume, Ill., re- ceived this letter with $5 bill pinned to it. The letter was mailed at Olney, Ill.:

Please hand this money to the man who kept the post office in 1872. He had a drug store. This is to pay for a bottle of medicine I failed to pay for. It was 50 cents. I have forgotten his name or I would have paid it long ago. If he is not living hand it to his heirs.

The money was given to Era Stark, a grandson of the druggist, and Stark gave it to the Red Cross.

ADMIRED THE PLAID PANTS.

Doc Strauss, the Sam I. Davis & Co., representative in San Francisco, was found gazing wistfully after the vanish- ing form of one of the gallant young Highlanders with his Glengary cap and fatigue uniform, including plaid trousers, which latter are hardly the quietest style of tailoring imaginable. "Why," returned Doc, "I'd be willing to do al- most anything to get a pair of these tartan pants; they're the finest thing I ever saw!"—San Francisco Grocer.

MISSISSIPPI FIRST.

Mississippi is the first State to ratify the proposed prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution. Fifteen min- utes after Governor Bilbo delivered his message to the State Legislature Tues- day, in which he urged early action on the question, both houses voted their ap- proval of the measure. But eight dis- senting ballots were cast.

Exports from the United States to the Latin-American countries have in- creased 100 per cent since the begin- ning of the war, says the American Exporter. Exports in 1913 amounted to 323,775,885, and in 1917 to $650,000,000. The American exports to South Amer- ican now exceed the total value of Germany's exports before the war to Canada, the United States, Mexico, the West Indies, Central and South America and Russia.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., January 11.—This State has been smothered under a heavy snow fall which the gale has piled into drifts and handicapped most activities in the tobacco sections during the week. The tobacco bulks are yet so hardly frozen that not much headway can be made in the stripping and only a moderate amount of receiving has been attempted because of the bad roads. We learn, however, there have been some rejections made at receiving points on account of high case leaf contained in the bundles. Enough has been written to warn growers in this particular so there ought to be but little excuse for inviting trouble by attempting to deliver tobacco unsuitable for packing. High case or wet butts simply don't go and that is all there is about it. In stripping the balance of the crop the safety for growers is to keep their high case leaf entirely separated and let it dry in the sheds before delivery. It is somewhat of a question, too, as yet, to what use the shed frozen leaf can be put to or what value it has in the market. These are matters that might lead to more or less friction in the settlements for the crop.

The markets for old leaf present no news of importance.

Shipments intended from out of storage points are still held in abeyance awaiting better rail facilities, which is likely to embarrass some of the Eastern cigar factories until relief comes.

HE EARNED COMMENDATION.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels, has formally commended Frank Marsh, machinist's mate, second class, United States Naval Reserve, for courageous action in extinguishing a gasoline fire on a submarine chaser. The fire threatened also to destroy three other craft alongside. After the engine room force had been driven from the engine room by gas fumes, Marsh went down and threw on the fire several cans of an extinguishing preparation. A little later volumes of smoke arose from burning oil in the base of the starboard engine. Marsh descended a second time with a salt water hose and extinguished the flames. Marsh enlisted in Boston, October 19, 1917.

IT'S LEGAL TO REFUSE

To Sell a Negro a Drink in a Saloon—Decision of New York Court of Appeals.

ALBANY, January 15.—Negroes cannot demand service in a saloon in this State unless the proprietor is willing to serve them, according to a decision handed down to-day by the Court of Appeals. The general impression held by saloon keepers for many years that their only remedy when approached for liquor by a negro was to charge a high price is therefore dismissed.

The case involved was an appeal from a judgment of $224 obtained by Benjamin D. Gibbs, a negro, against the Arras Brothers, proprietors of a place on upper Broadway, New York City. Gibbs asked for a drink of gin and was stold that the price to him would be $1.

The decision of the lower court was based on the classification of a saloon as "a place of public accommodation." The Court of Appeals stated a saloon did not come under this classification, as places of public accommodation were designated under the law as "each of those utilities, facilities and agencies created and operated for the common advantage, aid and benefit of the people."

The judgment therefore was reversed.

ELECTION CIGARS APPROVED.

BOSTON, January 15.—Cigars and tobacco in other forms are legitimate items of political campaign expenses and should be classed as "refreshments," in the opinion of a special legislative commission on consolidation of State laws. The announcement, which is included in the commission's report made public to-day, says that the status of these articles in political expense bills has heretofore been a disputed question.

Ten officials of the United Mine Workers of America were ordered by the Supreme Court Monday afternoon to show cause why they should not be declared in contempt of court for failure to obey the injunction issued by the Supreme Court in the Hitchman Coal and Coke case. This injunction restrained them from further attempts to unionize the employes of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Co.

With aggregate crops of 5,690,000,000 bushels of grain this year—987,000,000 bushels more than last year, an excess of practically one-fifth—the agricultural wealth of the country is greater than ever before in history. In the live-stock industry, prices obtained have never been equalled. With $2 or more for wheat, and corn even further above the old-time level, the ability of the farmer to buy is such as the country has never witnessed.

BIG PLANT AMPLIFIED

llen & Ginter Branch of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. to Have a Mammoth New Cigarette Factory in Richmond.

Construction of a modern six-story fireproof ictory building at the corner of Sixth and anal streets, Richmond, Va., the first step in ie complete rebuilding of the plant of the Allen . Ginter Branch of the Liggett & Myers To-acco Co., will be started in the next few weeks, ays the Times-Dispatch.

After the first section is completed and the achinery installed, the present buildings at eventh and Cary streets, extending to Canal reet, will be demolished, and the second half f the factory plant erected to conform to the ew building. The plans are being drawn by a rominent firm of New York architects, who pecializes in this class of work.

The plant will continue to be operated under ie present management, as the Allen & Ginter ranch of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., iving employment to about 1,800 persons, prin-ipally women and girls. Building operations ill be completed in about one year, without nterfering with the present output of the plant, hich will be materially increased even before ie completion of the new building.

Each floor of the new building will contain 5,218 square feet, the combined floor area eing about 271,308 square feet, excluding the ngine and boiler room.

The main frontage, which will be on Canal treet, will be 86 feet by 286 feet, with two ings, one, fronting on Seventh street, 86 feet y 152 feet, and another, fronting on Sixth reet, 86 feet by 109 feet, forming a "U" shaped uilding, with the boiler and engine room lo-ated in the rear of the main building between ie two wings.

The floors will be unobstructed and splendidly ghted and ventilated. No expense will be pared to make this the most up-to-date build-ng for manufacturing cigarettes in this coun-y. Attention will be given to the comfort of ie employees in every possible way. One of ie attractive features will be a lunchroom on ie roof, specially constructed for this purpose, ncluding a model kitchen in care of a competent hef. The balance of the roof will be covered ith tile and used for recreation. Commodious ressing and rest rooms and a hospital will be rovided.

The office will be on Seventh street and have separate entrance. A railroad siding holding ix cars will be run into the building, affording plendid shipping facilities. The most approved achinery in every department will be installed, ncluding an automatic sprinkler system for fire rotection and for high-speed electric ele-ators.

The engine and boiler room will be equipped ith the most modern apparatus.

The War Revenue Act and the Taxpayer

By DANIEL C. ROPER, Commissioner of Internal Revenue

The rules and regulations to be adopted will interpret the law in a manner which will be in full accord with its intent, and in harmony with the methods of legitimate business and the rights of the taxpayers.

When the full significance of winning this war is properly understood, it will be seen that no country ever chiseled into statute a measure of greater importance than the War Revenue Act of October 3, 1917. This law undertakes to provide a large portion of the necessary money to defend and perpetuate those institutions to which our forefathers devoted their lives.

It is an interesting law in that it more generally distributes the burden of taxation than any internal revenue measure in the history of our country. It touches more nearly every phase of industry and, therefore, becomes of greater personal interest to our people than any previous tax measure. Because of decreased exemptions the personal income tax will reach six or seven million persons who have heretofore not made returns. This number includes a large proportion of farmers, a vast number of retail merchants, salaried employes, wage earners and laborers. In addition, there is an estate tax, a capital stock tax on corporations, an excess profits tax on individuals, partnerships, and corporations, and excise tax on dealers in a large number of commodities, a variety of stamp taxes, a tax on admissions and dues, a tax on public facilities, such as railway transportation, telegraph and telephone messages, and insurance policies, occupational taxes and the special taxes on alcoholic and non-alcoholic beverages, cigars, tobacco, perfumeries, and various other objects. Finally, there is the munition manufacturers' tax and the increase in postage rates. In short, this War Revenue Act is the most comprehensive tax law ever enacted, and the man who escapes its provisions is indeed an inconsequential member of his community.

Some persons have undertaken to criticise the law and to point out its crudeness and inequalities. Imperfections in the law are not to be wondered at when it is remembered that so many of its provisions invade virgin territory. A careful study of the act, however, will convince the unbiased student that it is a remarkable piece of legislation, requiring only an intelligent and sympathetic attitude on the part alike of administrative officials, the Congress and the people to bring it into workable form and to accomplish its purpose without destroying business or visiting undue hardship upon taxpayers who properly co-operate in its administration. But to accomplish these desirable ends the sympathetic and patriotic co-operation of the Congress, the administrative officials, and taxpayers are each and all indispensable. If they are assured there need be no undue anxiety. A good law may be ruined by reckless methods of administration, and a defective law vastly improved by intelligent and painstaking administration. Consideration of this nature prompted the Secretary of the Treasury soon after the passage of the law to call to my assistance in interpreting the excess profits provisions of the law nine representative American business men. For several weeks these men have devoted their entire time without compensation to hearing and studying the views of taxpayers regarding the excess profits law to the end that they may be able to give to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue information as to business based upon fresh and up-to-date knowledge. The end sought is to collect the tax which the law imposes with the least possible hardship and inequality. These excess profits advisers have brought to the assistance of the Bureau of Internal Revenue a dependable knowledge of the viewpoint of the taxpayer and of business conditions which is essential to the practical solution of the problems with which we are confronted.

This I believe to be the first time that any government department has worked out a co-operative plan for ascertaining and digesting the business and industrial conditions affected by a Federal law. It is a step toward that understanding that should prevail in every democracy between the people and those who duty it is to administer the law.

In furtherance of the desire of the Treasury Department to solve its problems in the light of actual conditions rather than of superficial consideration there has been called to its assistance a group of legal advisers composed of representative lawyers of very broad experience, who are patriotically giving without cost to the Government assistance that we could not purchase in interpreting the law.

Following the publication soon to be made of the rules and regulations for the administration of the law is to come the tremendous task of actually collecting the taxes. The period between January 1 and March 1, is fixed by law for the filing of returns by the taxpayers. Payment must be made before June 15.

The campaign of administration involves a campaign of education. It is intended that every available avenue shall be utilized for informing taxpayers as to the amount of tax for which they are liable and how, when, and where their taxes are to be paid.

To this end, the field force of the Bureau of Internal Revenue is to be expanded and reorganized and specially charged with the duty of coming into personal contact between January first and March first, as nearly as possible with every person subject to this tax.

Schools of instruction are to be held in every collection district and early in the new year a competent revenue official will be sent into every county in the United States. These agents will be provided with all necessary forms and will be qualified to render assistance to taxpayers in making out their returns. Public announcement will be made through the press of the dates when these men will visit each community and taxpayers will be urged to call on them promptly. Their services are free and there should be no necessity for anyone to incur expense in the preparation of his return.

Plans have also been perfected whereby the revenue field officers are to have the co-operative aid of the State and County Councils of National Defense not only in disseminating information regarding the law but in arousing and stimulating a patriotic attitude toward war taxation. Volunteer assistance will be rendered also by committees of bankers, accountants, postmasters, and by the highly trained field force of the Department of Agriculture.

We hope so thoroughly to cover the field that ignorance of the law may not be consistently offered by any taxpayer as an excuse for failure to comply with its requirements. It must not be ovelooked that the law plainly imposes upon the taxpayer the duty of seeking the revenue officials and of complying with its provisions and prescribes rigid penalties for failure to comply with them.

As a practical aid to the millions of new taxpayers, we have devised a comparatively simple, self-explanatory income-tax return form for the use of persons having a net income of less than three thousand dollars. Many of these people do not keep books or records of accounts. They are not familiar with accounting terms and methods and would be unnecessarily confused if confronted with a form which carried the intricate questions required by the surtax and excess profits tax features of the law. Consequently, the man of small income, who is subject only to the normal tax of two per cent, is to have the benefit of a schedule drafted in the simplest possible form and language.

The man of larger income, who is required to compute surtax and excess profits taxes in addition to the normal tax, will be required to use more detailed forms with appropriate instructions.

As illustrative of some of the recommendations touching the excess profits tax, which are now being considered with a view to presenting them to the Secretary of the Treasury, the following among others may be cited.

Allowance of reasonable salaries in the case of partnerships and individuals, in order to place them on an equal basis in this respect with corporations. The effect of this allowance would be to transfer a reasonable salary allowance from income derived from capital invested, all of which would otherwise be taxable under the graduated rates of section 201, to section 209, which imposes a flat rate of eight per cent on salaries and other income. It is readily seen that such a construction is fully within the spirit and intent of the law. It is within the letter of section 209, which allows each individual who really earns a salary by personal exertion, no matter in what business connection, to have it taxed under the eight per cent provision of section 209.

That the eight per cent rate be made to apply to professional men even if a small amount of capital is employed by them.

That merchants be permitted to make inventories of merchandise either at cost or at market value. That brokers be included, on the ground that they are merchants of securities.

That any taxpayer who is content with a seven per cent deduction upon his invested capital will not be called upon to make a complete return of his pre-war capital and income.

The Secretary of the Treasury has approved of a treasury decision allowing the full exemption provided by the Congress to corporations in sections 201 to 203. The difficulty here arose that a definite exemption was provided for in section 203 but the mechanics provided for applying the exemption in section 201 were left incomplete in a limited number of cases. Hence this decision carries out the manifest intent and purpose of the Congress.

We are confident that the rules and regulations to be adopted will interpret the law in a manner which will be in full accord with its intent, and in harmony with the methods of legitimate business and the rights of the taxpayers. It is neither hoped nor expected that these regulations will please every taxpayer. They would not be good regulations if they did. The spirit of honest co-operation with the taxpayer, however, is being instilled into every employe of the Bureau and will be insisted upon at all times and in all places.

All taxation is burdensome. War taxes are necessarily so, because they are heavy. The Government's needs are pressing, however, and must be met. The law imposes an obligation upon every citizen which he must meet honestly, patriotically, and we hope, cheerfully. We have many evidences that American patriotism is responding to this condition. The man who pays his Liberty tax in full, without question or murmur, is no less a patriot than the man who invests in the Liberty Bond or volunteers his services for military duty.

DECREASED PRODUCTION

Of the Cheaper Pennsylvania Cigars—During the Pa Three Months—Significant Figures from the Ninth District.

"Since October the number of cigars manufactured in the Ninth Pennsylvania Intern Revenue District has been steadily declining. that month the output was 74,931,090; in N vember it had fallen to 69,969,112, and in D cember was down to 62,367,308," declares th Lancaster, Pa., Examiner.

"Cigars selling below four cents showed th greatest slump in the three months' period, fal ing off by about one-half. This would mo strikingly show the passing out of the chea cigar in this region, which has long been th center of production for this class of cigar The great cut in production of this grade c cigars is no doubt due to the inability of th manufacturers to any longer make it at the pre ent high cost of tobacco, coupled with the stea ily advancing wage scale in the factories. I October there were 24,878,850 cigars of th class made in this district. In November th number had fallen to 15,716,907, and in Decen ber was still further reduced to 12,582,623.

"Cigars selling at between four and seve cents, the great bulk of which is made up of th popular six cents cigars, continue to hold the own so far as the production figures would ind cate. In October the output of this class c cigars was 47,471,780; in November, with th attention of manufacturers more devoted to th necessity of increased prices for their goods, had advanced to 51,760,135, and in Decembe was slightly above the October figures, despit the slump in the other classes, the number bein 47,620,525.

"For the three months the production c cigars selling at seven cents and above remaine about the same, the figures following: Octobe 2,580,460; November, 2,492,070; Decembe 2,164,160."

For the purpose of comparison below is give the production figures for the last six months o 1917 and 1916:

	1917.	1916.
July	63,761,620	61,348,78
August	68,748,820	66,164,37
September	64,519,900	64,769,76
October	74,931,090	73,941,89
November	69,969,112	69,962,32

STORE OF ACKER, MERRALL & CONDIT CO., AT CAMP UPTON

A trading place, appealing to 45,000 soldiers these days, must specialize in goods and service. In the emporium at Camp Upton, Acker, Merrall & Condit have quantities of carefully selected merchandise and a working force of more than 100 men. Also is established a system that enables relatives and friends to make it easier for the boys of the National Army to obtain exactly what they want. The company issues a $5 book containing coupons varying in value from 1 cent to 25 cents. These coupons are used in purchasing various articles. Relatives and friends of soldiers stationed at Camp Upton may purchase coupon books at any of the Acker, Merrall & Condit stores in New York and Brooklyn, at any Tyson Company news-stand, Hotel McAlpin, Hotel Claridge, Cafe Savarin, Fifth Avenue Restaurant, Maillard's, and at Camp Upton.

Coupon books, as well as cash, enable soldiers to buy practically any article needed at the camp, they save the trouble and expense of sending things and they eliminate the possibility of shipping articles for which soldiers have little need.

The Garfield Decree and the Activity of the T. M. A.

Counselor Dushkind and His Assistants Did All They Could to Inform the Trade and to Secure Modifications That Would Make the "Closing Order" Less Injurious to the Tobacco Business

From early morning on Thursday, when the news of the Fuel Order first appeared in the press, until Saturday afternoon, the T. M. A. offices looked more like a busy telegraph office than a commercial institution. There was no time for calling meetings or for mailing bulletins. The trade had to be advised by telegram and long-distance phones.

Assisted ably by his son, David S. Dushkind, and by Edward A. Gersbach, his secretary, Counselor Dushkind kept the wires busy answering continuous inquiries for information and advice.

One of the first steps taken by the secretary of the T. M. A. was to wire Fuel Administrator Garfield for permission to work off all prepared and cased tobaccos which in itself would have caused an incalculable loss. Mr. Dushkind wired Dr. Garfield as follows:

"TOBACCO LEAF MUST NECESSARILY BE WETTED AND PREPARED TWENTY-FOUR HOURS BEFORE IT CAN BE USED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF CIGARS OR OTHER TOBACCO PRODUCTS. SUCH WETTED OR PREPARED LEAF MUST BE USED UP ON THE DAY FOLLOWING ITS PREPARATION OR IT WOULD BE WORTHLESS. WE ASK FOR PERMISSION TO USE UP ALL PREPARED TOBACCO LEAF IN ORDER TO SAVE MILLIONS OF DOLLARS' WORTH OF TOBACCO FROM DESTRUCTION. AN IMMEDIATE REPLY IS IMPERATIVE."

The reply, which did not come until Friday morning, due undoubtedly to the congestion of the telegraph service, was brief but meant quite a lot to cigar manufacturers. It read as follows:

"ANSWERING WIRE YOU CAN RUN TO SAVE PRODUCT ALREADY PREPARED."

Upon the receipt of the telegram from the Fuel Administrator, the T. M. A. office got busy telephoning the local manufacturers and wiring out-of-town manufacturers, asking them in turn to communicate the news to their neighboring manufacturers, advising them of the permission to operate their factories in order to work off prepared stock.

Asking that the tobacco industry be exempted from the Fuel Order, the T. M. A. sent the following telegram to the President and to the Fuel Administrator.

"AS PATRIOTIC CITIZENS THE TOBACCO MEN OF AMERICA STAND READY TO CHEERFULLY MAKE EVERY SACRIFICE ESSENTIAL FOR THE SUCCESS OF THE WAR BUT WE RESPECTFULLY SUBMIT THAT THE FUEL ORDER JUST ISSUED AS APPLIED TO THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY WILL WORK HARDSHIP AND INJURY TO AN EXTENT NOT JUSTIFIED BY THE INSIGNIFICANT SAVING OF FUEL DERIVED THEREFROM STOP TOBACCO BEING INTENSELY SENSITIVE TO ATMOSPHERIC CONDITIONS IT IS ESSENTIAL AND HAS ALWAYS BEEN THE PRACTICE TO KEEP THE FACTORIES HEATED EVERY DAY, INCLUDING NON-WORKING DAYS IN ORDER TO PREVENT DECOMPOSITION, AND THE FUEL CONSUMED IN THE ACTUAL MANUFACTURE OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS AMOUNTS TO VERY LITTLE MORE THAN THE FUEL NEEDED SIMPLY FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE RAW MATERIAL STOP. ALSO TOBACCO PRODUCTS ARE SOLD UNDER BRANDS OR TRADEMARKS OF NATIONAL POPULARITY VALUED AT HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS. THE ORDER APPLYING, AS IT DOES, TO TERRITORY EAST OF THE MISSISSIPPI, WILL OPERATE TO THE GREAT ADVANTAGE OF THOSE HAVING FACTORIES WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND MARKETING THEIR PRODUCTS IN THE FORBIDDEN TERRITORY TO THE INCALCULABLE INJURY AND PROBABLY TO THE DESTRUCTION OF THE VALUABLE BRANDS MANUFACTURED EAST OF THE MISSISSIPPI. MOREOVER, TOBACCO IS A WAR ESSENTIAL ONLY SECOND TO FOOD AS IS EVIDENCED BY THE OFFICIAL DECLARATIONS OF OUR HIGHEST ARMY OFFICERS, AS WELL AS BY THE TREMENDOUS DEMANDS OF OUR GOVERNMENT AND THE GOVERNMENTS OF OUR ALLIES FOR TOBACCO PRODUCTS. WE THEREFORE EARNESTLY PROTEST AGAINST THIS ORDER APPLYING TO OUR INDUSTRY, AS IT WILL NOT ONLY SERIOUSLY IMPAIR THE BILLION OF CAPITAL INVESTED IN THE INDUSTRY AND WORK INCALCULABLE INJURY TO ITS GREAT ARMY OF WORKMEN BUT WILL MATERIALLY REDUCE THE TWO HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS OF ANNUAL REVENUE THAT THE GOVERNMENT RECEIVES FROM TOBACCO PRODUCTS."

On Saturday morning the T. M. A. received the following answer from Fuel Administrator Noyes:

"ANSWERING WIRE, YOU ARE PERMITTED TO USE ONLY SUFFICIENT FUEL TO PREVENT INJURY TO PROPERTY FROM FREEZING."

Permission to burn oil or natural gas, where natural gas can be had, for heat and light was also asked by the T. M. A., and in response to that request the following telegram was received:

"THE PRESENT ORDER IS DESIGNED TO RESTRICT THE USE OF ALL KINDS OF FUEL ON THE DAYS PRESCRIBED AND THIS INCLUDES FUEL IN WHATEVER FORM BURNED."

"The Fuel Order," said Mr. Dushkind, "came to us as a complete surprise and without the least intimation that such measure was in contemplation. According to our reports," continued Mr. Dushkind, "it is perfectly apparent that the tobacco industry is closed up tight throughout the affected territory, and is carrying out the edict of Dr. Garfield not only according to the letter, but according to the spirit of the order, even factories where cigars are made solely by hand, without any power, are closed up, and also the retail stores, which under a strict interpretation of the order could have been kept open and lighted but not heated, since the order does not preclude the use of fuel for light."

PETITION DENIED AND DISMISSED

The Interstate Commerce Commission has denied and dismissed the petition of associated commercial bodies of New Jersey for a readjustment of freight rates and a lower scale of rates between points in New Jersey and western points, than applies between New York City and the same points. The New Jersey communities sought to obtain rates lower than the New York rates by the cost of lighterage and floatage between the New Jersey rail terminals and points of loading or delivery on the Manhattan and Brooklyn shores. The commission holds that there is no discrimination against the New Jersey communities, and that the lighterage zone system of rates is justified by the conditions.

Soldiers' Smoke Week

A. B. Dick and Bert Ennis have planned a "Soldiers' Smoke Week," commencing February 18, when hundred of patriotic newspapers will run the following advertisement:

"This is Soldiers' Smoke Week. Every smoker should sacrifice smokes for the sake of supplying tobaccoless soldiers in France with it. Every 25c you contribute to 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' sends a week's supply of home cheer to a lonely American boy in the trenches. One dollar sends a month's supply. Your war bit for this week is to help bring this comfort to the boys who are fighting your battles. Send your contributions at once."

As proof of a desire to do its bit in making the drive a success, The Rotoprint Gravure Company, 263 Ninth avenue, New York City, has contributed a most striking one-sheet poster which will be placed in hotels, railroad depots, and business offices, and will be displayed on prominent billboards throughout the country during "Smoke Week."

$300 Offered for a Postcard

In every tobacco kit that is sent to the American soldiers in France, A. B. Dick sees that a card carrying the name and address of a contributor is enclosed. Thousands of cards have returned bearing messages of thanks from the boys.

Down in Providence, R. I., the card idea had the folks all stirred up. Each of the many thousands who had given to the fund was hoping that he would have the good fortune to receive the first card sent from the trenches to Providence. To become the possessor of it grew to be a much sought honor, and the Providence Journal, which leads all newspapers in collections for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," with a total of $31,921.30, printed a story about an offer of ten dollars for the first card by one of its readers. J. A. Akeroyd was the lucky man, and he immediately sold the card to H. T. Ayers, and then turned the ten dollars into the tobacco fund.

Mr. Ayers has received a number of offers for the card, the highest bid being $300. But it is not likely that the card will be sold for this sum, as a booth has been opened in the automobile show where the card is to be auctioned off. The card will be set in a hand-carved, antique, gold frame, with a mat of 1¼ inch of gold leaf, and when finished will be placed on exhibition. Whatever sum is paid for the card will be turned over to the Providence Journal to be applied to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

After a short illness in the General Hospital, Philip J. Bornsgesser, manager of the Seed Leaf Tobacco Growers Co., died on January 15. Mr. Bornsgesser was at one time connected with the old Skiles and Frey Co., and was well known among tobacco men in Pennsylvania. He lived at 119 North Mary street, Lancaster, Pa.

"ALL FOR OUR COUNTRY"

To the "closing order" devised by Dr. Garfield, confusion inconvenience, exasperation, hardships, trouble and loss are more than mere incidentals. Business to-day is so interdependent that even a "temporary suspension of non essential industries" immediately causes additional difficulty for all. At this time, attempts to insure coal conservation are praiseworthy. Concerning the ways and means adopted, however, opinions were expressed that Dr. Garfield's sudden move was neither the wisest nor best method of alleviating a bad situation. Many protested. But the "closing order" was obeyed.

The endeavors of the National Fuel Administration were not frustrated either by active opposition or lack of co-operation. Because it was a war measure, authoritatively declared to be necessary, the Garfield plan was accepted. An unfortunate snow storm impeded progress. "Heatless Monday" and five days idleness in thousands of plants, large and small, have not caused the available coal supply to be increased to an extent that amply justifies the financial and other hardships imposed.

Yet the loss and injury a stoppage causes to business must be accepted with other war conditions. A nation engaged in a tremendous conflict is concerned chiefly in obtaining victory. Our people must pay the price necessary to secure success. Individual woes, impairment of certain interests, hardships enforced on communities, are as nothing compared with the urgent need for assistance that will enable the United States to win this war.

As best we can, in every way, each and all of us must give and serve.

"All for our country" is a motto to live up to, just now.

WHY BE AN ASSOCIATION MEMBER?

Why should I be a member of a Trade Association? "It is only an aggregation with Boost as its motto and 'Blow' as its battlecry, and where every fellow toots his own horn." There was a time when such conditions prevailed and Trade Associations were devoted chiefly in disseminating hot air. But the days of blow and bellow, the era of boost and boast have gone by. The level-headed, thinking business man of to-day deprecates the brass band methods of the circus parade, because you cannot summon trade with a siren or foster commerce with a calliope. But the present day, thoroughly modern Trade Association is a community necessity. It is the hub around which the civic activities of the community revolves. Such a commercial organization is an answer to that often repeated assertion that "Everybody's business is nobody's business." A city without a live, aggressive commercial organization is like a ship without a rudder.

The activities of the Trade Associations are very extensive and benefit both directly and indirectly all lines of business. It is not right or fair to absorb the benefit therefrom without contributing towards the expense of its maintenance. The members are all enterprising, loyal and patriotic citizens who are freely giving their time to the work in hand. Of course there are always a few critics and fault finders, but please bear in mind that it is "the whistle that makes the noise while it is the engine that pulls the train."

In joining the association you become a factor in the political and economical life of your community. Don't think because you are a cigar retailer that you don't count here, you do, and you can increase your own value and power in the community by co-operating with the other cigar retailers, and don't forget the time to do it is right NOW.

When we run the government we don't exempt the man from paying his taxes because he neglects his privilege of voting and because he refuses to attend caucuses or to run for office. He gets the benefits of government whether he takes any interest in it or not. It seems that that is the way a retailers' organization should be run. Every retailer ought to be taxed a certain sum to maintain the interests of retailers in general, no matter whether he takes any further interest or part in the organization or not.

A little incident recently happened that strikingly showed the benefits to be derived from an association. The police department had issued certain orders that would entail a serious loss upon the retailer. In order to have these orders cancelled or at least modified, an influential member of the association called upon the head of the police department. He went as an individual, not representing the association, and no attention was paid to his protest. Another member then took the matter up, but he went as a representative of the association. He was given immediate attention, not as an individual, but as the representative of an association of men who were working for the benefit of the trade in general, and the police orders were modified. After this will anyone say that the association does not benefit them and is worth the amount they are called upon periodically to pay for its support? If it were not for the association those police orders would be in force in their entirety to-day and the trade in general would be the sufferers.—Smoke.

JUST WAIT FOR THE THAW

Cheer up, chillun, tho the weather's mighty raw,
Every time dar comes a freeze, dar's gotter come a thaw.
It takes a little patience till de freezin'-time is done,
An' if you lose yoh temper, why, it doesn't help yoh none.

Cheer up, chillun, 'cause de weather's on de move,
When de luck appears de hardest, it is certain to improve.
Cold wave an' warm wave, dey gotter mind de law—
Every time you gits a freeze, you gotter have a thaw.

Cheer up, chillun, an' prepare to say "Hurrah!"
De chilliest proposition by an' by is boun' to thaw.
Yoh hopes dey keeps a droppin'—don't you let it make you frown,
Thermometers was built foh movin' up, de same as down.

So, cheer up, chillun, 'cause you sho'ly might as well;
We all has our troubles, an' dar's nothin' new to tell.
Each botheration seems about de worst you ever saw,
But every time you gits a freeze, you's gotter have a thaw.

FENDRICH'S SUCCESS

The Great Cigar Factory in Evansville Eclipsed All Previous Records in 1917—A Splendid Showing

Reports the Evansville Courier: "The year 1917 closed the most successful year in the history of H. Fendrich cigar factory, in Evansville, Ind. The big plant, employing more than 1,000 people, ran every day during the year and the big payrolls had much to do with Evansville's prosperity.

"Herman Fendrich founded his business in 1850 as a tobacconist and cigar manufacturer. He laid the foundation of his business well with a sterling record as a business man. His son, John H. Fendrich, erected the present factory, the largest in the world, when the business had assumed such proportions as to make necessary immense additions.

"The plant covers three and a half acres of ground in the center of the city with buildings of brick, stone and concrete construction. These buildings were erected with a view to every possible convenience for the business and army of workers at the plant.

"Perhaps no other factory in the city has such an ideal environment. The Willard Library is just across Oakley street, while the Municipal Market is just beyond.

"The light, ventilation and sanitary conditions of the plant are modern in every respect. The lavatories and toilets are located on enclosed bridges connecting the main buildings. Flowing water from driven wells supplies the drinking fountains. No safeguard has been overlooked in working for the welfare of the employees.

"A year ago the company established a benefit society for employees of the firm. Illness is no longer feared by the employees as a weekly allowance is given them and at death of an employee the family is given the insurance.

"The daily output of the factory is 450,000 cigars. Every State and Territory in the Union is reached by the Fendrich cigars. The company manufactures the Charles Denby and the La Fendrich as its leaders.

"'We are pleased with the year just closed because of the business success to us,' Mr. Fendrich says. 'But we are more satisfied because it has allowed us to keep our employees constantly at work in these trying times.'"

AUSTIN, NICHOLS & CO. EXONERATED

The Federal Food Board of New York announces that it has wholly cleared of all blame the wholesale grocery firm of Austin, Nichols & Co., against which five complaints were made for selling sugar above the Government price.

The testimony was taken by Arthur Williams, Federal Foods Administrator for New York City, and his findings were concurred in by John Mitchell, chairman of the board. Their report was submitted to Food Administrator Hoover at Washington, who has approved it.

SNOW STORM ALMOST ISOLATES WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, January 22.—"By the heaviest snowfall occurring for years," in Washington and the surrounding country, the National Capital is almost completely isolated so far as railroad traffic is concerned. Trains from the West, due here last night, were not expected to arrive before noon, while trains from New York are several hours late.

Train service from the South is nearly paralyzed and officials at the Union Station stated they were unable to say when any trains from the South would arrive. While the heavy snowfall has crippled telegraph wires to some extent, telegraph service has not yet felt the full extent of the season's heaviest snowstorm.

EIGHTY DUTCH SHIPS CHARTERED

Washington, Jan. 22.—Charter to this Government of all Dutch steamers now being held in American ports has been decided upon by the Dutch Government in a provisional agreement just signed in London. It provides charter for one round trip for upward of eighty vessels in American ports.

They are not to go into the war zones, but five of the steamers will carry material for Switzerland, and two take cargo for the Netherlands Overseas Trust. It is part of the agreement that the ships shall carry 150,000 tons of food for the relief of the Belgians.

MANILA MORE IMPORTANT

Pacific Mail Steamship Co. Will Move Its Headquarters in the Far East from Hongkong to the Philippines.

Considerable significance is attached by shipping people in Hongkong to the announcement of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., the chief American shipping interest in the Pacific and the Far East, that its headquarters for China and the Philippines are henceforth to be at Manila instead of at Hongkong, where they have been since the inception of the company over 60 years ago. The change has not been unexpected, for with the establishment of a new direct service between the Pacific coast and India by way of Manila a considerable portion of the company's fleet coming to the Far East is not to touch at Hongkong at all, either going or coming. It has generally been understood, too, that the company has found it to its advantage to maintain its chief interests in American territory. There has long been under consideration a plan to establish a fast and adequate through service between the Philippines and the United States, with a system of "feeder lines" running from Manila to various parts of the Far East. The war has interfered somewhat with the immediate accomplishment of this general design, but the change in headquarters now announced is in keeping with the plans of the company along this line of development.

Parted from a Ten Spot

The late P. T. Barnum's proverb "that people love to be humbugged" was proven Wednesday afternoon by a Mount Pleasant, Pa., merchant and dealer in tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.

Wednesday afternoon a well dressed man of pleasing address dropped into the Mount Pleasant man's store where he told the merchant that he was "a deputy sheriff," and displayed a badge pinned inside his coat.

"You have been guilty of selling cigarettes to boys whose ages makes this a serious criminal offense," the stranger told the astonished merchant. "This matter has reached the district attorney's office. The fine is very severe and the possibility of receiving a jail sentence from court, but I can fix this matter up, providing you pay me $10 now." As the merchant handed him a ten dollar bank note, the fictitious deputy is said to have uttered, "Now this will save you trouble."

Soon after the visiting "deputy" left, this tobacco dealer inquired of other dealers in his line of goods whether a deputy sheriff had visited them and accused them of selling cigarettes to minors. He received a negative reply and then it dawned on him that the visiting "deputy" was a swindler. It is supposed this fellow went toward Latrobe or Pleasant Unity.

An almost similar game has been worked, it is said, on New Kensington cigarette dealers and on druggists. To date the swindler has gotten away without colliding with real officers of the law.—Greensburg Tribune.

Brazilian Imports of Leaf Tobacco

A. M. L. Gottschalk, American Consul General at Rio Janeiro, says: Apart from the native tobacco of Brazil, which is consumed largely in the form of cigar fillers and a certain class of native-made cigarettes, the local market requires leaf tobacco for cigar wrappers, for mild cigarettes of the "American" or "Turkish" types, and for pipe tobacco, the last mentioned, however, being usually imported already prepared from abroad. Three or four firms in the country furnish a type of "Turkish" or "Egyptian" cigarette that is almost equal to the same product sold in other countries for the same price, but these are sold under local names.

Brazil's imports of the leaf have been increasing steadily since 1910, though, of course, the war has wrought changes in the trade. Germany is no longer a supplier of this market, much of Germany's former stocks having been tobacco from the Latin Americas and the Orient, redistributed and perhaps refermented at Hamburg. Chinese tobacco is coming into increasing use here; it is largely used in the manufacture of the "Turkish" or "Egyptian" cigarettes. Trade with the United States has grown steadily. Naturally, the trade with Turkey fell off with the outbreak of the European war. The Dutch possessions, which have never before figured as suppliers, furnished a very fair amount in 1916.

Expressed in kilos of 2.2046 pounds, Brazil's imports of leaf tobacco for the years 1910 to 1916 were:

Brazil's imports of leaf tobacco have been chiefly to Rio de Janeiro, Bahia, and Rio Grande, which are the centers of Brazilian tobacco manufacturing. The city of Rio de Janeiro has in this regard largely increased its imports, with the increase and development of its factories.

EXPORTS OF TOBACCO FROM BRAZIL

Since the outbreak of the European war the export tobacco trade of Brazil, which was almost entirely with Germany, has been diverted to other European countries, Holland and France being the principal consumers. The exports to the United States are comparatively insignificant.

Statistics of exports for 1914, 1915 and 1916 are as follows:

COMBATING THE TOBACCO BUDWORM

WASHINGTON, January 21.—As a result of work at Quincy, Fla., a method of combating the tobacco budworm by means of a mixture of arsenate of lead and meal has been perfected and this remedy now is used generally according to experts of the Bureau of Entomology. The method, it is stated, has effected a saving of at least $20.00 an acre over that previously in vogue.

DOUBLE-BARRELED LOCAL OPTION

TRENTON, January 22.—Two local option bills were passed by the New Jersey Senate last night. One of the measures prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage in municipalities where a majority of the voters shall decide in favor of such action, and the other would regulate the licensing and sale of intoxicants in municipalities where it is favored by voters.

Reports from Havana

HAVANA, January 18.—Crop prospects are not much changed, as it has not rained at all. However we have learned that some of the early planted seedlings, sufficiently matured in growth, have been cut already in nearly all the zones where tobacco is grown. Yet such cuttings amount to only an infinitesmal part of the whole crop, as not all of the early plantings survived and new plantings had to be made.

Sales during the past fortnight totaled 7,313 bales. which divided consisted of: Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta 2,668 bales, Partido 677, and Remedios 3,968 bales.

Buyers were: Americans 2,662, shippers to South America 2,125, and local manufacturers of cigar and cigarettes 2,526 bales.

Receipts of leaf tobacco from the country.

For 11 days to Dec. 31, 1917.	bales.	Since Jan. 1, 1917. bales
Vuelta Abajo	2,602	196,417
Semi Vuelta	1,342	14,735
Partido	4,430	73,949
Remedios	1,267	147,017
Oriente	....	284
Total	9,641	432,402

The heavier receipts of Semi Vuelta and Partido are due to the bales, made in the escogidas at Havana, from the bundles of leaf brought from the country by carts or electric conveyances.

Exports of cigars per S.S. Esperanza, January 7, totaled 221 cases, containing 880,375 cigars, consigned to the following countries, viz.: To United States 421,820, to Great Britain 306,155, to the Argentine Republic 41,700, to Canada 39,500, to Italy 26,000, to Gibraltar 25,000, to British Africa 19,000, and to China 1,200 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco from Havana during the week ending January 7, 1918, totaled 6,229 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To all ports of the United States 5,245, to Canada 321, and to the Argentine Republic 663 bales.

Among the leaf buyers who arrived during the last week were: José Villar, of Marcelino Perez & Co.; Morris Edelman, of E. M. Schwarz & Co., and Harry Rothschild, of Cullman Bros., all of New York. Also returned to Havana: Bruno Diaz, of B. Diaz & Co. Furthermore, we saw Col. Emilio Cordero and Mrs. Cordero, who came here to spend the winter.

Most of the cigar manufacturers are fairly busy for this season of the year, although a few are complaining. The prospects are somewhat uncertain yet, as Vuelta Abajo prices cause headaches to those who do not own stocks of leaf big enough to tide them over. On the other hand, the big order from Japan, 250,000 cigars in one shipment, promises a new market for our factories. Last year Japan only imported 13,400 cigars during the whole 12 months.

Romeo y Julieta is as busy as never before, and Partagas, La Corona, Por Larrañga, Punch, Hoyo de Monterey, Calixto Lopez & Co. and Belinda are all well supplied with orders. ROSAM.

MORE BOND SECURED CURRENCY

WASHINGTON, January 21.—The Comptroller of the Currency announces that during the nine months ending December 31, 1917 United States Government bonds held on deposit as security for circulating notes of national banks increased by $19,054,890.

Since March 31, 1917, the amount of bonds deposited has shown a steady increase each month, rising from $664,526,370 on the date mentioned, to $683,581,260 in December.

NEW YORK STATE CAPITOL DISTRICT,
January 21, 1918.

Thirty miles away were the Scilly Islands. But there, where the Jacob Jones went down, was nothing atop the cold, rough water except a bit of wreckage, a stalled motor-dory, some few life-rafts—and numerous bobbing heads!

Pulling one another out of the wet, one by one, Lieutenant-Commander Dave Bagley at last decided no more lives could possibly be saved, so reluctantly gave the order to man the oars.

Fritz, in his distant U-boat, had just picked up a sailor, then disappeared beneath the surface without further help. And, almost immediately, another head breasted a wave, striking out for Bagley's boat.

When the chap came within hailing, he tossed his head a time or two, clearing his hair and eyes of surplus water, then squirted forth more of the like from a mouth better suited to American Navy plug.

Right then he shouted: "I say, Skipper, where do we go from here?"

What could Bagley and the other seamen survivors do? Simply grab this cheerful son by the slack of his pants, salvaging a spirit which instantly demanded: "Are we downhearted?" To the answering, decisive chorus of the shivering crew with a mighty, victorious "NO!"

Now some such fellow as Bagley's man has his head under water somewhere in this New York State Capitol District! Where he is at this very minute nobody seems to know. But when he comes to the top with his cheering, confident cry, every business man, every working man, every citizen will respond as did the freezing boys of the torpedoed Jacob Jones!

Sure, they're downhearted! Some have even admitted it! Yet, when the real challenge comes, every merchant, every manufacturer, every son-of-a-gun who earns an' spends a dollar, will deny the very idea of blue-feet with such a deafening, determined delivery that the Evening Echo will have to wire Willie Hearst for a specimen font of that there bill-board type to register the exurberant emphasis of the chorus-crowd in the vigorous voiced "NO"!

For, no matter how many Garfield Days are eventually proclaimed, the people of these United States are only downhearted temporarily. Tomorrow morning, perhaps before, the very lads an' lassies who certainly thought they'd die, ere this, will be back on the job, working like the boys of the Jacob Jones, rowing for those faraway landmarks, always down on the horizon at the start, always a-comin' closer an' closer as the coxwain yells for speed at the finish!

Factories, of course, closed down. That is, they all observed the five-day Garfield order by working up stock in process, then shutting up shop for the rest of the period.

At the American Cigar Co. plant in Albany, Manager Wohl said he got permission to run the factory a day and a half of the tabooed time in order to dispose of cased leaf. About 150 hands were thrown out of work here, with an estimated loss of $700 in wages.

Other Capitol District cigar factories report similar facts. Some of the smaller shops merely worked a few hours of Friday morning to clear the decks of tubbed leaf.

Tobacco factories did likewise. Everybody kicked, then bustled about trying to conform to the letter of the ruling. No trade plants in this section violated the regulation knowingly.

Those ten closed Mondays, though, considerably bother local retailers. Beginning today, they don't really know whether they ought to be open or closed.

First off, the Fuel Administrator for this district said they couldn't open. Then he said they could. And, later, he changed his mind again. So some say they'll open, like druggists. Others report they'll stay closed, like saloons.

"Check up stock, the Piper's Coming!" So says the nifty W. D. C. mail card of Steve Diekhaus, who writes he'll be around the Capitol District next week with a lot of new stuff from the William Demuth Co., New York.

From the army camp at Jacksonville, Florida, word arrives that Francis A. Shields, junior, is quite sick there. Therefore, Mr. and Mrs. Shields have gone down to see the boy, who, it is hoped, will soon recover the vitality of his former health. Superintendent Dan Doyle will manage the tobacco factory of Shields & Son, Albany, during the absence of Mr. Shields.

Undoubtedly W. W. Weeks wrote his advance card before Doc Garfield wrote his!

Because Wonder Worker Weeks flamboyantly states he'll call around to see the trade for Benito Rovira Co., New York, some time today!

While everyone knows, or, rather, don't know, exactly how school keeps or not this day! Mebbe th' gong'll ring, mebbe it won't! It's all up to the precise amount of pull that the Wonder Worker has with Boss Garfield!

What's your income tax? Turn to page 35. Or turn again a few folios to see about a lot of other things Velvet Joe can tell you in regard to facts an' figgers all set down in his timely little 1918 Almanac. And, whether you know Joe or not, he'll be mighty glad to send you one of his annual digests if you write to him at 4241 Folsom avenue, St. Louis, Mizzouri.

Last Wednesday afternoon at the annual meeting of the Franklin and Hampshire Tobacco Growers' Association, in Northampton, Mass., 25 cultivators made their first exhibit. From Bloomfield, Ct., came F. D. Griffin to judge the leaf and make a little talk on tobacco handling in the sheds. And Professor George Chapman of the State College discussed tobacco experiments in the Connecticut Valley.

So much has been said about shortage of tobacco tin boxes that TOBACCO inquired of the subject to the largest Capitol District manufacturers, who are Burdick & Son, Albany.

Said Department Manager Frank Crookes: "There is a sure enough shortage of tin. Coupled to it are the transportation difficulties. Seven cars of tin supplies are on the way to us from the Pennsylvania mills. One of these cars is only a few miles from here, jammed in the freight yards at Hoffman's. It is so tightly fixed, however, that I doubt if we'll be able to move it this present week. And that's how we stand on raw material, after a practical famine of many weeks!"

"Now, in regard to manufacture," continued Mr. Crookes, "we have simply to say our total production last year was something like twenty-two million assorted tin boxes for all purposes. Our other specialties, though, likewise require considerable tin, especially the Burdick stove goods. But, confining our attention to such boxes as tobacco manufacturers use, it can be readily seen that these folk are up against a serious condition right now."

"Formerly, the bright red, green and yellow tins cost only about $12 the thousand. While the price at this time is rapidly advancing, from $22 on, so making an individual tin box e Prince Albert, Tuxedo or Velvet cost betw n two and three cents each.

"This stock decrease, coupled to the price i crease, will quite likely compel many manuf turers to use stiff cardboard boxes. Some f these substitutes we have already made. Th y can be produced upon our present press, though the plates are entirely different."

"In fact, the tin box color work is made f ordinary paint. This we rework to suit c purposes. For 12 to 250 single box designs a produced from a piece of tin, according to t size of the box, of course. But, a pecul feature of the business is this: the boxes a not really tin at all!"

"They are, instead, the stampings from sp cially prepared wafer sheet steel, tin-coate Tin, you know, comes from Wales, and it co like the devil. Even our scraps are valuab Why, before the war, we used to bale 'em u ship 'em to Germany, and get $6 the ton f them. Those boches made the remnants in tin soldiers, selling them back to our kids f Christmas. Just now, as I say, we can use mo all our own scrap tin for our factory product Even the damaged boxes are reworked, as w now have a very satisfactory method of remo ing the paint-ink, making the tin like new."

"Tin boxes at this very minute are certain scarce, many of our best contracts being indef nitely set aside, while new work is absolutel taboo!"

Here's a very good scheme! Try it! Firs select some silently quiet Sunday night, like th last one. When business is a-slumber, cloc tickin' some big number!

Then, a customer! Ah, a box of matches h wants. Awright. Give 'em to 'im. Don't tak the person's penny, for he may be back tomor row for a stamp!

Exit costly customer. Resume readin' Th Perils of Profit, or, How to Keep It Down Lissen to th' tock-tick. All's well!

Suddenly, with dashing Doug Fairbanks festivity, enter stranger! Through the door, o course, not the show window! Have 'em yell

"Hey! Wherethefire? Place upstairs full o smoke! Shall I kick in th' door?"

You, vivaciously, reply suitably: "Smoke, you say? Why, it must be from this Flor de la Flor. I just lit it!"

But, no, it isn't so! For the clanging of many gongs, invisible though hearable, instantly convinces of a possible fire in th' offing!

So you rush out o' th' Smoke-Shop, just in time to meet a big bunch of boobs comin' in! Gee, you think, business must be pickin' up! Here's a crowd worth a dollar if it's worth a nickel!

Crool fate! Headin' th' delegashun is a mob o' peerleece an' firemen! "What is ut, that chimney again?" savagely demands Shelley, the admiral o' th' insurance patrol.

"DarnefIknow," you mumble, kinder surprised-like. "There's no fire here, chief, though I'm much obliged, I'm sure, for bringin' th' people around. Business was all shot to Coxey before you boys banged the bells. So, if you'll step up to the bar, gen'men, even though it may be Sunday, maybe you all will have a little real smoke?"

And, after pokin' here an' there, in sanitary, hygienic, dustless corners, th' boys in blue cheerfully withdrew, sheddin' chemical tears becuz th' fire consisted solely an' totally of one busted yale-lock on a second story door.

Thus, m' friends, anyone may be an accessory-before-the-fact by merely donating a cent's worth of safety matches to start a new, guaranteed-to-smoke fire in the fretful furnace!

While the same bringeth good cheer and better business to any cigar store on any dull evening! Ask the chaps in the Bruce Macdonald store, 110 State street, Albany. Then try out these trade-teasing plans every little while when business goes to sleep as it did last Sunday night!

That famous ole smokin' an' chewin' terbacker, known from forge to farm as Lorillard's Mechanic's Delight, now appears in our jobbing and retail houses as a ten-cent package. It seems to be just as popular as a dime packet as it was at a nickel, before the penny boost made a six-center of it.

Another old friend in new form is the Rocky Ford junior. This paper-wrapped blunt cigar is now in course of distribution by the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., who job Rocky Ford products in the Capitol District.

In the lower Pearl street window of the Dearstyne's retail store, two very attractive pictures are on view. One is a long photo-panel of Company K, 303rd Regiment, National Army, in camp at Ayer, Mass. In this view are many Capitol District boys who are serving the nation in the 303rd Infantry.

Interest in the other photo-view is also keen. For it is a picture of 10,000 sailors in training at the Great Lakes Station. They are formed into a huge perfectly proportioned human flag, blue and white uniforms alternating in double and triple rows to assemble the stars and stripes as seen from a naval airship.

He's going around to the local trade this week hummin' an old-time hymn! It runs somethin' like this:

Monkey kist th' baboon's sister,
Kist her 'til he raised a blister,
Lord, how she did yell!

Somewhat on the same order is that other stirring song, entitled: "When Blisters Burst, O Beautiful Bliss!" as sung by Paul Wessells.

For, you must understand, Paul's intense interest in blisters occurred within a very short time after the last big snow storm. Paul likes snow. Fact is, he just loves to shovel it!

So, he did. That is, he didn't! Because the splendid, spotless snow soon turned to inexorable, irritating ice!

And that there ice had to be removed. Yes, sir, the constable said so! Therefore Paul chopped! My, such a chop! All around the house, back to the gutter, down to the curb. Until Paul got to thinkin' he was the villiage contractor, with a fat job to clean off every sidewalk in Renssaeler, his country home!

However, Paul finished it! And now those blisters! Wow! Talk about splinters! He'd rather have them, even though they had to be extracted by a painless dentist! I guess so!

"But I'm getting better," sighed Paul. "My hands are now about fit to carry my usual pack of the General Cigar Co., with its new specialty of Robert Burns in the Laddies size. Seen it? Ten to the Boite Nature packet, going to the trade for $20 the thou, to retail for a quarter."

"Then, too," Paul proceeded, "I am authorized to offer a limited quantity of Capadura cigars. These are packed, as formerly, in paper containers, individual, $35 per M. Owls, White Owls, Robert Burns, and Little Bobbies, are coming along fairly well at present. Perhaps we'll soon have enough to fill all back orders, I can't say."

Six! Count 'em, six! Every night in the week 'cept Saturday! Lightless, coalless, heatless!

General orders have been issued in various counties throughout the Capitol District limiting illumination to the one evening. Troy got the ax first. Then Schenectady, Hudson, Albany, Rochester. And most of the villiages and towns in the surrounding terrain, likewise an' also!

Rules and regulations have been issued by the various Fuel Administrators of the several districts. Violations will result in immediate police action.

Under the old edict, simply Sunday and Tuesday night lights were banned. But this last order completely covers everything. All stores operating after sunset can carry just designation, name or business, sign only in electricity.

Cigar and drug stores are especially warned not to use too much juice in window and inside lighting. Gas as well is listed on the black sheet. And, if people around here don't comply with the request as issued, local boss Lansing will put everyone on a Boston business schedule, from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M. Though, if we're good, he also promises to rescind the order just so soon as conditions of coal supply respond to a more normal reserve than the present 65 per cent.

What's his name? Down there in the Bronnux, where he lives, they call him Bittle. Up here, where he works, they call him Biddle.

And it all came about through one of those questionaires. It was a post card, plainly addressed, "Christopher Bittle, class A." Now, almost every jobber and retailer in the entire Capital District knows Chris Biddle. And they also know him to be a Class A man.

Otherwise, he wouldn't be the boss of the Lorillard cigaret crew in these parts. They wouldn't have anyone but a class A man behind the Number 25, that Anagyros 35-cent cigaret brand which gives all those cheap 25-cent labels a pain in the gizzard!

Even in Catskill they sometimes buy a few Number 25's. Or, perhaps it's Deities they wanted! Anyway, Chris went down to Rip Van Winkleville with a medical-chest full of Murad, Mogul, Helmar samples, with a few Ziras on the side.

After tieing up at the wharf, the water-tank, or som'ere, Chris looked about for a taxi. You see, he had that terrible big trunk to jaunt. So he waited.

Probably he'd a been there yit if the Catskill Traction Co. hadn't a-come along. Said traction concern was fully represented by one of the finest cars on the line. Motorman an' conductor both swore so!

Truth is, this motorman-conductor business was all one. One man, that's all! And all he had to do was turn the trolley, fix the fender, fire the stove, start an' stop the car, collect th' fares, issue imaginary tickets, transfers, an' so on! Nothing to do, nothing to do!

Just the same, he got business! He got Chris, with the terrible trunk, y'know. And they started!

In due course o' time, while the wind winded, an' th' rain rained, Chris looked up from his price-list to discover—horrors! th' blame-boy had ferried the sole ambassador of the Lorillards 'way beyond his destination, the Saulspaugh Hotel!

Well, it must be admitted, Chris swore! What, get off here in all this rain, mud an' wind, carryin' that there e-nor-mous trunk 'way back there to the hotel? No, sir, I guess not!

And he didn't! For the Traction Company, as fully represented by the presence of aforementioned General Superintendent, saith, in a hare-lip apology: "Thaith alth righth, misther, I'll turnth arounth, an' take you backth." And he did!

"Every brand we make has a distinctive flavor of its own," asserted A. N. Duker, the A. T. Co.'s scout. "Why, do you know, the various vegetable compounds used in the manufacture of, say, Durham or Tuxedo, are commonly prepared, as well, for your family table? For instance, extracts like vanila, chocolate, and so on are properly balanced with tobacco to produce the desirable elements necessary to please the smoker's palate. That is why we use the familiar slogan for Durham, 'Like sugar in your coffee,' is really something more than mere advertising pep stuff. Because it tells a truth far better than a sermon on the subject."

Workmen are tearing the interior out of the Anndora Cigar Factory, up there on Broadway, Albany. Since the Payns closed the plant for reorganization, many alterations have been made in the shop. Machines are being set up, modern appliances substituted everywhere for the antique. Girls will undoubtedly replace the men at the benches. Opening, under the new title, will occur very soon.

"How's the prosper in prosperity?" asked Ph. Wilkinson, of Bennett, Sloan & Co., New York. "Reading this here paper this morning I see lots of Capitol District business men report big business. But I fail to find the names and addresses of joyous cigar men among the numerous optimists. What a matter? Ain't you fellows in this section also running on the fast track? Tobacconists, generally, are cheerful. Yet, 'round here, you resemble a magnificent morgue."

THE SMOKER.

Roosevelt's Cigarette

"Cigarette smoke irritates Representative William H. Stafford of Wisconsin," writes the Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune.

While waiting for other members of a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee to arrive for a hearing Friday, Mr. Stafford turned to a man sitting by the committee table and said rather brusquely:

"Young man, I wish you would throw that cigarette away; it's offensive to me."

The young man complied.

A moment later the chairman, Representative Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee, came in and suggested the committee was ready to start.

"We'll hear you first, Mr. Roosevelt," he said, addressing the "young man" disciplined by Mr. Stafford.

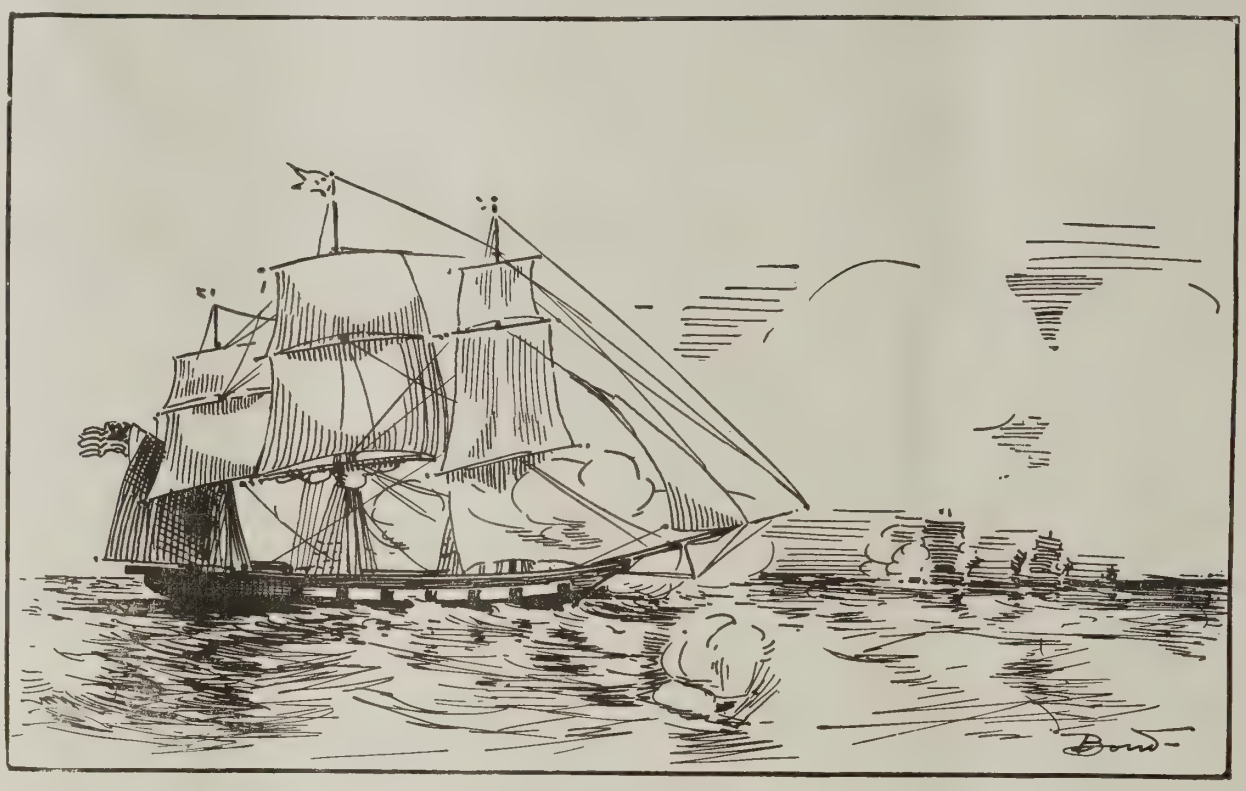
The "young man" was Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Mr. Stafford still is trying to figure out how to apologize for his brusqueness.

"THE CLEVEREST EVER PUT THROUGH"

Recent financing of the American Tobacco Co. is spoken of by some people as the cleverest that has been put through in a long while. As an example of keeping your cake and eating it too, it is probably unique. In this case the cake was cash for common dividends, conservation of which was desirable to increase working capital, while payment of dividends in some form was desired in justice to stockholders. By paying the 20 per cent. common dividends in three-year scrip, payable at maturity in cash or new "B" common stock at the option of the holder, cash is conserved to the extent of about $8,000,000 a year, sufficient in three years approximately to meet the $25,000,000 notes just issued, while the convertibility into common stock gives the scrip an added attraction.—Wall Street Journal.

Black Bros. have closed their cigar store at 22 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

SOLDIERS' CHANCES ARE NOT SO BAD



Don't worry if your son is in the army.

Fifteen men out of every sixteen in the Allied armies have been safe through three years of fighting.

During the past year not more than one man in thirty has been killed.

The death rate from disease is less than in peace times.

Only one man in five hundred loses a limb—a chance no greater than that in hazardous occupations at home.

The Pequot Brings Manila Cigars to America

In 1817 the American ship Pequot sailed from the Philippine Islands with the first Manila cigars for the United States, arriving at Salem, Mass., in July, 1818. The record of the Pequot's adventures together with the description of her cargo is contained in an old letter written by a Salem merchant, Saltonstall. Of the Manila cigars he wrote:—

> "Manilas are of a style approved by Spaniards who excel in knowledge of cigars. They burn handsomely and have a flavor very agreeable. A man may smoke many during a day and not be surfeited or made ill."

The character of Manila tobacco has not changed since then. The quality of cigars has improved and the quantity imported into the United States is counted in the hundred millions.

Securing Appreciation for the Girard Cigar

The Consumer Acceptance Idea Works Out—Opposition of the Medical Profession Turned to Distinctive Assistance in Advertising—The Virtue of Mildness

Just what will advertising do for a cigar? There are several manufacturers who rely on it as a direct source of mail-order sales. There are many who use it as a sales creator and stimulant at their points of distribution. The aim of Antonio Roig & Langsdorf, of Philadelphia, manufacturers of the Girard cigar, includes, perforce, a certain amount of the second effect, but the firm will be well pleased if it continues to build for it in the public mind first, the belief in the greater healthfulness of mild cigars, and second, an interchangeability of the terms "mild cigars" and "Girard cigars."

It is on these two purposes that their advertising is centered, and back of it is the story of the search for a point of difference on which ten-cent cigar sales could be made to grow where five-cent ones had grown before—a search made advisable by changes in manufacturing conditions which were cutting seriously into profits on quality five-centers.

It is not necessary to demonstrate that cigar manufacturing is a most competitive business. The number of new brands which spring up over night and then find their place on the dead level of mediocrity or disappear forever, attests that. Scores of brands are maintaining national distribution, and in addition to their competition the new brand must face that of the countless local brands and the output of little shops employing from one to fifty hands.

Years ago, so distributors say, a number of Philadelphia manufacturers obtained prominence with quality five-cent cigars, being able to give greater value for the money, generally speaking, than was to be found in the product elsewhere.

Then, with rising cost of materials and labor, it became increasingly difficult for them to maintain this lead without sacrifice of profits.

Like other manufacturers, Antonio Roig & Langsdorf turned, about 1910, to the greater opportunities to be found in the making of ten-cent cigars. That was when they felt the full force of the competition referred to, felt to such an extent that they came to the conclusion that it was necessary to find something more than an idea of quality or difference in flavor to capitalize as a foundation for sales growth.

There had to be something more than a mere difference, for when one has to deal with the popular taste in smoke, even though it permits an almost unlimited number of differences; the degree of difference is limited. As they saw the problem, the answer would have to embody a reason for buying higher-priced goods.

They found the reason finally in that rather strenuous competitor of the entire tobacco trade—the medical profession. They decided to capitalize the doctor. They studied the doctor's attitude toward tobacco in general and toward cigars in particular. The results as they figured them were something like this: For years physicians had been advising those of their patients who were heavy smokers to stop smoking. Then, either from more lenient views resulting from study of tobacco effects, or from the realization that smokers in the main could not be induced to quit the habit, the general trend of medical advice has modified to "smoke less." And for the last few years from two-thirds to ninety-five per cent. of the doctors have been telling their patients to "smoke milder cigars."

Will the time come when that proportion of the profession makes this advice more specific by saying "smoke Girard cigars"? The firm does not know, but it feels that with a target like that in range it is worth while to do some shooting.

We will pass over the manufacturing problems encountered in the production of a cigar blend which Antonio Roig & Langsdorf felt would turn the trick. Suffice it to say that they eased up on the comparatively heavy ten-cent brand they had been putting out, and as a result of two years' experiment the Girard cigar was born. The choice of a name was particularly happy for Philadelphia territory, which is full of the material evidences of the life and work of that great merchant and mariner, Stephen Girard.

Advertising of the Girard cigar was started in 1912. For the benefit of other manufacturers, whether they be producers of "smokes," wearing apparel, household goods or other articles of retail sales, to whom the lesson may have a meaning, the company confesses that it made a mistake in launching its wide publicity campaign before its lines of distribution were laid down on a sufficiently broad scale, and that it paid for this mistake.

Right here comes in the consideration of appropriation. Had it been practicable to flood the country with spread copy and large space it might have been that an aggressive enough demand would have been developed to be felt by the dealers in inquiries from the smoking public. Such a heavy investment, however, was not deemed wise, and as a result no such vigorous demand developed. The sales department had to go about establishing its distribution in much the same fashion as in the case of an unadvertised product. It was a common enough experience to get from the dealer this reply:

"No, your advertising doesn't seem to have cut much ice in this market. No one has ever come in this store and asked for Girards." This statement would be backed up triumphantly by an appeal to the clerks, "Tom, you never had any call for Girards, did you? No? Well, there you are, Mr. Salesman."

But after the line would be put in, and the customer who had seen the advertising would be confronted with the box on the counter or in the case, a combination was produced which did bring results from the advertising. The advertising did sell the consumer, but there could not be enough of it, due to other policy considerations of the firm, to extend that sale through the consumer to the dealer who had not yet been sold.

Under conditions like these it will be seen that widespread advertising did not aid much in the development of distribution lines of communication, and that the effect of much of it was not as great as it might have been for that period until the distribution caught up with it.

"Nerves" and "the doctor's orders" have been features of the copy almost entirely. In the various layouts we see the physician applying his stethoscope to the patient's heart with some such remark as "You're smoking too heavily, why don't you try Girards?" or "I see you have taken my advice about smoking Girards."

One shows a gleeful and fresh business man cheerfully boasting that he is smoking his "seventh cigar to-day," and that they are Girards, "that's why." Another draws a contrast between nerve and "nerves" with due reference to the reason. The slogan that runs through the advertising is "The Girard cigar never gets on your nerves."

In a recent series some very interesting points of attention value have been made. There is, for instance, the drawing of a hand and a cigar, so outlined as to convey the impression of shakiness. Below is the argument:

"A wee bit nervous, eh? That won't do. Success in life to-day requires steady nerves. Why not follow the lead of thousands," etc. The argument concludes: "And it's a man's smoke, too. Made from genuine shade-grown Havana—mellowed by age alone—fragrant and full-flavored. Smoke Girards whenever you please and as often as you please. There is no come-back, no 'dopey' sensation, no 'hangover.' Nothing but satisfaction. And you can see the difference in your feelings right away. Doctors recommend Girards—and smoke 'em too."

Another shows a smoker pointing to the legend, "Nerve instead of Nerves." In this piece of copy the word "nerve" shows up in heavy, sharp script. The word "nerves" appears as though written in a shaky hand.

The firm dates from 1871. Conservatism has always been its watchword. Its big five-cent business was built up with no national advertising. The tobacco market to-day is most difficult. There is the war tax. Labor is scarcer and higher. The firm asserts that it can sell to-day more than it can produce under present manufacturing conditions without advertising. That it is devoting the attention it is to publicity is significant of its confidence in the ultimate value of advertising, not in the light of an immediate sales stimulant, but as the bearer of a message, the investment of driving home a belief to the public which will bear fruit in future sales.

The company is looking forward to advertising increases, but bearing in mind past experience, the inclination is to increase space to larger and more effective calibre in the publications which are being used before taking on new ones. Fire is to be concentrated, not scattered.—Printers Ink.

U. S. Tobacco Imports and Exports

As Shown by the Figures for October

WASHINGTON, January 17.—Official figures pertaining to the tobacco trade for the month of October last show that importations, both of leaf and manufactured tobacco, increased, during the month and during the ten months ending with October, as compared with similar returns for the corresponding month of last year and for the ten months of the two preceding years.

The United States imported during the month of October 285,290 pounds of leaf tobacco suitable for cigar wrappers, at a value of $401,412, as compared with 189,181 pounds, at $198,056 in October of last year. For the ten months there has been a variable showing, evidenced by the fact that in 1915 the returns showed importations during the ten months of 3,600,026 pounds at $4,495,991; in 1916 for the corresponding ten months it was 5,636,681 pounds, at $8,265,228, and during the ten months of 1917 was reported to have amounted to only 5,106,326 pounds, at $6,611,865. As a source of supply during the month the Netherlands has disappeared, the imports from Canada from 7,535 to 3,102 pounds, from Cuba from 11,788 pounds to 7,637 pounds, while from all other countries there was an increase from 12,649 pounds at $1,280 to 274,515 pounds at $380,781.

Under the heading of "All other leaf tobaccos," the importations show a steady increase, both for the month and the ten months. For the month they were reported as amounting to 4,762,451 pounds at $2,179,989, as against 2,090,756 pounds at $1,211,659 in October of last year. For the ten months the imports in 1915 amounted to a total of 27,847,-137 pounds at $12,925,797; in 1916 to 35,902,110 pounds at $15,068,794, and last year to 36,377,-605 pounds at $17,769,949. The importations from Greece continue to increase at a remarkable pace, being reported at 1,246,493 pounds at $1,086,213 and 5,838,396 pounds at $4,048,751 for the month and ten months, respectively, while in 1917 the returns for the month were 86,990 pounds at $41,696, and for the ten months 8,234,744 pounds at a value of $3,765,-878, thus showing a sharp contrast as between the value of the tobacco imported from that source as between the two years. The reports show materially decreased importations from Cuba, the United Kingdom and Mexico.

Cigars and cheroots coming in from the Philippine Islands show an increase for the month from 137,201 pounds at $169,638 to 205,288 pounds at $231,708 and for the ten months from 1,215,566 pounds at $1,484,644 to 2,209,037 pounds at $2,595,197. The imports of cigarettes from the Philippines during the month of October only amounted to 240 pounds at $275, as against 425 pounds at $162 last year, although for the ten months there was an increase from 12,038 pounds at $7,670 to 19,809 pounds at $12,579.

The importations of cigars and cheroots from other sources during the month amounted to 52,883 pounds as against 57,290 pounds in 1917; for the ten months, however, there was an increase from 426,090 pounds at $2,627,259 to 470,855 pounds at $3,015,393. Cigarettes from sources other than the Philippines fell from 327 pounds at $1,581 to 127 pounds at $482 for the month and increased for the ten months from 11,405 pounds at $41,469 to 16,428 pounds at $37,897.

A compilation of the above figures shows that the total of all importations of manufactured tobaccos during the month was $588,261 as compared with $535,179 last year and for the ten months $5,794,307 against $4,281,153 in 1916 and $3,467,238 in 1915.

The export trade shows rather a perplexing condition, with increases in those of manufactured tobacco which, however, fall far short of balancing with the decreases in the unmanufactured exports. In October, 1916, we exported 44,485,124 pounds of unmanufactured leaf at a total value of $6,508,241; this last October the quantity was only 28,769,065 pounds at $4,416,364. For the ten months of 1915 the total unmanufactured leaf tobacco exported was 355,484 pounds at $427,453,852; in 1916 it increased to 427,453,852 pounds at $55,820,895, only to fall during the ten months ending with last October to 199,272,148 pounds at $34,264,-740.

The largest market for unmanufactured leaf during last October was found in France, to which we shipped 9,815,395 pounds at $1,122,-460 as compared with 8,115,879 pounds at $850,541 in October of last year. The second largest shipments were those to Italy with a total of 7,167,524 pounds at $795,680 or nearly a million pounds less than in October of last year when the exportations to that country amounted to 8,120,435 pounds at $846,549. The largest decrease in the exports for the month was shown in the 3,587,157 pounds shipped to the United Kingdom at a total value of $1,028,-514 as compared with a total in October, 1916, of 15,427,884 pounds at $3,087,254.

The other countries showing increases in their importations were Portugal, from 300,200 pounds to 660,565 pounds; Switzerland, from 796,484 to 1,162,735 pounds; Spain, from 744,-671 to 2,990,114 pounds; Canada, from 747,159 to 1,399,631 pounds; Hongkong, from 186,559 to 200,637 pounds; and other countries, from 531,369 to 578,445 pounds. Decreased importations, other than those already referred to were shown for Mexico, from 582,938 to 247,887 pounds; China, from 863,184 to 693,276 pounds; Australia, from 1,332,438 to 174,957 pounds; and British French Africa, from 1,244,-153 to 25,710 pounds. The countries to which we made shipments in October, 1916, and which dropped out in 1917, were Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Japan and French Africa.

The quantity of stems and trimmings exported during the month was 528 pounds at $12 as compared with 1,318,746 pounds at $36,346 last year; for the ten months there was a decrease from 6,321,312 pounds at $197,387 in 1916 to 221,908 pounds at $13,886 last year.

Our exportations of cigarettes continue to increase with China still the leading market. For the month of October we exported to all markets a total of 714,418,000 at $1,218,064 as against 578,496,000 at $1,178,221 in October, 1916. For the ten months of 1915 the quantity exported was 1,706,079,000 at $2,680,502; in 1916 it had increased to 3,270,375,000 at $5,774,987, and still further during the ten months of last year to 5,399,352,000 at $10,252,129.

During the month we exported 6,960,000 to Panama at $19,602; 485,788,000 at $922,871 to China; 55,865,000 at $74,847 to the Straits Settlements; 7,800,000 at $15,125 to Siam, and 158,005,000 to all other markets at $185,619.

Exportations of cigars and cheroots are on the increase. During October of 1916 we exported 159,000 at $4,411, last October the number was reported at 265,000 at $19,602; for the ten months of 1915 the number was 1,383,000 at $23,093; in 1916 it increased to 1,515,000 at $30,667, and last year to 1,956,000 at $46,045.

While the returns for the month of October show an increase in the exportations of plug tobacco from 218,939 to 582,993 pounds and in value from $124,940 to $172,390, the returns for the ten months show a steady decrease. In 1915 the quantity exportd during the ten months was reported at 4,368,965 pounds at $1,295,5 in 1916 it was 4,324,100 pounds at $1,211,5 and during the ten months of last year fell 4,021,522 pounds at $1,146,169. The returns the exports of smoking tobacco show consid able variance, for whereas the exports for month were reported as amounting to 242,9 pounds at $120,686, as compared with o 145,907 pounds at $85,604 in 1916; the retu for the ten months show an increase from 1,73-009 pounds at $909,555 in 1915 to 1,964,2 pounds at $973,804 in 1915 only to fall, ho ever, in 1917 to 1,661,368 pounds at $908,4 or the lowest mark for either of the three yea The same is true of "All other manufactures tobacco," which, for the month show a decre from $21,198, in 1916, to $6,728 last Octob and for the ten months an increase from $28 156 in 1915 to $405,635, only to be followed a decrease to $317,360 last year.

The total value of all exportations of manufactured tobacco during the month of Octob was $5,940,621, as against only $1,414,374 October, 1916. The record for the last thr years shows that in the ten months of 1915 t value was $5,191,853, or less than for the sing month of October last year; in the ten mont of 1916 it had increased to $8,396,688, and f the ten months of 1917 still further to $4 948,804.

Store Courtesy—And Pipe Stems

B. & S. Weiss have a first-class cigar store South Fourth avenue, Mount Vernon, N. They have established their business on t basis that customers must be pleased. A m purchasing five cent's worth of tobacco is e titled to courtesy just the same as the custom buying a $5 box of cigars.

The Weiss Brothers carry a large assortme of pipe stems. Knowing that pipe stems bre occasionally, or wear out from constant use, th feature a line of stems. A smoker grows to li his pipe after "breaking it in." He hates lay an old reliable briar aside because the ste is broken. The two Weisses inform every cu tomer that extra pipe stems can be purchas in their store.

An instance of the profit such a practice m bring occurred the other evening. A man, o of the "hard to please" variety, stepped into t store and expressed a desire to see some pi stems. To be frank, he didn't speak very gentl but B. Weiss, who knows the value of sto courtesy, showed every consideration to t customer—and pleased him. "Now," said t party, "I want a good ten cent cigar. I am a inveterate smoker and I must have a goo cigar."

"You want a good smoke? Did you ever t five cent goods?" B. Weiss inquired.

"No," replied the customer, "I can't stand fi cent cigars. Although my pocketbook calls f them, my taste demands a ten cent smoke."

Weiss manufactures a five cent cigar whic can be recommended. So he asked the man t try two five-centers, free of charge.

"Alright, I'll take them with me and smok them later."

One evening about a week afterward, th customer returned to the store. "I want tw boxes of those smokes," he said, "and furthe more, I have five brothers, all smokers, and the are coming in also."

In a day or two the brothers all had mad their appearance, and Weiss sold every smoke he had in the store.

SHIPPING CONDITIONS

WASHINGTON, January 21.—Reports that reach government officials here relative to the shipping situation are to the effect that the difficulty of obtaining space for commercial cargos to English ports has continued and that unless some further special charters are arranged, little or no space will be available this month or early next month.

Shipping remains difficult to French ports, and preference is being given, it is reported, to cargo which will contribute directly or indirectly to war activities. Steamers are booked full practically as soon as they are announced, the rate apparently not being a matter of the first importance.

Prompt space is obtainable to Italian ports but rates continue very high and conditions to Greece continue about the same. Negotiations are under way for an American steamer to Greek ports, but until they are consummated the conditions of shipping cannot be announced.

Shipping has been temporarily interrupted to Switzerland owing to the lack of steamer space to Marseilles, the port of entry for Swiss goods. It is expected that this situation will change for the better anyhow by early next month. Conditions remain the same to Holland and the Scandinavian countries.

Space is plentiful and rates are on a lower plane to South American than they are across the Atlantic. To the Orient there has been an advance in ocean rates from New York and also from Pacific ports.

DANIELS URGES LARGER NAVY

WASHINGTON, January 22.—Secretary Daniels asked on Monday that legislation doubling the authorized strength of the Navy and increasing the number of naval flyers from 350 to 10,000, be enacted at the present session of Congress.

"Immediate demands make necessary the authorization of a naval strength of 180,000 instead of the 80,000 authorized last May," Secretary Daniels said. "The many demands for navy crews on all kinds of vessels have exceeded the authorized strength and the Navy has been at great disadvantage under the old scale because it could not commission enough officers of the higher grades properly to direct the many ships now being protected by the Navy."

The Secretary asked that the authorized apprentice seamen strength be increased from 6,000 to 24,000.

ADMINISTRATION FOOD CONTROL BILL

WASHINGTON, January 22.—The bill drafted by President Wilson giving him sweeping powers to fix food prices and other products essential to the conduct of the war or for domestic consumption will not be introduced in the House for several days, according to Chairman Lever of the House Agricultural Committee.

The committee has its hands full steering the Agriculture Appropriation bill through the House. The President has indicated in conference with Mr. Lever that he desires speedy action, however, and the measure probably will come before the House as soon as the Agricultural bill is out of the way.

WET TOBACCO ON THE MARKET.

Buyers on many of the loose leaf tobacco floors throughout Kentucky, are complaining of tobacco in bad condition, and consequently prices were shaded on all the markets during the last few days, due to this condition. However, the good tobacco still is in strong demand on all the floors, and daily record prices for counties are broken. Indications are that many growers are holding back their good tobacco, not being willing to handle it during the present inclement weather, which subjects it to danger of freezing. For this reason the good tobacco is being held, and when the weather again becomes normal receipts are expected to increase and contain some of the best leaf grown in the state, which should result in prices above all reached so far this season. The bad conditions of the roads also has worked against any increase in receipts recently, and much of the tobacco that is usually on the floors at this time of the season is still in first hands.

THAT'S THE MAINE IDEA

Solve Labor Problems—Cut Down Passenger Traffic—Put Traveling Salesmen to Work in Offices and Stores

BOSTON, January 21.—Governor Milliken of Maine is reported to have taken up with Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce, wholesale and retail merchants, and traveling men, the advisability of using the services of traveling salesmen in stores and business offices to help solve the labor problem during the winter. Such action would also cut down some passenger traffic. To make it a success, however, co-operation of all states will be necessary, as it would be unfair to prohibit Maine salesmen from traveling and permit men from other states to cover the territory.

ADVANCE ON ADMIRATION "MINIATURES"

Because of increased cost of materials and labor, E. Regensburg & Sons announce an advance in the price of Admiration "Miniature" Little Cigars. The new price is $17 per 1,000 less 2 per cent net F. O. B. New York, and becomes effective February 1. On and after that date Admiration "Miniature" Little Cigars, ten to a package, will be sold to the consumer at twenty cents a package ($2 per 100). The firm extends to its customers the privilege of cancelling any unfilled orders.

WAR SAVINGS

Thrift Stamps and War Savings Stamps are the most democratic of investments and America expects every American to show love of republican institutions by investing in this democratic security. The aggregate amount of the investments and the number of investors in these War Savings securities are in a way the answer of the people of this great Democracy to the call of the cause of democracy throughout the world and the vindication of civilization and humanity.

They afford every person, however humble and however small his means, the opportunity to contribute his part, to do his bit, in this great struggle against the military masters of Germany who seek to dominate the world in contempt of justice and right and freedom and without conscience and without mercy.

Surely every American desires to have a part in the defeat of autocracy and the success of liberty and right.

Items of Interest

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has filed complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission against the practice of the telegraph companies in charging for one word for each figure transmitted over the wires. The company contends that a group of figures should be sent as one word because it takes less time to send a group of three to five figures than does to transmit the average word. It is pointed out in the complaint that the telegraph companies now transmit five figures as one word cablegrams and that there is no real reason why the average every-day message should not be given the same consideration.

Cigar Business Doesn't Descend to Zero

News That Escaped Through Ice and Snow from Chicago

CHICAGO, January 19.—The Chicago Retail Cigar Dealers Association held an important meeting at headquarters, Room 400, at 140 North Dearborn street, January 18. H. Kantor, S. D. Guthman, John A. Webber, E. Rappaport and Harvey L. Harris were chosen to serve on the new executive committee. John L. Webber was elected treasurer and L. Nelson Lewis secretary, succeeding Louis Drele, and E. Rappaport, temporary incumbents, who resigned.

It was planned to hold a big meeting about February 1. Dues of the association were decided on as follows: Active members $5, associate trade members $15 and associate salesmen $5 per annum. The association has engaged T. R. Jones to secure new members. The association is getting stronger each day and much good is being done through its efforts.

F. A. Rian, a popular Chicago cigar man, now represents Simon Batt & Co. in this field.

A recent visitor to our city was C. C. Cloutier, manager of the United Cigar Stores of Minneapolis. He attended a meeting of the different managers while here.

Herman Rieser of J. & B. Moos has returned from a business and pleasure trip to New York.

Thos. W. Short, a well known St. Paul retail dealer, was here on a visit. He had as company Dr. Barnett of Rochester, Minn. Both took in the "snow sights."

C. W. Litsey, the new cigar manager of Franklin McVeagh & Co., is livening things up. They will handle the well known Girard brand of cigars in this market.

Leo Abraham a chain store owner and manufacturer of Milwaukee, gave Chicago the once over. Leo was bound for New York on his yearly visit.

Other visitors here were Hope Martin, of Waterloo, Iowa; Sam Tegner of the San Felice factory and Joe Simon of E. M. Schwarz & Co., New York.

Newmann and Gach, leaf dealers, have returned from a business trip to New York and Connecticut.

R. Steinecke of New York has advised the trade of an advance in the prices of various brands of cigars which have a steady sale here.

C. D. Stroupe has been added to the sales force of Many Blanc & Co. and is boosting Garcia Grande cigars.

Fred Meyer of John H. Meyer & Son, local leaf dealers, has returned to headquarters after making a trip to Havana.

B. Martinez, a manufacturer of clear Havana cigars, has also returned from Havana where he was buying leaf for Flor de Martinez cigars.

The sales force of Best & Russell Co. are working the new Robert Burns laddies, a short smoke packed 10 to a box and selling for 25 cents. They go to the retailer at $20 per thousand.

D. A. Schulte, head of the Schulte chain of stores, dropped in to confer with Manager Joe Feiger.

Herbert Coe, head of the sales force of Melachrino Co., left this week for New York headquarters on important business.

Ed. Ackerman who makes Chicago his home and who represents Pendas & Alvarez, has also gone east to talk things over with the firm.

W. Hass, the Arguelles Lopez & Co. booster, was here looking after Tadeina accounts. He left for points in Michigan after booking some fine orders from the loop dealers.

Friday and Saturday, January 18 and 19, were double certificate days at the United Stores.

On all the windows of the retail stores of Best & Russell Co. are now appearing neat signs calling attention to White Owls at 7 cents and Owls at 6 cents.

Don Frame is busy sampling the loop with Melachrino cigarettes. Don is one of the best cigarette boosters in this part of the country.

Peter Wohl of Wohl & Comstock, a well known local factory, is back from Havana. He was on a buying trip and succeeded in picking up some choice leaf.

C. P. Clark is working the loop strong on the brands of Best & Russell Co. "He is some looper.

Fred Oakes got back this week after his visit to the Key West factory of E. H. Gato & Co. Fred was seen in the Hotel Sherman lobby looking over a handsome menu card of the National Shoe Retailers Association, which held its annual banquet on January 8. They used 4,600 Gatos in the finer sizes and of course Fred got a hurry up order from the hotel people. He was fifty-two hours late getting here from Key West.

Schulte's Saturday special was a 10 per cent cash discount to all consumers on sales of $1 or over and to their clerks a bonus of 5 per cent in cash on the total business done for the day.

Hi Wiltse is no longer manager of the Stock Exchange store of Albert Breitung. He has been succeeded by Wm. White, a very clever chap who knows the business from the bottom up. White has been connected with the sales force at the Hotel Sherman store for several years and the promotion was due him.

C. C. MacDonald has resigned from the retail sales force of Shoemaker & Co. and is now selling Pall Mall cigarettes in Ohio.

Business is very quiet and one notices a lot of kicks as he makes the rounds.

We are looking for Frank Elliott, C. B. Perkins & Co. representative, to visit this market shortly.

F. D. Quinn is the owner of a large up to date drug store on Fifth avenue, La Grange, Ill. He has a large cigar department and features many popular lines.

Leopold & Mergentheim have added a new size in the Antonio and Cleopatra brand of the Havana-American Co. called Petet Duco. They sell at $10 a hundred.

W. D. Fleak, head of the Schinasi Bros. branch of the Tobacco Products Corporation in this field, is expected to return from New York headquarters in a few days. Fleak has a big trade here on Naturals.

M. Friedman, the leaf dealer, has returned from a buying trip to Havana.

The Sunset brand of cigarettes that the Tobacco Products Corporation is going to feature, is sold here by several dealers. They are packed 50 to a box.

W. R. Anderson, cigar buyer for "The Fair," has returned from New York.

Walter Tobin also has returned from his eastern visit and is once more rounding up orders for his many brands.

The store of West Side Wholesale Grocery Co. at 2130 South Kedzie avenue, was destroyed by fire with a loss of $50,000.

It is said that Ed. Wodiska, the president of the Havana Production Co., will visit this market shortly to place Lord Byron, a fine clear Havana line.

Frank Braynard, manager for G. W. Faber, Inc., in Chicago, has returned from New York headquarters. While east, Frank had a real good time even though he found New York short of fuel. He is going to push Muriel stronger than ever this year and is going t see that they go "over the top."

John Morrison, manager of Ryan & Raph ael Cigar Co., is back at his desk again afte a visit to Tampa.

Several salesmen and manufacturers hav been here this month. The following have bee calling on the trade: M. Bustillo and W. W Rosebro of M. EXPERTS DISCUSS ROOT ROT

At the annual meeting of the Franklin and Hampshire Tobacco Growers Association, held on January 10, at Northampton Mass., Prof. Chapman made some interesting remarks about root rot. In his address he said that the excessive use of lime is partly responsible for bad effect on soil. He also told of tobacco experiments made at the fields of Hiram Fairman at North Hadley, Leslie R. Swift at North Hadley, and James McHugh at Hatfield. Excessive use of lime helped produce root rot in 90 per cent. of 122 fields in the valley.

Cover crops, it was brought out, had no effect on root rot. Acid phosphate and humus were employed in various proportions, the results showing the large crops where these elements were large. The usual amount of potash had been used on the assumption that after the war growers would return to the former proportions. Soil moisture stimulates root rot and should be reduced by drainage whenever possible. Low temperature, another cause of root rot, appears to be beyond control.

The evidence concerning cover crops for humus strongly favor timothy. Experiments are being conducted to determine the effect of acids on root rot, and there are practical methods by use of sulphuric acid. Efforts are being made to discover whether roots excrete a poison that is injurious to the next crop. Sterilization of seed by steam is desirable for the prevention of weeds and root rot, and the heat of the lowest point of sterilization should be sufficient to cook a potato.

Following Prof. Chapman, H. M. Rose said that his experiences with root rot had been so varied that he was not particular whether beds were sterilized or not. He emphasized the necessity of good seed and deep plowing in old fields. He favored shallow cultivation, and spoke for thorough drying after the tobacco is in the sheds, telling how he had kept as many as eight fires in one section. For the sake of color the sun should be kept out of the sheds, and when the sheds are opened, they should be opened on the shady side. The present lack of potash seemed to him a boon for many fields, which had not done so well in recent years, as since potash had become scarce. The stalks, harrowed in at the arrival of spring, give a considerable amount of potash. After a time, however, it may be necessary to improve the element of potash. But time alone will answer this question.

Fifteen Workmen Drowned Near Tampa

Death Rode on Two Overloaded Small Boats in the Estuary—Unavailing Attempts to Save the Wrecked Steamer Olivette—Bond Issue Validated—"Naval Base Committee" Goes to Washington—Cigar Manufacturers Report Business Better Than Expected

TAMPA, January 19.—Manufacturers and dealers in clear Havanas who have made trips to and from Cuba in past years experienced a pang of regret late this week when it became known that there was no chance to save the Peninsular & Occidental steamship, Olivette, which was driven ashore near Havana several days ago. After the crew and 75 passengers had been taken from the vessel, every possible effort was made to save the steamer, but the jagged rocks, which cut an immense hole in the hull, made all attempts futile. The Olivette has been plying between Port Tampa, Key West, and Havana since 1887, and it is probable that no boat in the world has carried a larger quantity of fine tobaccos or an equal number of men interested in the clear Havana trade.

The absorbing topic of discussion among people of all classes during the week was the drowning of fifteen employees of the Tampa Shipbuilding and Engineering Co. which is building steel ships for the Government, in the estuary at the eastern boundary of the city. The sinking of two skiffs, used in transporting the men to and from their work, caused the drownings, which are expectetd to result in suits amounting to $200,000. A storm of protest has also arisen because of the delay of the company in building these ships, and complaint is made particularly against Ernest Kreher, a man of German birth and sympathies, who is president and general manager of the company. Representatives of the Department of Justice have been investigating the delay in all phases for some time, it is said.

Tampans are now centering their efforts upon securing the proposed Gulf naval base, for which the city is expected to receive a favorable report from Admiral Helm and other members of the Naval Base Commission. Replacing another committee that has been working on this proposition in Washington for some time, Mayor D. B. McKay, former Congressman S. M. Sparkman and T. Ed. Bryan left for the Capital to-night.

The recently authorized good roads bond issue of $875,000 was validated by Circuit Judge F. M. Robles this week, and sale of the bonds, at a good price, is expected within a short time. When the work for which these bonds were issued is completed, Hillsborough County will have the finest road system in the South.

Suave "Dave Silverstein's" Diamond Rings

Glittered More Conspicuously Than Tear Drops on the Cheeks of a Heroine in a Moving Picture—Presto a Trick of Substitution—Resultant Sorrow for Sam Walvick and His Brother-in-law—Enforced Conservation of Coal Causes Philadelphia Smokers to Appreciate Cigars—The Lid on Partagas and Henry Clay

PHILADELPHIA, January 21.—From one million nine hundred and some odd thousand parched and cracking throats in this neck of the woods, at this writing the cry is going up tonight "Kipling knew something." Owners of said throats are referring to the remarks of the Kipling gentleman about the fragrant weed, but instead of confining their longing to the few choice brands that Rudyard advertised, such as the Laranga, they are yowling for tobacco in each, every and all forms. And the sad thing is that they're not getting it.

On Sunday night one or two saloons opened up at midnight, selling shocks by candle light. One in the heart of the city took in a young but sturdy fortune by 10 o'clock Monday morning. At that hour a minion of the law descended upon the place with a "request" from the State Fuel Administrator that the place be closed. Accompanying this was a notice that the place be reported to the License Court if not closed. So it closed.

By 1 o'clock Monday afternoon it was impossible to get a smoke in a saloon because the saloons were closed. And by four o'clock the last of the United Stores had succumbed to the power of Old Doc Garfield and they, too, were shut up tight. One enterprising United man said he was going to sell by candlelight, but he changed his mind on orders from the front. Hotel stands and even the small outlying storekeepers stopped selling by 6 o'clock.

Philadelphia has never had the lid on tight. It is always possible for one who knows the method to get drinks on Sunday in this city, although the saloons are closed. But on the first coal-less Monday even the "private joints" were closed tighter than the proverbial drum. Those who failed to buy enough smokes to tide them over were begging them in the streets from friends and strangers alike.

The net result of this so far as Philadelphia is concerned was to take tobacco forever out of the "luxury" class. Even the habitual smoker is inclined to look upon his smoke as something that is not a necessity until he runs out of them and can't get any more. That happened in Philadelphia on Monday, and the howl must have been heard at Berlin.

It was a good thing some tobacco dealers had a day off, however, or they wouldn't have had time to wait on their customers for laughing at what happened to Sam Walvick. He runs a cigar store at 235 North Eighth street. By diligent attention to business and unfailing courtesy, Sam amassed a fair young fortune of $1,200, and put it in a cigar box or a shoe or something in the rear room.

But wait—this is not a burglary. About two months ago a polished gentleman entered the store and bought a large bundle of cigars, negligently resting his right hand upon the show case. Upon the fingers of said hand were several rings with sparklers in them that gave Sam palpitation of the heart. A few days later the gentleman returned and the same thing happened. Sam remarked something about the beauty of the rings. But it was not until the fourth visit, when Sam was openly admiring the stones, that the stranger took any notice. He told Sam his name was David Silverstein, and on the fifth visit asked him if he knew anybody in the market for four fine diamond rings.

"I don't want your rings," said Sam. "I have no money to buy them. How much are they?"

"Well," said the polished gentleman, "they are worth about $4,000 now, but they will advance in value. However, I'll sacrifice them to a decent fellow. I'll let you have them at your own price, providing it's reasonable."

Sam had the rings appraised and found they were worth $3,500. Then he offered the stranger $2,400, and David accepted the offer. So Sam went into the back room and got $1,200, and then went in next door where his brother-in-law runs a quick lunch cafe, and got an additional $1,200, and his brother-in-law.

Just as the money was about to be passed over, Silverstein handed Sam an envelope and asked that the bills be put into it. "It don't do to be seen with too much money in this neighborhood," he said. Sam put the money in the envelope and handed it to David. As David was putting it in his pocket he asked how much was in it. "About $2,375," said Sam. "What?" shouted Silverstein, "didn't we agree on $2,400?" "Oh," said Sam, "what's $25 between friends. It's only the price of a few drinks."

The Silverstein gentleman, however, got deeply annoyed and shouted at the top of his voice. He pulled the envelope out of his fur coat pocket and slammed it down on the show case. "Come across with those rings," said he. "You can't treat me that way." Sam and his brother-in-law tried to soothe him, but he wouldn't be soothed. So Sam gave back the rings and Silverstein went away from there. And then Sam's brother-in-law opened the envelope and found in it a nice collection of blank paper, cut the size of bills.

The police have Silverstein's description and Silverstein has Walvick's kale, also that of his brother-in-law.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., January 18.—Another week of storms, zero weather and snow blockades has interfered greatly with all tobacco movements, either upon the farms where stripping is held up or with marketing the crop. The country roads are so badly blocked with drifts and the railroads so handicapped in the movements of freight, that only a moderate amount of receiving has been attempted. Should the car shortage continue it seems the delivery of the crop at outside points will be attended with a great deal of difficulty throughout the season, for dealers can hardly depend on having cars in readiness at such points for delivery dates and storage at few interior stations is available. It is probable, therefore, that receiving may string along until spring and warehouses may be compelled to frequently shut down in consequence. The P. Lorillard Co. made its first receiving here Tuesday, and both Eisenlohr and Cullman received during the week. The Eisenlohr firm will be the first to open their warehouse in this market on Monday next and others will start shortly if sufficient stock can be secured in advance.

All shipments out of storage are still held up by embargo on Eastern freight. Orders for more than 100 cars to manufacturing points are waiting better shipping facilities and some factories are likely to be caught short of stock before these goods can be forwarded.

Capt. L. W. Persons, representing the American Cigar Co. at Sparta, was a visitor in this market Tuesday.

William M. Chalmers, of the Toledo branch of the Liggett & Meyers Tobacco Co., was a visitor in this State during the week.

Carrier & Pepper opened their warehouse at Footville on Monday for the handling of the 1917 crop.

The Eisenlohr warehouse will open its doors for the usual packing force Monday. Manager Ellingson thinks he has sufficient stock on hand now for a continuous run through the season.—Edgerton Reporter.

HELPING THE JOBBER

The Policy of S. Monday & Sons—Bills Payable When Goods Are Received and Cash Discount Allowed.

Because of difficulties and delays encountered in securing the delivery of freight shipments, S. Monday & Sons announce to the trade the adoption of a policy as follows:

"Bills can be paid on receipt of goods and cash discount will be allowed.

"If goods do not arrive in reasonable time notify us and we will have goods traced, or claim made to railroad.

"If cases are tampered with in transit, and goods stolen, send us the freight bill with notation from the railroad on the back just what goods were stolen, and we will take care of the claim, and credit will be issued to you immediately.

"Railroads have a habit of holding up freight claims indefinitely.

"We believe it is up to the manufacturer to stand part of the high cost of doing business, and we do not see why a jobber should pay for goods before they arrive. Paying for goods before they arrive means that the jobber's profit is reduced. We will always try to do our bit in helping the jobber."

AMERICAN CORPORATIONS IN NEUTRAL COUNTRIES.

The War Trade Board has authorized branches of American corporations and other American houses established and engaged in business in neutral countries and in countries associated with the United States in the war to accept and pay drafts, to deliver goods, warehoused or otherwise stored, and to perform other similar acts, notwithstanding such acts may involve trading with "enemies" or "allies of enemies," when such acts are necessary to prevent a breach or violation of a law or commercial obligation enforcible in the courts of the country in which such branch is established; provided, however, (1) That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to authorize said corporations, houses or their branches, to hereafter undertake or enter into contracts or business or commercial transactions which will involve trading with "enemies" or "enemy allies" in order to carry out or perform the same; and

(2) That every case involving transactions of trading with the "enemy" or "enemy allies" be reported to the War Trade Board within thirty (30) days after the occurrence thereof, upon a form to be furnished by the War Trade Board.

Twenty-five men are on strike at the Leo Abrams Cigar Co. shop, 376 East Water street, Milwaukee, heretofore a union label shop. The strike, which was virtually a lockout, has been on since January 7 and is said to have resulted from the determination of the owners to introduce the "team work" system. The firm built up its trade with the union label, its product, the M. A. C. Cigar and the Don Corello being in demand. By strikers it was stated that the trouble was really with Charles Fernandez, who a while ago bought his way into the Abrams Co. While Abrams was in entire control of the shop there was harmony with the union and he is said to have favored fair wages. Fernandez' brother is connected with the Mi Carmen factory which was the center of a recent strike.

EL ROI-TAN

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

Congratulations Extended in San Francisco

Because of Satisfactory Business Done in 1917—Also Because of Bright Prospects for the Present Year—Receiving Cigar Shipments More Quickly—Business Changes Reported—Optimism in the Rural Districts

San Francisco, January 16.—The cigar dealers of this city have had an opportunity to size up the sales of the past year and the prospects for 1918, and there is no pessimism among them over either year. The distributors unite in saying that the sales of last year exceeded those of the year before, and the retailers also are well satisfied, especially with the results of their holiday trade. The Retail Dealers' Association held a meeting last week to discuss the general situation and the meeting turned into a mutual congratulation society. Every one present seemed well pleased and nearly all were confident that the public was not "bucking" seriously at the increased cost of smoking. The dealers who had gone extensively into the Manila trade were perhaps the noisest in their satisfaction over the outlook, but those who remained true to the old brands were equally in earnest in their expressions of confidence. News has reached the dealers that some of the old-established brands are to be made in different shapes at the old prices—not the five cent brands but the "tenfers" which had been increased to two for a quarter. This news was greeted with a good deal of praise as many customers are disinclined to change their brand and at the same time dislike to pay more for a smoke. Samples of the new shapes have not yet been received here, but they are being eagerly awaited.

Since the Government took over the railroads freight seems to be moving more rapidly, according to H. L. Judell, who received a shipment of cigars from New York recently which had been on the way only 20 days. This is the best time for a freight shipment of cigars in over six months.

Horn & Co. report that the new year's business is opening up in excellent style. All the products of Sam I. Davis & Co., especially the El Sidelo, clear Havana, are showing gratifying sales, much larger that the same period of last year. The other distributors say that business is coming in in good style considering the time of the year, and this is accounted for by the fact that the State has had recent rains of a general distribution which has put the farming communities in the best of humor.

The opening gun in the campaign for the popularization of the Six Cent Cigar was fired in a full-page advertisement in the Bulletin on the afternoon of January 16. The advertisement is especially for the Tom Keene cigar, and is under the caption: "Why 6c.?" H. L. Judell & Co.'s name appears at the bottom as distributor.

Horn & Co. report that the "1886" cigar of Sam I. Davis & Co. is meeting with a liberal support from the dealers all over the State.

Dean Lyon, representing E. P. Cordero & Co., selling the Mi Hogar brand of clear Havana, is in the local field visiting the dealers of the city, and reports that he is doing exceedingly well.

Emil Judell, of Judell & Co., visited Camp Fremont this week and is landing some very satisfactory orders, especially for the Fighting Bob cigar.

A committee of 1,000 citizens is meeting at a banquet at the Commercial Club to-night to take steps for the inauguration of the campaign for the Third Liberty Loan. A small box of In-B-Tween cigars will be presented to each man present, and Tom Moores will be served during the evening.

Frankel, Gertis & Co. report that business with them is usually quiet at this time of the year, but they are busy making stock for the demand which they expect to develop in about a month's time. Last year's business was far better than that of the previous year.

Bert Moser, at 98 Market street, has sold his cigar stand to J. C. Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton formerly conducted a stand at 193 Eddy street but he sold it to B. S. Arnold when he had the chance to buy the Moser place.

Mrs. B. Rothfuss, formerly of the Fielding Hotel cigar stand, has sold the place to D. W. Nix. Mrs. Rothfuss has opened a store at Menlo Park and expects to get a large trade from the soldiers at Camp Fremont.

Fred. Misky and his brother Barney have agreed to disagree over their cigar business. The case is now in the Superior Court in an effort to bring about an equitable dissolution of partnership.

J. F. Eppstein has just returned from New York and is preparing to launch an extensive campaign of advertisement for the Natural cigarette.

Mannie Hull, of the General Cigar Co., is preparing an extensive advertising campaign on the Tom Moore and Tom Keene cigars.

The new Gunst list issued last week lists the Owls at $43 for 100 packing and 25 in tins, $44 for pocket packing 100s and $45 for 25s in wood. White Owls are $49 for 50s and $51.50 for 25s. The Owl and White Owl are retailing at 6 cents and 7 cents, respectively.

An Agent's Authority Unverified

One Small Slip-up That Destroyed a Business

(Copyrighted, 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

A retail merchant whom I know is in a bad i to-day because he acted as his own lawyer a matter which seemed so simple that he bught he could attend to it himself. It is a pical case of what may happen to a layman o does his own law business, for it illustrates fact that the holes in business transactions rough which business men lose money are t to be so deeply hidden to the lay mind that y don't appear to be in the transaction at all. About five years ago this merchant got a nce to rent a store in a certain neighborhood, ich he got a quiet tip was shortly to become atly improved because of a change in the lley lines. He took over the store under a e-year lease. He did not deal with the owner ect, but through an agent who had charge all the owner's property. The owner is the ate of a wealthy deceased woman and has not been divided.

The retailer realized that if his information out the new trolley service proved correct, location would soon become most valuable. therefore protected himself, as he thought, having the agent insert in the lease an option buy the property at any time within five years so much money. The price agreed upon s a fair price if no trolley service came, but ow price if it did come.

The lessee moved in and began to establish business. He worked along with it for out nine months, and got it fairly on its feet. en the new trolley service came along, bring- several times as many people to the neigh- rhood, and business immediately took on the pearance of a boom. Within a month the re was doing 25 per cent more business, and in a year it had doubled. Naturally real estate values went up accordingly.

The merchant decided to buy his property, but thought there was no hurry to exercise his option, because it was good any time within five years. So he waited until his lease was about to expire and then gave notice to the agent that he proposed to exercise his option to buy. Accompanying the notice was a check for the first payment agreed upon.

At this time this was an exceedingly valuable location, business was splendid and constantly increasing.

The agent did not reply for a few days, and then he returned the check with a note stating that the owner refused to recognize the option on the ground that he, the agent, had had no authority to make it. A lawyer would at once recognize the importance of this point, but a layman might not, and the lessee, thinking it a mere bluff, did not worry over it. He called on the agent and soon became convinced that he would have to fight for his option. He then consulted a lawyer and was told that the case rested on a question of fact, viz.: Had the owners of the property at the time the lease was signed, given the agent the authority to sell the real estate, make a contract to sell it, or grant an option on it? If they had, the option was good; if not, it was bad.

Let me emphasize here the great importance of the situation to this merchant. The value of the real estate was 33 1-3 per cent more by reason of the trolley improvement than the price named in his option. But worse than this, the owners refused to sell it at all, believing that in a year or two it would be worth more. The neighborhood had become such a good one for business that there was not a store in it for rent anywhere except one small place that wouldn't have been one-tenth large enough. Also, a large part of his business was transient, and the agent had followed the return of the check with notice to vacate at the end of the term. Not pay more rent, which might have been arranged, but get out. A rather terrifying combination of circumstances, wasn't it?

Suit was brought to enforce the option and the case was hurried to a trial. Both the agent and all the owners swore that the former had no authority to give any option on the real estate, his power being confined to leasing only. Of course, the tenant had no evidence against this, and the judge told the jury that if they believed the testimony of the witnesses who said the agent had no power to give an option, they should find a verdict that the option was of no validity. And that is what they did, for there was no alternative.

Hard luck, you say, so it was, in a sense, though more accurately it was the result of his own negligence. It is fundamental that an agent in charge of real estate cannot give a binding option to sell it unless he has express authority to do so, and usually that authority must be in writing and under seal. This is from a leading case on the subject:

> Authority to an agent to manage, control and lease property does not authorize an attorney in fact or an agent to sell and transfer the property.
> Authority to sell land does not imply authority to rent it and authority to rent it does not imply authority to sell it.
> Authority to superintend real estate and lease it for more than one year does not include authority to lease real estate with the privilege of purchasing any part of it during the continuance of the lease.

In other words, before an agent can bind the owner of real estate in giving an option to a tenant to purchase, the owner must have explicitly empowered the agent, in writing, to do that very thing. The merchant in the case I have reported should have satisfied himself that the agent had this power before he took his option. And he should not have taken the agent's word that he had the power, either.

Genuine Imported Zig Zag Cigarette Papers Made By Braunstein Freres Cannot Be Successfully Imitated

Attempts at substitution should be resented by those who prefer a pure paper of the highest quality.

Zig Zag Cigarette Papers are so thin that they do not taint the flavor of the tobacco. They are gummed, creased and convenient to roll.

The neat Zig Zag package protects the papers perfectly from dirt, dust and damage. It ingeniously permits but one paper to be withdrawn at a time and instantly delivers that paper to your fingers.

Zig Zag 147 Wheat Straw
Zig Zag 144 Rice Paper

Both retail at eight cents per package of 120 leaves.

They pay a handsome profit to the dealer.

Avoid counterfeits of Zig Zags. Old style books of cigarette papers fall apart, are hard to handle and are obsolete.

Reports from East Hartford, Conn., are to the effect that there are but a few scattered crops unsold. Damaged tobacco is in big demand despite its inferior quality. Hail-cut and that nipped by frost is commanding prices equal to the best variety obtained only a few years ago. Keiser & Boasberg, Buffalo, have purchased the 1917 crop of James Bradley of Ellington street at a price characterized as "extremely good." John Hartnett of South Windsor is said to have sold his crop to Eugene Kohlberg of New York. The reported price is 48 cents assorted.

The association plans to re-submit the anti-Coupon Bill to the California Legislature. It once passed both houses by a substantial majority, but was vetoed by Governor Stephens.

Concerning trade conditions, the Reading, Pa., Eagle says: "The business of cigar manufacturers in this locality at present is below normal. Most of the factories are heavily stocked up. This fact coming so soon after the holidays is not regarded by manufacturers as beneficial. In other words, the supply is ahead of the demand, just the reverse of what affected the business not so long ago. A number of factories in this section at present are not running on full schedule. Manufacturers are also concerned over the costs of materials. Certain grades of Lancaster county leaf tobacco, of which there is a scarcity, have jumped to 50 cents a pound. Not long ago the same could be bought in almost any desired quantities at 18 and 20 cents a pound.

One of the effects of prohibition in Canada has been the deflection of soft drinks, cigar and tobacco buying toward the local grocery stores. Quite a thriving business in these lines has been developed in the groceries in both Western and Eastern Canada. This has in a great measure been due to the advertising directed at the grocers by the soft drink and tobacco companies.—Printers Ink.

Speaking of the notable increase of sales on the 18-60 brand, in recent months, S. Monday & Sons say: "When a piece of goods sells and duplicates there must be a reason. One reason for the popularity of 18-60 is that in selling it, jobber and retailer makes a profit. Another reason for the increase is associated with the shortage of cheap cigars, that is, cigars which formerly sold 2 for 5 cents. Cigars of this class cannot be had any longer,, and it is easier for a retailer to hand out a package of goods on which there is no breakage or waste."

Joe Rinaldo, besides reporting a continued increase in the Palo sales, advises that they will continue the 6-inch Aristocrat as a bit size and have added two new ten-cent straight shapes, viz.: Palmas and Bachelors. Gene Stoltz, the Coast agent, will be East till February. Joe has also taken on the Glad, a new hand-made six-cent brand of the C. & M. Cigar Mfg. Co., Philadelphia. It sells in two sizes, the Londres and the Invincible. The price is $43 per M. less 2 per cent., and in 500 lots 3 per cent. and 1,000 lots 5 per cent.—San Francisco Grocer.

The hint that the United Cigar Stores Co. would be glad to reward handsomely a suggestion that would protect store windows from sweating and frosting in winter brought in scores of letters. Most of them suggested ventilation of the windows by making openings in the frame work or by the use of fans. Unfortunately nothing was suggested that has not been tried out without success. In certain cases ventilation will serve, but it cannot be relied on as a cure for frosting. We have always thought the problem would be solved by the discovery of a chemical wash for the windows that would keep the glass clear.—United Shield.

Thieves entered the J. M. Doran & Co. cigar store on East Mill street, Akron, O., Friday night, and took $500 worth of cigars. Entrance was gained by cutting the screen in a rear door and then breaking the glass. Howard Clementz passed the store about 10 o'clock and noticed the door leading to the stock room open and investigated. He reported the theft to the police.

LESS SMOKING IN PARIS.

From "Somewhere in France" a correspondent writes, stating that the tobacco shortage has developed a class of humorists among the shopkeepers of Paris, the last place where such a rare plant would be expected to thrive There are some disgruntled smokers, however, who indignantly insist it is not humor but fiendish ingenuity intended to increase the tortures of men who want cigarettes and pipe tobacco of any kind and can get nothing. For years these men abused the French tobacco to the shopkeepers and the latter are now enjoying hearing these same men begging for the one-time despised smokes.

"Any French cigarettes?" the victim asks.

"Any English or American?"

"No—all gone."

"Got any kind of pipe tobacco?"

"No—had none for two days."

Then as the sufferer pauses the shopkeeper says:

"Not any kind of pipe tobacco either. French or Havana. This is the war. It changes all things. Perhaps more will smoke cigars as the result of the war, who can tell?"

As he talked the shopkeeper was dusting cigar holders, pipes, match boxes, cigarette cases, all the things a smoker uses when he can smoke.

"I will put these in the window," he said, "in place of the tobacco and cigarettes of which I have no more. These cases are bargains now, as the price of leather has gone up since I got them. Perhaps when my customers can't buy tobacco or cigarettes they will buy a pipe or a cigarette case."

RETAIL PRICES IN LOUISVILLE.

Robt. J. Frick, of the Kentucky Druggist, made a trip around certain parts of the city of Louisville in an effort to learn what cigar stores, hotel cigar stands and drug stores were charging for tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes. He found that the prevailing prices were in keeping with the advanced costs caused by the war and that these advanced costs were placed on the consumer.

MOTOR TRUCK TRANSPORTATION.

It is no longer a question as to whether transportation of freight by motor truck is possible, practical, or profitable, nor is there any question about the advisability of extending this form of transportation. Actual operation over many routes has completely demonstrated its success. The only practical method of meeting the national obligation to produce is by extending delivery and the practical method of extending delivery is to use more motor trucks in the service.

Manufacturers, jobbers and transportation companies are right now maintaining regular service by motor truck—both outgoing and incoming—between points distant from 20 to 1,000 miles, in some cases further. For example: There is a daily service out of Boston for Lawrence and a number of other New England points. Regular lines of trucks ply between Boston and New York, taking in the towns en route, even running to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and Akron, Ohio. From New York deliveries of goods are being made to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and many points in New Jersey and New York States. Philadelphia is the starting point of delivery service by motor truck to Bethlehem, Allentown, Lancaster, Reading and many other Pennsylvania cities. Chicago has routes to Elkhart, Gary, and Rockford, while from Cleveland trucks carry freight to Canton, Akron, Elyria, Painesville, Lorain, Kent, Ravenna, Norwalk and Sandusky. At the present time there is being projected a through service from Chicago to Buffalo, Rochester, New York, Boston and other eastern points.

Apparently there is no limit to the variety of articles being transported, among them being iron, steel, coal, ore, lumber, chemicals, rubber goods, building materials, mine supplies, machinery, cheap metal goods, fabrics, corsets, straw hats, earthenware, dyes, wrapping paper, silks, wholesale groceries, farm products, and a large tonnage of raw materials, parts and finished goods for war industries.

The question, "Does it pay to deliver by motor truck?" naturally is an important one, as is also the items of time saving and length of service of the truck. On the question of economy all of these have an important bearing. Several large concerns, one in Philadelphia, have found it a profitable proposition to maintain a 12-hour service to New York, handling 400 tons of freight in either direction daily. Another concern is making money by operating a fleet of 12 5-ton trucks over a wide area, transporting war materials to a large extent. Aside from the actual monetary advantage derived, the item of time saving must be considered, as there never was a time in the history of the country when time was more valuable than now. It would seem logical to say that motor-truck transportation, moving goods both day and night, avoiding delays, loss, damage, and extra labor expense at terminals in loading and unloading, would save time.

The life of a truck depends largely upon the condition of the roads over which it is to be operated. The Council of National Defense appreciates the importance of good roads and has formed a highways transport committee, of which Roy Chapin is the head, for the purpose of impressing upon the various communities the necessity for improving roads. A great deal has already been accomplished, and in many States work is actively in progress for the widening and paving of highways, strengthening of bridges, and other necessary steps of preparedness.

With the increased use of motor trucks there has come a scarcity of experienced truck drivers, making it necessary for owners to give considerable study to the subject of increasing the efficiency of present drivers. "If drivers have to face the snow and wind they become chilled, wet, and thoroughly uncomfortable," says one operator, "and it is human nature for them to think of getting to cover as soon as possible. This doesn't make for efficiency, and operators should try to make their men more comfortable by adopting the closed type of cab on their trucks."

SO BIG BUSINESS GROWS

The Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. has increased its capital from $1,500,000 to $6,000,000. Added to the company's prestige also is success achieved in recent big operations in Russia and Greece. Demonstrated ability to bring great quantities of Turkish tobacco to this country is making the "Standard Commercial" a leader.

WORKING ON "VELVET"

Washington, January 28 — A Cuban firm, appreciative of the popularity of Velvet tobacco, but not entirely regardful of the rights of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., is trying to get a trade mark on "Velvet" tobacco in Cuba. The trade mark is very similar to that which identifies the famous brand in this country. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has taken cognizance of the Cuban firm's attempt to appropriate "Velvet Joe."

Under a resolution introduced by Mr. Rogers, of Massachusettes, which it adopted Tuesday, the House of Representatives has instructed Postmaster General Burleson to report upon the causes of delay in the transmission of mail to American soldiers in France and of soldiers' mail to home folks.

TOBACCO PRODUCTS ACQUIRES THE FALK TOBACCO CO.

Acquiring the Falk Tobacco Co., Saturday, the Tobacco Products Corporation made a most important and advantageous deal. The price that was paid ($1,500,000 it is said) does not signify all that was secured in the transaction. For there are some things that money can not buy. The Falk Tobacco Co. was progressive and prosperous; it had a reputation to be proud of, its brands were popular, far and wide; it had an efficient organization; it had paved the way for greater development. Which expansion would fit particularly well with "Tobacco Products" plans for the future.

Though the acquisition was made outright, for cash and preferred stock in the Tobacco Products Corporation, the Falk Tobacco Co. will not lose its identity in a merger with "Tobacco Products." It will be a subsidiary but it will retain its organization.

The new officers of the Falk Tobacco Co. are: Albert Falk, president; J. L. Hoffman, vice-president; F. M. Collier, vice-president; J. Seelinger, treasurer and T. N. Word, secretary. The entire sales force, office staff and supervisors of factory work will continue, as formerly.

The Falk Tobacco Co. will continue to manufacture all its brands. It will keep on making more than 500 smoking mixtures. And, just as zealously as of yore, it will strive to maintain high quality.

Association with "Tobacco Products" will facilitate factory expansion. In Richmond, the Tobacco Products Corporation plans to have perhaps the greatest cigarette and tobacco manufactory in the world.

The Falk Tobacco Co. utilizes tobacco from every country, state and district where good tobacco is grown. In the stocks of raw material procured by the Falk Tobacco Co., the various tobaccos represent Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Connecticut, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Sumatra, Java, Paraguay, Brazil, Venezuela, Columbia, Mexico, Santo Domingo, Russia and, last but not least, the districts of Greece, Bulgaria and the Ottoman Empire from which comes the tobacco most commonly known as Turkish.

Of "Turkish," there are about 20 varieties, each of which has some recommendation.

While such importations were possible, the Falk Tobacco Co. was a most conspicuous importer of Latakia, tobacco produced in Syria and much prized for blending purposes. Of Latakia, the Falk holdings were the largest in the United States. Importuned to sell, the Falk Tobacco Co. preferred to reserve its stock of Latakia here.

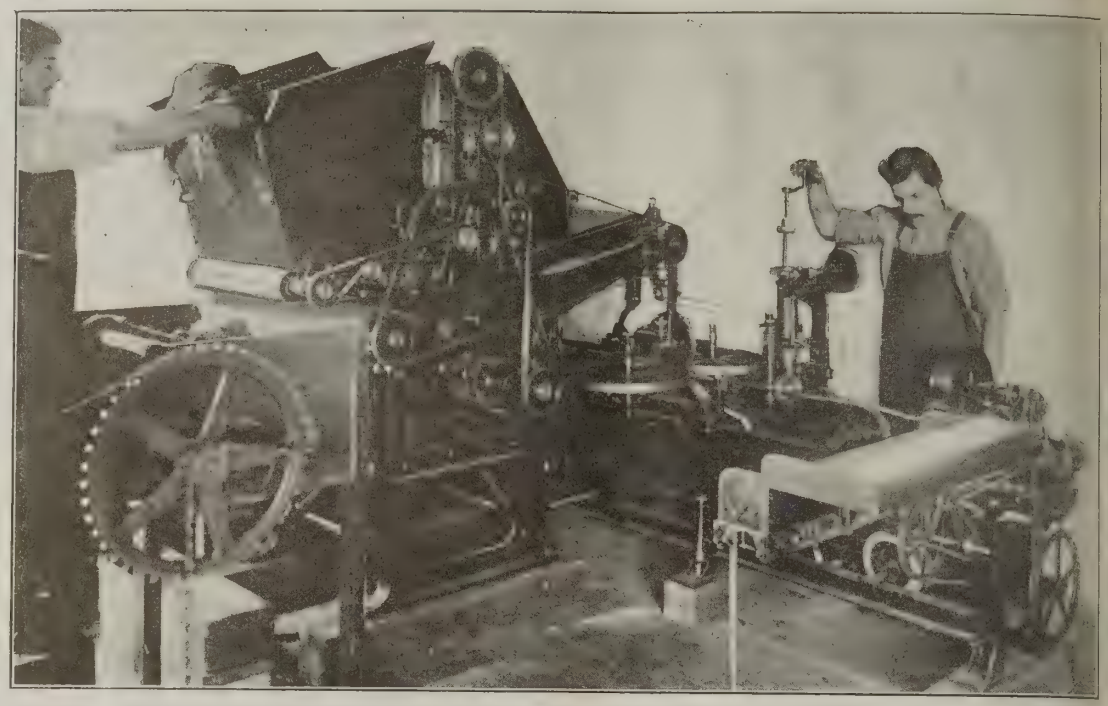
What some might call an excessive supply of Latakia was but one example of the preparedness and thoroughness of the Falk Tobacco Co.

Established in 1903, by M. Falk, a man most expert and experienced in manufacturing smoking tobacco and cigarettes, the Falk Tobacco Co. ever since has been devoted to the idea of upholding quality. Also it featured originality. It identified itself with high-grade goods. If it put a brand on the market, it wouldn't allow that brand to deterioriate. Never tempted to use cheaper material or a less expensive process, when a product becomes popular, the company maintains standards adopted. The increased price of tobacco will not cause a formula for a Falk smoking mixture, offered to the public, to be changed in the least.

A product must abide by its own merit. Each brand, however, approved in the past, to continue, must retain the excellence that previously characterized it.

To secure desired results, judicious selection of expensive material, to be used in manufacturing, is not enough. Nor may competent workmen perform to best advantage with poor or inadequate equipment. The factories of the Falk Tobacco Co. in Richmond represent much planning. They show careful thought and liberal expenditure to obtain desirable conditions as well as the latest machinery.

At the corner of Franklin and 22nd streets occupying more than half a block, the four story brick structures of the Falk Tobacco Co. are models of cleanliness and sanitation. The working conditions are entirely favorable. The scrupulous neatness, the atmosphere of "respectability and comfort," perhaps is the first thing that appeals to the visitor. The attitude of the employees is an important thing to observe in any industrial institution.



F. M. Collier, the director of manufactures is a most capable man, a Virginian by birth and associated with the tobacco industry since boyhood. A protege, pupil and friend of M. Falk, long before the Falk Tobacco Co. was organized, Mr. Collier has been with the business, since its inception, and he has reason to be proud of the factories, the work of which he directs.

Of the company's output of smoking tobaccos, Herbert Tareyton London Smoking Mixture is a brand of the highest grade.

Other mixtures having wide spread popularity are Personal Pipe Mixture, Vaporia Falk's American, Vintage Blend, Serene, Manhattan Cocktail Modern Cut, London Sherbet and Snap Shots, crushed Burley plug.

Each year, the greater vogue of Herbert Tareyton London cigarettes has been acknowledged. But the growth of favor accorded this brand is more remarkable now than ever before. The increase of Herbert Tareyton cigarette sales, month by month, tells a convincing story. "There's something about them you'll like" is an assurance that appeals to smokers of cigarettes. London Sports and Champagne Cocktail are other favored brands of cigarettes manufactured by the Falk Tobacco Co.

Though henceforth identified as a subsidiary of Tobacco Products, the Falk Tobacco Co won't be forgotten.

HIRSCHHORN EXPLAINS

Cigar prices, which, during the first three years of war conditions practically withstood the increasing pressure of manufacturing costs, are now taking the same upward trend in prices as shoes, clothes, collars, candies and practically every other commodity of daily use.

With former 5c. brands now selling at 6c.; three for 25c. brands of established merit now at 10c. straight, and well-known 10c. straight brands now two for 25c., men who smoke are naturally asking "Why?"

"The whole business structure is tightly welded together," said Mr. Fred. Hirschhorn, president of the Cigar Manufacturers Association of America.

"You cannot separate one industry from the rest and say it shall be governed by different economic conditions. If there comes a wave of advance in wages paid to labor, that wave will reach every industry. Such a wave means that the industrial world has less labor than it needs and therefore the cost of labor is higher.

"When the railroads are permitted to advance their freight rates to meet their increased costs of operation, that means that all manufacturers shipping goods by rail, have an increased freight cost to meet.

"When the government levies taxes on business in order to pay for the cost of the war, that means that every field of business must bear its share.

"These general conditions which no field of business can escape, have confronted the cigar industry as they have every other, and so, throughout the business of every manufacturer, will be found increased costs, ranging from 25 to 150 per cent. The cigar manufacturer, like the shoe manufacturer and the food producers, can only meet these costs by getting a higher price for the article he produces."

Insanity and death overtook two missing embers of the band of Germans who plotted destroy food and munitions ships leaving merican ports, it was disclosed last week, testimony at the trial of Franz von Rinlen, German naval reservist, and twelve hers charged with conspiracy.

Police Lieutenant Barnitz testified that erbert Ebeling alleged to have been the an who took the fire bombs aboard steamips in "cigar boxes" is in Bloomingdale sylum, and Max Klein had died in a hospital.

Inspector Tunny, chief of the bomb squad, stified that one of the plotters had told im that Ebeling had placed bombs on the usitania and that he had "cursed the capin of the submarine which sank the liner ecause he had spoiled the 'cigars.'"

RELATIVE TO EXCESS PROFIT TAXES.

WASHINGTON, January 28.—Daniel C. Roper, ommissioner of Internal Revenue is sending ne following instructions relative to the exess profits tax to collectors throughout the ountry:

"A partnership whose fiscal year ended with the last day of any month in the year 1917 other than December, may not later than thirty days before March 1, 1918 give to the Collector of Internal Revenue of the District, in which its principal place of business is located, notice in writing of the date thus fixed as the closing of its fiscal year. Unless a partnership gives such notice, its income tax return for purposes of the excess profits tax shall be filed upon the basis of the calendar year 1917."

FRENCH REGIE ACCUSES

S. Hyman, Ltd., of a Breach of Trade Rights in the Sale of Gauloise Cigarettes—Action Begun in Montreal.

Hearing was commenced recently in the Superior Court at Montreal before Mr. Justice Mercier, of an action in which the Regie Francaise is suing S. Hyman, Limited, for $6,000 damages, for an alleged breach of trade rights in the sale of a cigarette under the name of the Gauloise. Plaintiffs assert that the cigarette complained of, is an illegal imitation, in its shape, form and package, of the cigarette for which plaintiffs claim a monopoly right.

In addition therefore to the damages asked, plaintiffs apply to the Court for an injunction to restrain defendants from infringing their trade name, imitating the make of the cigarette, and copying the design in a manner which, it is alleged, is calculated to deceive the public to believe that in buying the defendants' cigarettes they are purchasing those of the plaintiffs.

J. L. Perron, K.C., who is appearing for the defence, pleads that there is no breach of the plaintiffs' rights. There is no imitation whatever of the plaintiffs' cigarettes, he says, and as to the use of the words "Francaises" and "Gauloises" in describing the cigarettes, counsel submits that thees are words of common usage and no monopoly can be legally created in them for the benefit of the plaintiffs. The Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal reports that the hearing will be continued.

PERTAINING TO CIGARETTE PAPERS

WASHINGTON, January 28.—In connection with the examination of cigarette papers, L. S. Rowe, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has sent the following communication to the Collector of Customs at New York.

"Your attention is invited to T. D. 37393 paragraph 2 of which requires all packages of cigarette papers in books or tubes to be sent to the appraiser's stores for examination.

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue advised that this practice involves considerable expense and inconvenience to importers and that it will be satisfactory to internal-revenue officers if the same number of cases are sent for examination as is required for custom purposes.

"Accordingly paragraph 2 of T. D. 37393 is hereby revoked, and you will be governed by section 2901 of the Revised Statutes and article 230 of the Customs Regulations of 1915 in designating packages containing cigarette papers and tubes for examination by the appraiser."

HE USED HIS FINGER

To Simulate a Pistol—So He Says—Admitting Robberies of United Cigar Stores.

Edward Madden, twenty-two years old, of No. 630 East Seventeenth street, New York, laughingly admitted to Acting Captain Deevey, of the First Branch Detective Bureau, Thursday, that he was the gentleman burglar who has been terrorizing clerks of United Cigar Stores throughout Manhattan for the last two weeks. Upon identification of some of the store clerks he was held without bail by Magistrate Corrigan, in the Jefferson Market Court, for the action of the Grand Jury.

Madden told Captain Deevey, as quoted in the New York Herald, he did not use a revolver, but that the index finger of his right hand concealed in his overcoat pocket "answered all the purposes of a 'cannon'." He said the clerks all obeyed his commands and that there actually was no need of displaying a weapon.

Several of the clerks, including a woman were called to Police Headquarters, and identified Madden as the man who robbed the stores in which they were employed. The woman told Captain Deevey the prisoner returned to her a diamond ring worth $250, and one man had a watch and chain restored.

TOBACCO FACTORIES HARD HIT.

The tobacco factories in Richmond, Va., were hit a little harder by Dr. Garfield's order to shut down for five days than any other industry. In the first place, every manufacturer of tobacco is behind in filling orders, for there was never greater demand for smoking and chewing tobaccos than right now, and scarcity of labor has made it almost impossible for the manufacturers to keep up with orders. This five days of idleness threw them still farther behind. In the second place, they save very little coal by keeping the factories closed, for, in the nature of the business, they have to keep up a certain amount of heat to insure the safety of the tobacco in the course of manufacture. The Government permits this, of course, but the coal that is consumed in this way is a dead loss to the manufacturer of both the chewing and smoking tobaccos.

PROOFS OF PROGRESS.

The W. S. Conrad Co., cigar and tobacco jobbers of St. Paul, Minn, has increased its capital stock from $100,000 to $200,000. New officers have been elected, with D. K. Murphy, president.

RED CROSS GROWTH

"You will pardon me, I am sure, if I give you some idea of the development of the Red Cross.

"About six months ago we had 455,000 members. Today we have in excess of 22,000,000 members.

"About six months ago we had 200 Chapters; today, including branches and auxiliaries, we have about 50,000.

"Six months ago we had very few people working for the Red Cross; today we have in excess of ten million people working for the Red Cross.

"This development, gentlemen, was due to two things; first, some way being pointed out to the American people as to how to work, because the people of this country, most of them, want to work, and all you have to do is to tell them how and what to do and you will find it will be done.

"The other point was, we needed something of an inspiration from the other side, and that we have received in full measure. On the 31st day of last May our French Commission sailed for France, headed by Major Murphy. There were eighteen of them in number. About ten days ago Major Murphy sailed from France to come here, leaving that organization, not of eighteen, but of 2,500 American people."—From the speech of H. P. Davison.

PATIENCE NOW AND EFFORT LATER

To say the least, relative to shipments and deliveries, the present situation is unsatisfactory. Every manufacturer faces additional difficulties. Whatever his past achievements were, however great his ability and resources may be, despite his credit and prestige, he is handicapped. He is compelled now to do business at a disadvantage. And he can't hope for any immediate relief.

Neither valued patronage nor ready cash suffice now to procure quick transportation. To attempt to fill orders is one thing. To deliver the goods is another. Try as he will, a manufacturer's efforts to speed shipments are mostly wasted.

A delivery that aforetime could be made in a few days may take weeks, under existing conditions. The manufacturer dispatches goods with a prayer that the shipment may be rushed to an importunate customer. Whether the consignment goes by express or freight the one best bet is that delays will occur.

Associated with freight congestion almost everywhere, the delays reported are enough to tax the patience of Job. With "priorities," waits and side-tracking to consider, it requires 35 days, on occasions, to get freight forwarded from New York to Chicago. Pending endeavors to relieve the coal shortage, who knows how many thousand loaded cars have been shunted aside, to stand idle for a while?

Not being the sort of freight that is accorded priority, shipments of cigars and tobacco are retarded and lost, for the time being, in the shuffle. Cigar manufacturers receive by every mail letters of inquiry and complaint regarding undelivered goods.

In reply to importunities, protests and condemnation pertaining to delayed shipments, perhaps the chief information the troubled yet obliging manufacturer may give is the date, some weeks back, on which the goods were entrusted to the railroad company.

It is assumed that the railroads, under government control, are doing their best. But, to save his soul, what railroad man just now could keep track of every shipment accepted? When it happens that inquiries, made at railroad offices, concerning delayed freight, are more exasperating than useful, the impatient consignee usually writes reproachful letters to the shipper.

Failure to receive goods long overdue undoubtedly is bad for trade. Injury and loss rather directly are connected with delayed shipments and retarded deliveries. Yet, in so far as the hardships resulting are incidentals of war, every one in business must endure them as best he can. If inconvenience and denial of advantage are included in the price the tobacco industry must pay to assist the United States to beat the Kaiser, so mote it be. No patriotic American, though hurt financially, will protest against anything necessary to accelerate victory.

But, if it be possible, when the snow melts, to reorganize traffic so that commerce may be served without prejudice to the war plans of the nation, it is the duty of all, from the smallest shipper up to McAdoo to try and do something effective.

Meanwhile, remember that it may not b the manufacturer's fault if your goods fail t arrive.

THE GREATEST GOOD OF THE GREATEST NUMBER.

The greatest good for the greatest numbe has long been held to be the highest aim o government action. There has never been more perfect instrument of government fo achieving this ideal than United States Libert Bonds. By their very nature they give to ever citizen of the United States a chance to serv his country by serving himself; and if on serves himself and by the same act promote the welfare of all his fellow citizens, he certain ly is serving the greatest good for the greates number.

In buying a Liberty Bond one serves onesel first by discharging to that extent his para mount duty of patriotism in these days of hi country's greatest war. He serves himself also in a direct, material sense by investing hi money in an absolutely safe manner and at lucrative interest. Further, he serves himself by helping to win a war whose sole purpose is t make not only his own country, but his whole world, a safer, happier and saner place to live in, both for himself and for his posterity. Directly and indirectly that means, also, that he is conserving the value of his own property, for personal ownership of property would mean little in a world or a nation ridden either by domineering autocracy or destructive anarchy. Both of those conditions are inherent possibilities in German success. The imposition of German rule on free-spirited nations would both destroy individual freedom on the one hand and promote the anarchy of discontent and seditious revolt against oppression on the other. In a world in a state of unrest and uncertainty, property values would always be at low ebb. Even though the United States should retain its national entity and its sovereignty within its own borders, autocratic supremacy of Germany in Europe would inevitably impose on this country the necessity of becoming perpetually a militaristic nation in self-defense, maintaining burdensome army and navy establishments that would have to be paid for out of the pockets of the people. In other words, the citizen is confronted with this alternative: Lend your money to your government now to win the war, or else give it to your country later in the form of taxation to defend itself. In the first case your money will come back to you after having earned you more money; in the second case it never would earn you a cent and never would come back, for it would be dead loss, consumed by necessary militarism.

Having thus served himself by buying Liberty Bonds, the citizen by the same deed serves all his fellow citizens. He does so without additional cost or effort to himself, for in making the world safer, saner and happier to live in for himself and his sons, he also makes it a better place for everyone else. Each of the broader aspects of the great good of Liberty Bond investment that benefits the purchaser himself means an equal largeness of welfare for his fellow citizens. Therefore the purchase of a Liberty Bond is an act of altruism that is perfect in its efficiency, for it requires no undue sacrifice on the part of the individual for the public good, but results in the maximum of public welfare.

Finally in serving himself by buying a Liberty Bond the citizen serves his country, giving it the use of his money to fight the war, giving it his personal support and participation in its national solidarity of action and placing him unflinchingly in the ranks of patriotism, to stand four-square in the fight to uphold his country's glorious traditions of the past, to maintain its honor in the present and to make secure its safety in the future.

When the Canadians Led the Way

Connected with the Burt Box Co., of Buffalo before the war, C. Stewart Clark is now a major in the Canadian Army. At the battle of Vimy Ridge, he had his left lung perforated by a bullet. For the edification of former associates in the Burt box factories, Major Clark writes as follows, concerning his experience, "going over the top at the Somme."

It is a soldier's story, simple, direct, forceful and informative.

Zero hour was set for 6:03 A. 17. This does ot refer to the temperature but to the time vhen the "Show" was to commence and we vere to go "over the top" on our way toward Berlin.

The preliminary bombardment had been on or some days, to clear the way of wire enanglements and smash in, as much as possible, the German trenches. The day before, an artillery major, two of his staff, and myself crawled out into a shell crater in "No Man's Land" to observe the fire of his battery. It was working at a point some miles behind our lines and naturally could not see its target. We took a wire with a telephone attached to our observation post, and this gave us direct communication with the battery by means of which we were able to direct the "shoot." The major would telephone the range and the command to fire, and in about thirty seconds (which seemed like five minutes) we would hear the shells screaming through the air over our heads, bursting about two hundred yards from where we were. I was certainly glad that I was not in that section of the German line that day, for when a shell landed in the trench we could see things flying in all directions. A goodly number of direct hits were registered during the "shoot."

The German snipers must have been having a rest that day, for we were able to get out and back from our post in daylight without being sniped at.

The company which I commanded had to get in position for the attack first. We had already dug shallow trenches in advance of our front line—"jumping off" trenches they are called—in which we were to assemble and await the time to advance.

At two a. m. we were in our appointed positions and after I had made a tour of inspection to see that all instructions were clear to everyone, there was nothing to do but wait for the zero hour. This period of waiting is probably the most trying time of all, crouching in a shallow trench and wondering what is going to happen when one hops out of it. One wishes he were a thousand miles away. There must be no noise and it is too dangerous even to risk a smoke. The lighting of a match might give the whole show away. To make things more uncomfortable, it snowed that morning. Notwithstanding these discomforts, however, not a few of the men were able to snatch a little sleep.

At 6:30 sharp those who had been sleeping were awakened instantly by the terrible din of our artillery barrages, consisting of a stationary barrage on the German trench and a creeping barrage behind which the infantry were to advance. These started the fireworks from Fritzie's line. S. O. S. signals of all colors were sent up for their artillery.

The opening of the barrage fire was the signal for us to be on the move. In the excitement we forgot about being wet and cold, and got under way, keeping thirty to forty yards behind the creeping barrage, which we could see bursting in front of us like a wall of fire. Our attack is not made with a grand rush as one imagines, at least not until the last thirty or forty yards. It would be impossible to make much speed for any distance across "No Man's Land" on account of the ground being so torn up by shellfire. Some of the shell craters where the larger shells have landed are six or seven feet deep.

Our objective was some hundred yards ahead. German artillery answered the frantic signals of their infantry by opening fire. Most of their shells were going to our old front line which we had left behind us. There were so many shells flying through the air that it was impossible to tell which were ours and which were German shells. The excitement at this time is too great for one to realize danger. The one idea is to go ahead and get to the objective. Here and there men were dropping, and a machine gun which had evidently not been put out of action by the artillery fire was barking away. We kept steadily on, however, and passed through the remains of the enemy wire-entanglements. They had been cut to pieces by our preliminary bombardment and did not hold up our advance, as they were intended to do. My orderly, walking beside me, had a piece knocked out of the wooden part of his rifle, which was slung over his shoulder. The bullet must have passed between us. When we arrived within forty yards of the German trench the barrages lifted and we went ahead with a rush, catching the Boches before they could get out of their dugouts. They did not show much inclination for hand-to-hand fighting. The few who did put up any resistance were soon overcome, and the rest were sent back under escort to our lines. A large escort was not required as they were not the least bit reluctant to go; their chief trouble seemed to be in getting back quickly enough.

About this time I noticed a German running towards me with a revolver in his hand. I thought: "Here is one who is looking for trouble," so I got my revolver ready to get in the first shot. Before I could shoot, however, he saw me ready for action and dropped his revolver, putting his hands in the air and at the same time shouting "Kamerad, Kamerad," so I "Kameraded" and added him to our list of prisoners for that day. I thought at least I would get a German revolver for a souvenir, but when I picked it up it was nothing more warlike than a flare-light pistol, used for sending up signals. Evidently he had been in a hurry to join his comrades who were taken prisoners. I don't think he realized how closely he had come to joining his fathers.

Our next job was to get settled down and prepare for a counter attack.

A number of our rifles had become clogged with mud in our journey across the open, but we supplemented these with German rifles and ammunition, both of which we found plenty of in the captured trenches.

We did not have long to wait for the expected counter attack, but we were prepared for it with our machine guns in place and everyone armed with a rifle in working order. The attacking party started towards us across the open about two hundred yards away. We opened up rapid fire with rifles and machine guns and succeeded in stopping the attack before it had gotten fairly started. This counter attack was stopped so effectively that they did not try another one and we were left in undisputed possession of our newly acquired territory, which we held for another day when we were relieved and moved back for a few days' rest in billets.

Arthur Falk's Success

Just before the Falk Tobacco Co. became a part of the Tobacco Products Corporation, Arthur Falk, who was first vice-president, treasurer and secretary of the Falk Tobacco Co. since its foundation, disposed of his interest and withdrew.

The Falk Tobacco Co. has been one of the very successful independent companies. M. Falk, whose efforts made possible the establishment of the company, started the business with his two sons, Arthur Falk and Albert Falk, in 1903, and in 1905 the Falk Tobacco Co. became a corporation. Arthur Falk was engaged in the practice of law prior to that time, and had become an authority on corporation law. He was well qualified to serve the company in an executive capacity and he was active in the direction of the company's affairs up to the time of his withdrawal. His duties were extensive, for in addition to the work indicated by the offices he occupied, he was entrusted largely with the management of the company's headquarters at New York, and he made frequent trips to the factory at Richmond, and was the counsel for the company, having entire charge of its legal affairs. He incorporated and organized the Falk Tobacco Co. and also reorganized the company in 1916, when its capital stock was increased to one million dollars. As a consequence he was familiar with every detail of the business. Under his guidance and supervision many labor-saving devices were installed, and an efficient organization always was maintained. There was never a contract of purchase of any importance made without his first passing upon it, and he personally did a great part of the purchasing for the company. He gained a reputation as a buyer and as a man of great efficiency and excellent judgment. His ability and labor added materially to the company's surplus and profit account. He contributed in a great measure to the remarkable success of the company. Mr. Falk has quite a record as an inventor, and among his inventions in use by the company is the "Tear off Top" patent used on the famous Tareyton London Cigarettes and Smoking mixture. During all these years Arthur Falk maintained a law office at the Singer Building, 149 Broadway, New York City, but as his time was so much taken up with the company, most of his law practice was conducted by William Bondy, acting as counsel.

It appears that Mr. Falk received a very handsome sum for his interest in the Falk Tobacco Co., and he insisted upon his retirement from the company as a condition of the sale.

Although he has been receiving some tempting offers for his services, he has not made any definite plans yet for the future.

And while it is known that he has considerable wealth and is in a position to retire completely from all business, still he is not of that nature, but possesses the force, energy and ambition for which his late father was noted.

Doubtless he will return to his specialty as counsel on corporation law and the organization and management of corporations and business matters in general.

Arthur Falk's leaving the company is deeply felt not only by the officers of the company and by the office and factory staffs, for he is highly regarded by all with whom he had any dealings.

REGARDING FREIGHT CONGESTION.

Hundreds of complaints are now arising over delayed freights. Shipments that usually reach their destination in one day now take five or six. Shipments usually requiring six or eight days are lucky if they get through in twenty-four. It seems to make no difference whether the goods are perishable or not.

It is reasonable to suppose that the railroads are doing their utmost to get stuff through at the earliest possible moment. Certainly so since they went under Government ownership, whatever they did before.

Consignees of freight are of course the main sufferers from this condition. The usual way to sell goods is f. o. b. the seller's station, therefore after the seller delivers to the railroad, he is done. Even if the goods are entirely lost, he has nothing to do with it. The loss is the buyer's and so is the loss that comes from delay.

Consignees are asking where they stand in case of delay or loss. Briefly there are three reasons for the present delay:—

1. Congestion due to too much freight.
2. Bad weather conditions, preventing free movement of trains.
3. Government orders sidetracking one class of freight for another.

Says the editor of the Modern Merchant:

"The consignee who makes a loss by reason of delay due to causes 2 and 3 has no claim against anybody. Cause 2 is an act of God, for which nobody was responsible, and Cause No. 3 is the next thing to it. He may have a claim if the cause was No. 1, provided the fact of the congestion was not known at the time of shipment. The shipper who ships into a congested condition with his eyes wide open, cannot complain if his shipment meets wi the delay that he took the chance of. If ships ignorantly, having no notice of any co dition which could delay his shipment, then if the railroad did not tell him—he can colle his damages. I doubt, however, if anybo can honestly plead ignorance of the freig congestion which has existed for so long no so that probably there could be no claim ev under Cause 1. The plain fact is that the co signee whose goods are delayed, and perha damaged by the delay, must in the avera case grin and bear it. His loss is one of t inevitable results of present conditions, a he must stand it himself.

"Of course all this applies to delays onl It does not apply to cases where goods a lost. None of the three causes set forth abo justifies a railroad for losing goods, and course the owner of lost goods can alwa collect his damages."

TREATING "TOBACCO-SICK" SOILS

WASHINGTON, January 28.—In connectio with recent investigations and work official of the Bureau of Plant Industry, Departmen of Agriculture, have the following to say rel ative to the physiology of "tobacco sick soils.

In the Connecticut Valley the leading feat ure of the work has been a study of "tobacco sick" soils, which are causing heavy losses t growers, particularly under the artificia shades used for growing wrapper leaf. Se lected strains of Cuban and of binder type grown on these soils have given very en couraging results, indicating that the disease may be controlled by the growing of resist ant varieties. It has also been shown tha the use of fertilizers of acid reaction will ma terially reduce the injury caused by the dis ease. Finally, crop rotation, wherever prac ticable, appears to be an effective remedy A similar or identical disease is giving much trouble in Maryland; and while native va rieties are susceptible, these have been crossed with foreign resistant varieties, with a view to obtaining resistant types adapted to local requirements.

In Wisconsin and in the Burley section of Kentucky considerable progress has been made in the control of tobacco root-rot through the development of resistant varieties. The disease causes heavy damage in these regions every year and ordinary Burley is especially susceptible. On fields on which the native Burleys have failed completely, some of the resistant strains have given surprisingly good results.

GRATEFUL FOR TOBACCO

Soldiers Write to Ned Wayburn Telling How Much They Enjoyed the Smokes That Were Sent to Them.

Ned Wayburn, the well known theatrical producer who has helped much to swell the Sun tobacco fund for our soldiers in France, recently received a postal card inscribed as follows:

"After several months' experience with the hashed hybrid weeds that masquerade under the name of tobacco on the Continent, we, the undersigned members of Company F, Twelfth Engineers, A. E. F. (the Fighting Twelfth), wish to thank you from the bottom of our tortured palates for the hours of 'smoky' content we enjoy.

"Sometimes when 'Old Fritz' starts a 'strafe' we feel little and lone and forgotten. It is then we like to be reminded of the multitude behind us—to know we're 'not forgotten by the land we can't forget.'

"Such thoughtfulness as yours and your fellow contributors helps to keep the 'home fires burning' where perhaps they are needed most—at the front. So again we thank you all."

Leaf Tobacco Held by Manufacturers and Dealers

January 1, 1918 and 1917 and April 1, and October 1, 1917

These statistics represent for dealers in and manufacturers of tobacco other than the original growers: (1) The quantity of leaf tobacco reported as held by manufacturers who, according to the returns of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, manufactured during the preceding calendar year more than 50,000 pounds of tobacco, 250,000 cigars, or 1,000,000 cigarettes, and by dealers in or manufacturers of leaf tobacco who, on an average, had more than 50,000 pounds of leaf tobacco in stock at the end of the four quarters of the preceding calendar year; (2) all imported leaf tobacco in the United States bonded warehouses and bonded manufacturing warehouses.

*Leaf tobacco on hand January 1, 1918, includes 779,292,224 pounds, for which the "Marked weight" was reported (i. e., weight at time it was packed or baled), and 396,942,433 pounds for which the "Actual weight" was reported. The corresponding amounts included for January 1, 1917, were 632,550,784 and 412,334,324 pounds, respectively; for April 1, 1917, 892,415,653 and 513,717,920 pounds, respectively, and for October 1, 1917, 748,864,154 and 405,191,880 pounds, respectively. Allowance should be made for shrinkage on the amounts for which "Marked weight" was reported, in order to ascertain the actual weight. The total for January 1, 1918, includes 1,036,436,656 pounds unstemmed and 139,798,001 pounds of stemmed leaf tobacco.

How It Is Done in England

The first prosecutions of tobacconists at Cardiff under the new Control Order took place on December 13. Leonard K. Gronberg, tobacconist, Queen street, was summoned for not exhibiting a list of prices in his shop, and Doris Tucker, an assistant, was proceeded against for aiding and abetting. When a policeman entered the shop he could not see any notice according to the regulation. The assistant eventually produced it from beneath another notice. A fine of 40s. each or a month's imprisonment was imposed. The same tobacconist was fined £5 or a month for a similar offense at his Queen street shop, and Olive Davies, his assistant, 5s. or seven days. In a summons against Sarah Gordon, she stated that she had applied to the Board of Trade for list of prices, and also to her wholesale factors, but had not received it. In this case the fine was 40s. or a month.

Another interesting case to the trade had relation to the sale of matches. Henry A. Timothy, tobacconist, who carries on business at several addresses in Cardiff, was summoned for selling matches above the regulation price, and his assistant, Ida Oliver, was charged with a similar offense. It appeared from the evidence that John Samuel Dyas went to the shop in St. John's Square and asked for some matches. He said he would take three boxes and was charged 3d. for them, although he pointed out that under the regulations they should be sold at 7½d. or 8d. a dozen. The assistant replied, "No fear!" and he paid the 3d. Subsequently he made a complaint. Detective Ivor Evans afterwards visited the shop and the notice exhibited in the shop gave the prices of the matches described as two boxes for 1½d., 3 boxes for 2d., or ¾d. a box. Mr. Timothy stated that those were his instructions, and the assistants were not authorized to sell at any other rates. The Stipendiary said the employer was responsible for the acts of his servants, even if those acts were in direct contravention of his express orders. Oliver was fined £10 or two months. Mr. Timothy was fined 1s.

A heavy fine was imposed under the Tobacco Control Regulations in a case which was heard at Cardiff on December 22. Richard J. Barriscale, licensee of the Carlton Restaurant, was summoned for selling cigarettes at a price in excess of that fixed by the Tobacco Order, and a waitress named Lena Pond was summoned for aiding and abetting. From the evidence given at the police court, it appeared that a visitor to the restaurant on December 8, after being supplied with refreshments, asked for a packet of Grey's cigarettes, and tendered a two-shilling-piece in payment. The waitress brought him 9d. change, and he challenged the correctness of the price. She went to the office and on returning said the price was 1s. 3d. The visitor remarked that he could buy the same cigarettes outside for 1s. 2d., and subsequently was offered an additional penny change, which he refused. A. F. Hill, for the defense, contended that he had no case to answer, because the onus of proof rested with the prosecution. According to the terms of the Order, the prosecution had to show that the price now charged was more than a penny for ten cigarettes than the price at which similar goods were sold at the same establishment on May 1. He called evidence to show that Grey's cigarettes were not sold in the restaurant before May 1, and, therefore, he submitted they were entitled to fix their own price. The Stipendiary (T. W. Lewis) would not accept this contention, and fined Mr. Barriscale £10 or a month's imprisonment. The waitress was cautioned.—London Tobacco.

WISCONSIN NOTES

Edgerton, Wis., January 25.—The country districts are yet so thoroughly snowbound that but little progress has been made towards preparing the tobacco crop for market during the week. But a limited amount of receiving is going on at delivery points when cars can be obtained for reshipping. We learn that growers are submitting to some deductions on account of the condition of crops coming in and a few rejections as well because of high case tobacco. But usually such differences are arranged upon the farm before delivery is ordered in, so the public does not learn of these things.

Warehouse handling was started by a couple of firms in this market during the week. Haskins & Schwartz received several purchases here Monday for shipment to Janesville. The General Cigar Co. will handle all their 1917 purchases at the Portage branch this season.

The Eckhart packing of 1916 at Viroqua, consisting of 1,260cs has been sold to the account of C. H. Spitzner & Son, which is the largest transaction in old leaf in some years, and in money value the largest ever made in Wisconsin leaf.

The embargo on eastern shipments is still in force and therefore but little tobacco is moving out of storage points, and manufacturers are all the time getting shorter of stocks. Unless relief comes soon some factories may be compelled to close.—Edgerton Reporter.

CUBAN NEWSPAPER MAN IN NEW YORK.

Señor Francois G. de Cisneros, a prominent Cuban author and journalist, has arrived in New York as resident correspondent for the two influential Havana daily newspapers, La Discusion and La Prensa. La Discusion is the leading conservative afternoon daily of Cuba, and its editor is Col. Manuel Maria Coronado, Vice-President of the Cuban Senate and a frequent visitor to New York.

The enterprise of La Discusion and La Prensa in sending Señor de Cisneros to the United States, is only one of numerous important steps recently taken by these newspapers to increase their news facilities. Both have recently contracted for the full service of The United Press Associations. Señor de Cisneros, who has taken apartments at the Hotel Gregorian, will continue his literary work, and likewise will be associated with The Republic of Cuba News Bureau in the Woolworth Building.

Warmed by the Fire of Patriotism

A Hot Discussion on a "Heatless" Day—"Penny Business" Applied to Six-Cent Cigars Is Improving Up-State—New Features on the R. J. Reynolds Program—A Cheap and Painful Pair of Shoes—Oscar Kinney's Next Task—The Utility of Thompson's "Side-Show"—L. W. Scott & Co. Have Gone Out of Business—A Pipe Specialist from Sidney, N. Y.

New York State Capitol District,
January 28, 1918.

Four men. One, is a Mr. Pearl, corporate proprietor of a department store. Two, is Mr. Wiro, official of a public utility plant. Three, is Mr. Keyes, retired merchant. Four, is Mr. Ash, tobacconist. Place, cigar store of Stub & Ash. Time, today. Dialogue, right here:

Mr. Pearl: "Say, Wiro, how much coal did you save during the last shutdown? That is, what do you estimate to be your economy because of the lessened demand from your light and heat customers?"

Mr. Wiro: "Oh, I can't say. It's practically impossible to tell unless we compare previous accounts, purchases, consumption."

Mr. Pearl: "But what I am trying to get at is the base value of this Garfield shutdown. What did we save, in total, by it?"

Mr. Wiro: "Well, you musn't try to figure just on coal alone. For it's my general idea that Mr. Garfield ordered the holidays to reduce manufacture of non-essentials, help the warehouse and transport people cut down the tremendous bulk of material arriving for shipment and distribution. While coal, the original cause of the disturbance, will be conserved inci——"

Mr. Pearl: "Yes, yes, I know all that. But how can you offset all that loss of activity, manufacture, wages, with the comparatively small advantage gained in the way you say?"

Mr. Wiro: "This is war, Pearl, war to the knife. And, unless we help those fellows in Washington and 'Over There' by sacrificing a financial loss, we're gone! You can't lick the Kaiser by making and selling luxuries, making more mon——"

Mr. Pearl: "Do you mean to say my business is a luxury line? Do you infer that underwear, for instance, or women's cloaks and suits are in the luxury class?"

Mr. Keyes: "I don't think Wiro insinuated your line is an extravagance. He simply stated it is now necessary to eliminate, perhaps temporarily, whatever may be considered a source of burden to the Government as a problem of consuming raw material, its transportation from mine and mill, and the ultimate despatch of the completed articles, no matter what they represent. Is that right, Wiro?"

Mr. Wiro: "Yes, that's what I started to say. Just as a certain Mackinaw coat is advertised to be 'Bigger Than Weather,' so is this war 'Bigger Than Business'!"

Mr. Keyes: "That's the idea, Wiro, that's how we stand! Even I, retired from active trade, even I stand to lose a great part of my income through depreciation of investments, dividends, and so on. Yet that's only my small share of the fight! I'll just have to stand it, exactly as Pearl, here, and Ash, too, suffer reductions in their business in the gross, and their expenses, ever increasing, while the net profit almost disappears altogether!"

Mr. Ash: "You're right about the gross, tare, and net, Keyes. Pearl's complete trade may have suffered, but he has some lines, I'll bet, which still sell. While here, with this single luxury line of cigars and the like, you three men are excellent examples of smokers who have curtailed their personal expense by reducing a portion of their cigar account. Is that so?"

Mr. Pearl: "Yes, I myself have cut down considerably on cigars. I don't smoke two-for-a-quarter goods anymore. Instead, I occasionally smoke a single ten-center, with a few packages of short smokes as fillers. And even in the little cigar line the price you charge me, Ash, is 35 cents a hundred more than a few weeks ago. They will probably go higher, too, just the same as everything in my own stock. That hurts business like the devil, and don't you forget it! Still, as Wiro and Keyes say, I suppose that's merely my part of the war burden, portions of which we all carry."

Mr. Wiro: "Don't forget, Pearl, what one of our diplomats once remarked about war, and its cause: 'First the missionary, then the consul (meaning business), and then—the gun-boat!'"

On the sou-west edge of the envelope was this line: "Postman, please run!" On the nor-east corner was the customary three-cent purple picture of Washington, accompanied by the most unusual extravagance of a ten-cent stamp, special delivery style.

And, within the envelope, addressed in the parker-pen hand of Carnation Bellinger, were these few words to the Prince Cigar Co., of Trenton, New Jersey:

"No mail from you here in Binghamton. Haven't received any of your correspondence in more than a week. Has the Garfield act completely closed the factory? Must have Hall of Honor cigars. Write or wire me in Albany."

Three big men made deep dents in the snows of the Capitol District last week. Wherever you looked were O'Sullivanized heel-clues of these Liggett & Myers boys.

Supervisor Owens came in to see Deputy Boss George W. Thompson. And Bill Bente, who understudies George, completed the triumvirate.

Up in Lockport, across the street from Buffalo, Bill is a leading citizen, all right! Because, when he filed his questionnaire, Bill decided he was a class three man, just as he ranks in the L. & M. trio.

But those Lockport draft registras knew Bill to be an A-1 man, so they took the chance of changing Bill to the first division. Right there William C. Bente remains 'til he gits home, an' is able to take a crack at those chaps who think Bill is even a better man than he says he is!

"Penny business, as it applies to six-cent cigars, is improving," announced M. A. Shufeldt. "Here in the Capitol District we're making an excellent showing on Bold cigars at the penny advance. Schenectady is particularly well pleased with the situation, and the other sections 'round here are taking to the penny increase with no trouble at all. I think men are glad to have the few pennies change in their pockets for newspapers, matches, and the like."

All the Liggett Drug Stores have cut cigarette prices another notch. Now they are asking $2.15 the hundred for Pall Malls, $1.40 for Murads, and 90 cents for Lord Salisbury. Even the United Stores are not trying to meet these jabs.

"Going to Schenectady," said Jobber Fred Lewis of Saugerties, as he waited in Albany for a limited trolley. "Business is fairly good, collections slow. Otherwise things are rushing along in their usual stride on the Clay cigars and the other brands I feature from my own factory."

Drop shipments from jobbers' stocks [illegible] Velvet, Fatima, and a few other products [illegible] the Liggett & Myers Co., are still engagi[illegible] the smiling attention of Salesman Camfield [illegible] this division. Boss Watt, of Utica, is tryi[illegible] to hasten shipments to local jobbers, who ha[illegible] been oversold on some of the L. & [illegible] tobaccos.

"Most of our shipments are now comi[illegible] through by express," stated Boss Jordan, [illegible] the R. J. Reynolds crew. "Railroad tran[illegible] portation is so completely paralyzed that w[illegible] cannot use it anymore as ordinary freight f[illegible] Camels and Prince Albert."

"This week," Jordan went on, "we a[illegible] working a four-brand drop shipment. Georg[illegible] Washington, our cut-plug formerly five, no[illegible] six cents, will shortly appear in a new ter[illegible] cent size. Odd pennies will be the rule, how[illegible] ever, for most of our other goods. Busines[illegible] is rather quiet just now. Trade in Troy [illegible] particularly so, while the rest of the Capito[illegible] District isn't much better. Nevertheless, th[illegible] Reynolds features are obtaining even mor[illegible] than their usual share of commerce in to[illegible] bacco and cigarets."

Weston could probably walk it in three o[illegible] four days, even in this wilful weather. Ye[illegible] Walter Branche, heel-an'-toeing it the bes[illegible] he can, could barely make the New Yorl[illegible] office of the Branche Brothers Cigar Co., a[illegible] 351 East 73rd street, until some time afte[illegible] McKinley's birthday!

And it all came about through those shoes[illegible] For, as you likely know, Walter had just sol[illegible] a satisfactory invoice of Hansel and Grete[illegible] apollos, when, wandering along Albany's[illegible] Pearl street, he suddenly sighted a window-[illegible] ful of January sale-shoes.

They were that kind of cordovans which[illegible] "Were $14, Now $5.98." And Walter, realiz-[illegible] ing the opportunity of saving the price of[illegible] a profit on a thousand R-B cigars, bought a[illegible] pair at once!

Very good. Though, after a-wearin' of the[illegible] hoss-hides some total sixty minutes, Walter[illegible] came to the conclusive conclusion that the[illegible] mahoganies were very rotten!

That's why Walter now trips along th'[illegible] slidin'-balls a trifle after th' fashion of Pearly[illegible] Pinkle a-comin' doon Broadway in single-[illegible] sixes when it's double-twelves she should[illegible] a-had! Though Walter, just now, is back on[illegible] the job in his former brogans, soft-an'-easy as[illegible] a bare-foot!

Men with nothing a-tall to do, like Bill[illegible] McAdoo an' Oscar Kinney, are always lookin'[illegible] for more work!

Bill, a-course, has one or two little jobs on[illegible] his hands right now which occupy his full[illegible] union hours. And Oscar Kinney, runnin' a[illegible] link o'restaurants, cigar stands, office[illegible] buildin's, farm, an' a few other Waldorf[illegible] properties in the Capitol District, is just like[illegible] Bill with his Liberty Loans, Treasury, Rail-[illegible] roads, an' a pocketful of small toys like them!

Still, folk do say when you want a thing[illegible] done, an' done kerrect, hand it to a busy man![illegible] That must be the very good reason Oscar[illegible] Kinney has taken on another small matter.

It is just o' a three million dollar corpora-[illegible] tion, you know, an' Oscar is goin' tu be th'[illegible] quillman for ut.

When it is organized, pretty soon, Oscar[illegible] will get together 'bout all the boats an'[illegible] barges on the New York State barge canal.[illegible] Then he'll jine 'em into one of those there[illegible] transportation concerns, to be known as the[illegible] Barge Canal Transit Company.

An' bime-by, when the ice melts, Oscar will[illegible] run a hull fleet o' boats, 'tween Buffalo an'[illegible] Albany, to help Bill McAdoo move things!

"Yes, I have placed the El Arabe brand with the Bruce Macdonald Co., of Albany," announced W. W. Weeks, "and I'm sure they will be delighted with this progressive cigar of the Benito Rovira Co., New York. We are glad to open this account with the enterpsing State street house, and we hope to increase our business here in a big way."

When German Hall in Albany closed its dors because of a dispute with its remaining ulon label tenants, Local No. 68, of the Cigarmakers' Union, was one of the vacating organizations. And they are now established at 16 State street, with the Federation of Labor, Musical Union, and other associations of the srt.

"Say," hailed Al Booth, the Albany sub-jobber, "did you notice how the local distributrs got caught with short stocks when the Capitol District tobacco factories closed for te Garfield holidays? Well, listen here: I've a larger reserve of Shields', Payn's, A. T. Co., ad other popular brands than many of the lg city jobbers. So my customers won't suffer with small allotments, doled out like coal, while I have the goods in storage."

And there is a serious depletion of stocks consequent upon the vacations of last week, coupled to the previous state of transport. Jobbers and retailers throughout this section report very meagre lines of long cut and scrap tobaccos. Also an impending shortage of the greater cigarette sellers. Looking for relief from the approaching February working days, of which there are but 18 on account of four Sundays, four fuel days, and the two holidays, is a sorrowful outlook for merchants already lay on numerous items of standard stuff.

Next Monday will be observed as a holiday of even more sweeping proportions than last. From present indications everything in the entire Capitol district will be shut tight except provision and drug stores.

Some towns in the local area regarded the first Monday as the limit of endurance. But retail cigar stores were open where the proprietors could vouch for similar service on ordinary Sundays.

Over in Schenectady the screws were set so tight that some drug stores refused to sell cigars, cigarettes and candy. Restaurants, too, banished tobacco products for the day, offering nothing else except plain food. Cafes retired from business for the day.

And in Troy, which is ordinarily conducted as a wide-open throttle, the hotels and restaurants refused to sell cigars and the like. Drinks were likewise contra bonos mores.

While in Albany, cigars and so forth were sold everywhere. But liquid glue congealed, and the only place in town where a real wet drink could be bought was at the evening cabaret of Maiden Lane Keeler's. This was so because Keeler's has an amusement license, opening and closing the same as the theatres.

Those retail cigarists who were on the job admitted a better business on Mandate-Monday than usual for the ordinary wash-day. Many smokers worked in offices where heat was or wasn't. So, where it wasn't, a cigar 'tween-the-teeth was just as good as a 68 temperature.

One of the funny incidents of the day happened at the store of Thompson & Hare, Clinton Square, Albany. For, about 10 A. M., in walked a cop: "Youse gotta swing th' hinge here, bo. Twist yer key in th' gate an' beat it! Them's th' ginner'l ordhers uv th' day."

"But we operate a news-room here," objected Gil Thompson, and I don't see why we can't remain on the job providing we sell cigars, cigarettes, tobacco and newspapers, eliminating for the time the balance of our line."

"Naw, naw, nix on th' side-show," says the flat-foot, "Cap'n sez, sez he, 'Close 'em up or pinch 'em!' Thut's whut I'm right here for, get me?"

So Thompson locked up. Then he went down to see Gy Lansing, the fuel administrator. And Gil explained the case. And Lansing in a few appropriate words, instructed the police to keep on the reservation, leaving the cigar men alone. After which, Thompson opened the main tent again, having had just exactly a vacation for thirty minutes.

Something very similar occurred at the store of J. W. Stevens, State and Broadway, Albany. Only this happened at midnight, just as Manager C. J. Shaxby was about to blow out the gas.

Enter blue-coat: "Whut's yer number here, young feller?" And then, following business of entering the numeral in his loose-leaf, this concrete crusher also withdrew, permitting C. J. S. to ask not, nor know not. Perhaps he'll pluck the place next Monday night, after the case is referred to the Appelate Division.

No calendar came this year to cigar manufacturers of the Capitol district from their old leaf friends in Boston, L. W. Scott & Co. This practice of the Scotts, to send forth a weekly-date annual, of a size to conveniently fill a niche in the roll-top, was an event of many, many years.

So, when none arrived this season, someone inquired. And he was grieved to learn the firm had not only retired from business, but that James H. Scott, the partner, had died of pneumonia quite recently. While L. W. Scott, now residing in Florida, had returned to Boston for his brother's funeral.

"Really now," insisted Steve Diekhaus, "the W. D. C. pipe trade has been very good indeed. Magazines of national circulation are being used to advertise our Wellington and other brands. And our Milano Italian briars are selling especially fine in the first class stores of the country. We're not kicking a bit, honest an' truly."

Mentioning pipes recalls to a local dealer the recent visit of a druggist from Sidney, N. Y. This apothecary chap was a typical country cousin, six feet over all, Yankee to his dollar watch.

"Sa-ay," drawled the liniment-man, "yew sure hev sum stock here! An' yew mak' quite sum showin' uv pipes, tew! But sa-ay, naow, yew oughter put yewer lamps on my line o' pipes! I'll just betcher th' best nickel seegar in th' howse thet I've got more pipes than yew hev!"

"Why, sa-ay," he proceeded, clamping down on the cigar case for a mouth-to-ear talk, "I kin fill my winder with just case pipes alone, an' still hev enuf in th' case tew sell! An' I sell 'em all at th' prices I uster git afore th' war put'um 'way up! Yes, sir, an' I've got a snag uv bakelite pipes, as well. Them I sell fer fifty cents, becuz yew can't git 75 out our way!"

"But whut bothers me is th' way quarter pipes cum nowadays! Holy smokes! They're fulla holes, stuffed with wax-putty, I guess! Yew sell one to a customer, an' th' very furst time he lights 'er up, sizz, she burns right thru th' hole. Then th' fella sure-enuf wants yew tew hand him a new pipe, an', ef yew don't, yew make'm mad!"

"Yas, sir, I've gotta supply a-pipes tew las' me four years, I guess. Our town dealers jess won't raise prices, so I'm sellin' things pretty cheap. A-course, sech articles as Epsom salts, which same I handle in three or four barrel lots every year, I kin afford to sell reasonable-like. But, on pipes, a feller oughter make sum money, don't yew think so?

"An' sa-ay, mister, ef yew hear of any feller wantin' tew buy out a good drug store with a big trade in cigars an' pipes, send 'im tew me in Sidney. I jus' can't see any future in this business dowan my way, an' I'd rather hev th' money than th' store!"

Working the very best they can, the Shields & Son tobacco factory, on Church street, Albany, is crippled with Blue Line and Even Up orders to such an extent that jobbers' supplies are being reduced to a minimum. Fuel holidays are not assisting the force any, either. Superintendent Dan Doyle is doing a lot of work.

In Gloversville things are movin'. All the great glove factories of this former Kingsborough are busy with war work. So the tobacconists, naturally, are fairly busy, too.

Both tobacco jobbers are on the job. Foster & Gregory and W. F. Orr are the leading lights of the business. While Charlie Newman, retailer to the railroad men, also gets by with considerable output. Other dealers report fair trade, likewise.

"This closing-act certainly puts a crimp in business," said Irving Fulder, "but we're keeping at it. Our Webster, Mi Hogar, Farragut, Flor de Fulder, No. 512, and similar brands are selling as well as any cigars on the local market, so I guess the firm of S. E. Fulder won't perish from this earthly Albany."

Papa came into the store of J. W. Stevens, the other evening, to get a few cigarettes. Mama and little Willie followed after.

On duty at the time was Manager C. J. Shaxby, and he asked the little fellow why he didn't smoke, too. But Willie, being bashful, just backed up, sayin' nawthin'.

And Mama an' Papa, wantin' Willie to make a better impression urged him to speak up. After a deal of manoeuvring, egged on especially by Mama, Willie at last loosened his tongue:

"Pap an' I doan smoke becuz we buy th' cig'rets for Mama!" Then little Willie was hustled right out to catch a car—an' somethin' else, too.

THE SMOKER.

Business Booms in Key West

KEY WEST, January 25.—The factories here are running to full capacity, with plenty of orders ahead. Retailers are enjoying prosperity and sales are constantly increasing.

S. & F. Fleitas report that they have a great many orders on hand, and a long list of new customers secured during the past year. The Homerica brand is selling wonderfully well.

The Mi Favorita Ca. reports that it is well stocked with orders for Mi Telegrafo and Mi Favorita, which are steadily gaining in favor and keep a large force busy.

The Louis 1890 Co. reports show plenty of business on the books. Large quantities of this brand are turned out every week. Present prospects indicate that all previous records will be broken this year.

The aviation station here is in running order, and is the center of many circling planes. There will be a flag raising ceremony at the station on Saturday. A parade of soldiers, sailors, government workers and school children will precede the flag ceremony.

The men at the Cato factory struck for two pay days a week. Pay envelopes are now passed out on Wednesday and Saturday.

The Havana American Co., as well as all others in this vicinity, reports increased business all along the line.

Smoke Funds Growing

The big response made by the public has swelled the Sun Smoke Fund to approximately $200,000.

The "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" has a total today of $148,000. With the plans now being formulated by A. B. Dick, head of this fund, and the big drive planned for February 18-24, the fund should be close to the million mark when March sets in.

Thousands of persons in all parts of the country are getting cards from soldiers in the trenches, each card carrying a message of cheer and thanks. In some places the cards are being auctioned off, the receipts going back into the smoke fund.

The Pequot Brings Manila Cigars to America

In 1817 the American ship Pequot sailed from the Philippine Islands with the first Manila cigars for the United States, arriving at Salem, Mass., in July, 1818. The record of the Pequot's adventures together with the description of her cargo is contained in an old letter written by a Salem merchant, Saltonstall. Of the Manila cigars he wrote:—

> "Manilas are of a style approved by Spaniards who excel in knowledge of cigars. They burn handsomely and have a flavor very agreeable. A man may smoke many during a day and not be surfeited or made ill."

The character of Manila tobacco has not changed since then. The quality of cigars has improved and the quantity imported into the United States is counted in the hundred millions.

Canada Obtains a Supply of Sumatra Wrappers

A Successful Inscription in Montreal—522 Bales Distributed—John H. Duys and Jos. F. Cullman Receive Much Cash and Many Compliments from Cigar Manufacturers—A Banquet at the Hotel Windsor

Says the Montreal Daily Star: "The banquet hall of the Windsor Hotel, on the evening of January 17, was the scene of a pleasant gathering of some fifty or sixty representatives of the tobacco industry of America. They had assembled as guests of John H. Duys and Joseph Cullman, two New York tobacco magnates. The "raison d'etre" of the celebration was the fact that several thousand bales of Sumatra tobacco, of which both Canadian and American manufacturers have been in dire need for many months, have at last run the gauntlet of the German "subs," have arrived from Holland and are now ready for disposal at the hands of the two hosts of the evening.

"In order to obtain even such a limited quantity as five thousand bales, it was necessary to make almost extraordinary arrangements with the Canadian Government and the British Admiralty. After long and arduous efforts, these arrangements were completed and the necessary permission secured by Charles Sprieser, secretary of the Canadian cigar manufacturers' association, to whom credit is due for the achievement.

"Tobacco manufacturers both in the States and Canada have been working under a severe handicap ever since the war began, in an effort to keep the prices down for the consumer, in spite of the enormous increase in the cost of production. But, as Mr. Cullman remarked, it is high time to 'pass the buck,' which means that the consumer will soon be obliged to pay higher prices if he wishes to indulge in the luxury of the 'weed.' William Ward, of London, Ont., was appointed toastmaster for the occasion, and his humorous anecdotes and keen wit kept the company in the best of spirits.

"Mr. Duys declared that he hoped to bring tobacco prices back to normal in seven or eight months. He referred to the cigar manufacturers' association in New York, declaring that mutual co-operation had been the key-stone of its success. Co-operation was also the key-note of Mr. Cullman's address. 'You must get together,' he said, 'and standardize your business, especially with regard to terms and discounts.' He was enthusiastically applauded.

"Mr. Sprieser also spoke on co-operation among local manufacturers. Referring to the shipment of the five thousand bales, which he had been enabled to obtain, he declared that this quantity was by no means sufficient to satisfy the demand. He hoped, however, to be able to secure another shipment in the near future. Michael Hirsch, a well known local manufacturer, as well as Jas. McNeil, J. M. Fortier, H. Betz, L. Goulet, E. Irving, Roland Grothe, Major Bruce Payne, and R. O. Brennon, also addressed the gathering."

The Sumatra tobacco that caused the celebration was brought to Canada from Holland, about the first of the year. Transported to Montreal, it was offered for inspection. Then, at a sale, resembling recent inscriptions in New York, it was acquired by firms as follows: L. O. Grothe, Ltd., 111; John McNee & Sons, 66; Goulet Bros., 55; Andrew Wilson & Co., 44; H. Jacobs & Co., 44; C. H. Spreiser, 41; McLeod, Nolan & Co., 27; S. Harris & Co., 22; H. Simon & Sons, 22; La Champagne Cigar Co., 18; J. U. S. Shipping Gains Despite the U-Boats

"In the twelve months of unrestricted warfare launched against American and Allied shipping by Germany one year ago next Friday, there have been sunk by submarines, mines and raiders sixty-nine American vessels, totalling 171,061 gross tons, according to a careful compilation of records which have been made public during the period," says the New York Tribune.

Offsetting this loss of American vessels, most of which were sailing ships, the United States since February 1 has added to her merchant marine by the seizure of former German and Austrian owned ships, a total of 107 vessels having a gross tonnage of 686,494, leaving on the credit side of the American ledger a net gain of 515,435 gross tons.

The loss of life caused by the sinking of the sixty-nine American ships was more than 300 persons.

The percentage of sinkings of American ships compared with the number of vessels which have sailed through the war zone successfully is small. Records of the Department of Commerce show that for the period beginning with February 1, 1917, and ending with December 1 there were cleared from American ports in the foreign trade ships aggregating 17,738,900 net, or approximately 24,834,400 gross, tons. The number of ships making up the total of tons was not made public by the department.

Further offsetting the loss of tonnage occasioned by the submarine warfare, the United States, through the Shipping Board, requisitioned in American shipyards 426 vessels, totalling more than 2,000,000 gross tons, and contracts have been awarded for 884 ships, a large number of which are now under way and are being rushed to completion. In addition, the Shipping Board on October 15 last placed under government requisition 393 American vessels of over 2,500 tons dead weight capacity, which were already afloat, and immediately assigned them to the task of carrying supplies for the Allies and the American forces abroad.

Included in these requisitioned vessels were twenty-one ships in Great Lakes trade, and in addition there were commandeered twenty-four steamers building on the lakes for foreign account and ready for launching. Virtually all of these were brought to Atlantic Coast ports and immediately put into service. Almost one-half of them had to be cut in two to get them through the Welland Canal, but the task was accomplished and the ships rejoined in less than three months from the time the contract was awarded.

Another difficulty which faced the United States in the task of putting to sea vessels to offset the ravages of the U-boats was the repairing of the "wilful damage" done to the former German ships by their officers and crews before the ships were seized. This cost millions of dollars, and in many instances called for the highest engineering skill.

Many of the seized vessels have made three and four round trips through the war zone.

Three of the former German vessels have been the objects of successful attacks by submarines. The Actaeon, formerly the Adamsturm, and the Owasco, formerly the Allemania, were sunk and the Armenia was hit by a torpedo but was saved after being beached. Several other former German ships have been attacked, but escaped.

The announced sinkings of British ships for the year up to and including the week ended January 23 have been 1,033 vessels, of which 763 were over 1,600 tons and 270 were under that figure. The joint losses of France and Italy have averaged three to four large vessels weekly.

San Francisco's Preference for Clear Havanas

May Not Be So Pronounced as Formerly—Smokers "Shop Around" Selecting Various Types of Cigars—A Larger Demand for Manilas—Advantageous Advertising Campaign for Owls and Tom Keene—Bercovich Celebrates—Alexander Resigns from the Sales Force of the P. Lorillard Co.—Sol. Arkush Connects with Welcher Bros.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 23.—San Francisco and the Pacific Coast have long been known for their consumption of high grade clear Havana cigars. In fact the Coast, and particularly the city, has been smoking Havana products so long and so freely that it seems almost foolish to predict a change. However, from statements made by a number of prominent dealers who have been specializing in these brands, the market is changing rapidly to other brands. The cheaper types of Havana merchandise, the shade grown wrapper, Sumatra wrapped and many other less expensive styles are coming into vogue, and it may be that the manufacturers of the highest grades will have to look elsewhere for customers in the future. This change of taste has been brought about by the war and the consequent forced economy, together with the increased prices asked for the select goods. Some of these smokers of Havana will go into the camp of the Manila cigar, but it is most unlikely that a majority will content themselves that way. Meanwhile, smokers who have always patronized the cheaper cigars, are "shopping around." Some of them have easily passed over to the Manila, but it is too early as yet to say what proportion will become patrons of the 6 cent cigar. Opinions among dealers, both distributors and retailers, differ on that point. One dealer brought out the opinion that if the cigarettes had continued to sell their old sized packages at the odd penny price it would have helped to educate the public. But since so many of them have cut the size of package and sell for even money no help comes from that source. The Owl cigar and the Tom Keene are conducting good campaigns of education to help poularize the 6 cent proposition, but the people's vote has not yet been cast, and therefore cannot be counted.

William Bercovich, of the Capital Tobacco Co., of Sacramento, recently celebrated his tenth wedding anniversary at Sacramento. The entire family, consisting of 43 members, was present, and for the night cigars were forgotten.

H. A. Solomon, of Ehrman Bros. & Co., has just returned from Nevada, where he landed some very good orders.

Bauer Hess, in charge of Bayuk Bros.' goods, the Macacuba, Prince Hamlet and Havana Ribbon, is doing remarkably good work with the line. This week he is visiting the trade in Alameda.

A romance which started over the cigar country in the newsstand at the lobby of St. Marks Hotel in Oakland, culminated this week in the marriage of Miss Anna Glenn and Thomas Crawford, United States immigration agent. Crawford was a guest at the hotel, and Miss Glenn presided over the cigar counter. In this manner they met and Cupid concealed in a cigar box did the rest.

The warehouse of Glasser Brothers in this city was entered by burglars last week and several hundred dollars worth of cigars stolen.

Benito Nabara, an employe of the John Bollman Tobacco Co., is in a critical condition as the result of having his right arm crushed between two heavy rollers in a tobacco press. The man's arm was held in the press for more than twenty minutes while the mechanics dismantled the machine.

Black Bros., who had a cigar stand at 22 Montgomery street, have closed out their stock and retired from the location. Unfortunate lessees of the saloon back of the stand is given as the cause.

The Tobacco Co. of California announce a change in the weight of the package of the new Lucky Strike Roll Cut 13c. tins. This new 13c. tin (2 for 25c.) contains more tobacco than the old 10c. tin. The Lucky Strike Roll Cut in 5c. tins and 50c. glass humidors has been discontinued.

Doc Hoffman, manager of the Fritz Bros. Co., returned recently from a trip through the northern part of the State, and has left for the San Joaquin valley. A recent acquisition to his sales force is L. M. Walker, formerly of the Testa Cigar Co., who is now specializing on the Garth, one of the few nickel cigars left on this market.

Monroe Falkenstein, vice-president of S. Bachman & Co., left recently for the east where he will visit the various factories whose goods his firm distributes.

The In-B-Tween goes from $36 into the $37.50 class on Feb. 1.

H. L. Judell & Co. has just received a shipment of Fighting Bob Manilas, amounting to 500,000 cigars, in 4 sizes, by the K. K. line by way of Seattle. The company is very much pleased with the way in which repeat orders are coming in for this new leader.

E. C. Hull, of the sales organization of the General Cigar Co., is expected to visit this city early in February. He is now in the northwest.

Increased Trade of U. S. with South America

Trade of the United States with South America in the calendar year 1917 is two and one-half times as great as in the year preceding the war. A compilation by the National City Bank of New York shows that the imports from South America in 1917 aggregated in round terms 575 million dollars against 198 millions in the calendar year 1913, and that the exports to South America exceeded 300 million dollars against 147 millions in 1915 and only 91 millions in 1914, the year in which the war began.

South America's importing power declined sharply immediately following the beginning of the war. Her total imports from all parts of the world in 1913, the year preceding the war, aggregated slightly more than 1 billion dollars, while in 1914 they were but little more than 600 million dollars and have shown but very slight increases during the war. The bank's figures show the total imports of South America in 1916 as about 620 million dollars against over a billion in 1913, and that the total imports of that continent in 1917 approximate 650 million dollars. This indicates that this country is now supplying over 40 per cent. of the imports of South America against less than 15 per cent. in 1913, the year preceding the war.

The United States is also taking a much larger share of the exports of South America than formerly . In the year immediately preceding the war, 1913, only about 20 per cent. of the exports of that continent came to the United States, while the latest available figures of South American exports for 1917 indicate that we are now receiving fully 40 per cent. of her exports. The total imports from South America in 1917 were, in round terms, 575 million dollars against 428 millions in 1916, 322 millions in 1915, and 198 millions in 1913, the year preceding the war.

This large increase in our imports from South America occurs chiefly in wool, hides, copper and nitrate of soda. The wool imported from that continent in 1917 aggregates approximately 100 million dollars against but about 6 millions in 1913; nitrate of soda approximately 60 millions in 1917 against 22 millions in 1913; copper about 70 million dollars in 1917 against less than 15 millions in 1913; hides approximately 70 million dollars in 1917 against 27 millions in 1913; cocoa about 17 million dollars in 1917 against approximately 5 millions in 1913, and tin approximately 4 million dollars in 1917 against nothing in 1913. In coffee and rubber the increase is comparatively small, the total value of coffee imported from all South America being approximately 100 million dollars in 1917 against about 90 millions in 1913, and rubber 26 million dollars in 1917 against approximately 21 millions in 1913. The total value of merchandise imported from all South America in 1917 is about 175 per cent. greater than in 1913.

In exports to South America the increase occurs, of course, in a very large number of articles, chiefly manufactures. Cotton cloths aggregate for 1917 approximately 10 million dollars in value against slightly less than 3 millions in 1913; tin plate about ten million dollars in 1917 against less than one-half a million in 1913; automobiles about 7 million dollars against approximately 3 millions in 1913; coal over 5 million dollars in 1917 against over 1 million in 1913; printing paper approximately 3 million dollars in 1917 against less than a million in 1913; and wire approximately 5 million dollars in 1917 against less than 3 millions in 1913. Illuminating oil in 1917 shows a total slightly less in value than that of 1913, but lubricating oil and gasoline, a slight increase. In numerous manufactures of iron and steel, especially those for mining and electrical power plants, the increases are large, especially in the shipments to the Pacific coast of South America.

The chief increase in imports from the eastern frontage of South America occurs in wool and hides, while the principal increase from the west coast occurs in copper and nitrate of soda. The chief increase in exports to the east coast occurs in coal, cotton cloths and miscellaneous manufactures, and the principal increase in exports to the west coast occurs in mining machinery, railway supplies and miscellaneous manufactures. Many of these increases both in imports and exports are due in part to higher prices, though in a large proportion there is a marked increase in quantities of merchandise, both imported and exported.

This year may show much greater development of trade with South America.

Pantin's Purchase for the Portuguese Government

Pays 100,000,000 Reis for Leaf Tobacco in Havana—Bare Particulars of a $100,000 Deal—Unusually Big Crop Predicted in Remedios—Favorable Reports from Vuelta Abajo—Coal Shortage Delays Steamers—Cigar Factories Working Steadily.

HAVANA, January 25.—The Portuguese Consul-General, Leslie Pantin, has purchased for the Government he represents, leaf tobacco running into 9 ciphers, 100,000,000 reis, or $100,000 in U. S. currency. Otherwise, very little business was done on the leaf market here during the past week, although there are some important transactions pending.

American buyers in town have operated fairly well so far, and commission merchants here have executed orders for clients to a moderate extent.

One great drawback in forwarding goods is that ships take sugar, in preference to leaf tobacco and cigars, as happened last week again with the Ward Line steamer Mexico. The shortage of coal here delays departures of steamers of the Spanish Transatlantic Line. The Alfonso XIII has been held back 5 days on this account. Unless the steamers of this line are able to get enough coal here for the homeward passage, they may cease to come to Havana for a while.

News from the interior relative to the tobacco crop, is good or better, so far as the Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta regions are concerned. Fortunately some rains have fallen there, not as plentiful as in Santa Clara province, but enough to break the long prevailing drouth. Showers have benefited the growing crop. The outlook, therefore, is brighter.

The Partido crop reports are as hopeful as could be desired so far, unless the rains have spotted some of the ripe leaves, which were ready for cutting. This would affect wrappers to some extent, but as long as there is no scarcity in the quantity of wrappers to be harvested, the loss of a small portion, while a hardship for the veguero, would affect but little the total of the Partido crop.

The outlook for Remedios has improved wonderfully, as copious showers fell throughout Santa Clara province last week. A crop considerably larger than last year may be counted upon, barring, of course, any unforeseen accidents, which may happen to tobacco, until it is safely housed, and has gone through the first sweat in the piles. Experts say if there is another good shower in the month of February there will be a phenomenally large crop, larger, perhaps, than any ever harvested before. A very good feature of this year's crop is enough light grades, such as 6a and 8a, and which were almost entirely absent in the 1917 growth. This should please American manufacturers, as they can make good use of such styles for blending purposes. How prices will rule is, of course, an open question, which will have to be settled by the vegueros and the packers, as well as leaf dealers, and if the crop turns out so large as some people believe, more moderate figures will prevail.

Exports of cigars, per steamship Morro Castle, totaled 257 cases, containing 1,351,650 cigars, which were consigned, as follows, vi To Great Britain, 591,045; to United Stat 374,600; to Australia, 177,750; to Briti Africa, 96,000; to the Argentine Republ 33,650; to Canada, 22,750; to Uruguay, 46,7(to Brazil, 7,550; to France, 1,200, and to t French West Indies, 400 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco, from Havana, du ing the week ending January 15, 1918, total 5,748 bales, which were distributed to the fo lowing countries, viz.: To all ports of t United States, 2,844; to Canada, 498; to Gre Britain, 319; to the Argentine Republic, 1,2 and to Chile 796 bales.

Among the leaf buyers here during the pa week were: Emil Klein, of E. M. Schwarz Co., and of the José Lovera Co., of New Yorl Andres Diaz, of Andres Diaz & Co., of Tamp as well as Manuel Corral, the president Corral, Wodiska & Co., of Tampa. Emil Kle was accompanied by J. Cosio, the foreman the José Lovera Co., at Tampa. There r turned to Havana: Mark A. Pollack, Sidne Rothschild and Juan B. Diaz, and his bride.

The large cigar factories are as busy heretofore, having enough orders on hand fo the States, Great Britain, South Americ Australia, Spain, France, and elsewhere.

Romeo y Julieta undoubtedly is bus rushed, in fact, on delayed orders, besides re ceiving new requisitions right along. Ever vacant space in the big factory, at No. 2 Belas coain street, has been filled by additiona cigarmakers.

Partagas also is working under pressure t catch up on orders.

Punch is well supplied with orders fro Great Britain and the States, principally.

Belinda is doing well on exports beside having a fine trade with the interior of th island. We saw a large number of package for Guantanamo and Cienfuegos when w called at the factory. ROSAM.

Jake Slowberg's Conversion

A Belated Discovery That Advertising Pays

Jake Slowberg made good cigars, but his business methods were most conservative. He had a hobby—and he rode it with a vengeance.

Jake had friends who sold more cigars than he did, but he never would admit that they made so much money.

Jake wouldn't spend a nickel to get his name or the name of his goods in print. He always argued that the money he saved in this way more than made up for the extra business done by his competitors.

"What you ain't got you can't lose, and what you don't give away always draws interest," was Jake's philosophy.

Every year, regular as clock work, Jake used to figure up what he though his nearest competitor had spent for advertising. Estimating the amount, he either would put it out at six per cent interest or purchase something that would bring him comfort and pleasure. At such times he used to grin to himself when he thought of the headaches others contracted when looking at the checks that went to pay advertising bills.

For some time Jake had been anxious to buy an automobile. He wanted a real limousine, something costing about $8,000. To save the necessary sum had taken him two years' time. The first week in January, a few years ago, he was ready to buy the joy wagon. So he sent for a friend who was in the automobile business. Every time Jake spent a dollar he invariably threw in a sermon, airing his own philosophy.

"Sam," he said to the automobile salesman, "you take a private lesson by me and make yourself a big man if you tell your firm that they shouldn't advertise—it's like throwing money to ticket speculators—you get nothin' by it. See, Sam, I send for you to buy a regular Fifth Avenue auto. Gumstein advertises, and he rides in a flivver like I wouldn't have come to the door with coal."

"But we have to advertise, Jake. When a man thinks of automobiles we want him to think of our car, and if we don't keep our car before his eyes he will forget."

"So I should live, Sam. And all these years I thought you were a smart young man. I never spent a nickel in my life and I do a business."

"Maybe you do, Jake, but if you advertised maybe you would do ten times as much. Instead of having two girls in your office you would have twenty. And you would be doing more good by giving employment to others. You're like the squirrel that gets one nut, then buries himself with it and waits for winter. No, Jake, it takes energy and money to make money, and money makes others happy."

Jake wagged his head dubiously.

"Sam," he said, "if your father had not come to this country with my father I would never do business with you. And I'm not goin' to buy the auto because I see your advertisements, but because I hear everybody talking about it and what a fine machine you have. Advertisements mean nothing by me. Only this morning I chased five advertising fellers out of here what wanted me to throw money away. Here's my check, Sam. Take it or I might change my mind."

Sam took the check and left. Five minutes later Slowberg's salesman blew into the office with a frown on his face.

"Mr. Slowberg," he began, "I guess I'm through."

Slowberg hunched up his shoulders and glared at the salesman. Still in a state of perplexity, he rubbed the back of his head.

"By me, Sol, jokes don't go," Jake frowned. "Three o'clock and you're through. This n no bank."

"I'm chucking up the job. I'm done. quit," Sol retorted.

"You quit by me just when I tell you to get an order for two million cig Zowie! You're a traitor—a slacker—a go Maybe you go by Rosenstein to get a bi commission."

"Put a soft pedal on that treason s I'm not going to anybody. I went dow see Mr. Budder about that big order. has been in town three days and he had to the stuff in a hurry."

"Why didn't he write me or telepho Such an excuse—no better than my five-y old Rosie would make."

"Why, he said he looked in all the t papers, but he couldn't find your name, he placed the order elsewhere."

Jake gasped for breath and fell back in chair. He didn't speak or move until started for the door. Then he straighte up and said:

"Don't go, Sol. You're a fine salesman, I'll make it up."

Turning to his stenographer, Slowb whispered hoarsely:

"Miss Rapidsky, write to Sam Wiseb and tell him to bring back my check. T sent a letter to the big advertising agents tell them I want to see them quicker tha live eel can slide out of a dish. But d stamp the letters. I want to sign my o name."

HOW BUSINESS GROWS

S. Monday & Sons Secured 1,500 New Accounts for Blackstones—The Waitt & Bond Price List.

Waitt & Bond, Inc., of Boston, achieved a notably substantial increase of business during 1917. Greatly exceeding the distribution for 1916, sales for the past year were the "largest ever" recorded in the history of the excellent Blackstone cigars. Particularly in New York, Chicago and Detroit, the distribution of the famous brand has extended rapidly, of late. S. Monday & Sons, distributors of Blackstones on the greater New York market, secured 1,500 new accounts for the brand in four weeks. In Chicago, the Steele-Wedeles Co. reports constantly increasing sales of Blackstones. Lee & Cady in Detroit also are especially successful in developing business.

The Waitt & Bond policy always has been, is and will be to uphold quality. The intention of the manufacturers is that good value shall be offered in every Blackstone cigar. Conceding that the retailer is entitled to make a living profit, Waitt & Bond, Inc., prefer, in the present emergency, to accept a reduced profit for themselves, trusting in this they may be somewhat compensated by the added good will of the trade. The latest Waitt & Bond price list, made effective when the full war tax was imposed, is as follows:

WANT HIGHER FREIGHT ON TOBACCO STEMS.

WASHINGTON, January 29.—The following applications have been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission:

1291—Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co.—Cancellation of the c. l. rates on tobacco stems from Durham and Henderson, N. C., to Nashville, Tenn., published in tariff I. C. C. No. A-4664, class rates thereafter to apply.

Note: The reason advanced by the Seaboard for the cancellations is that it will serve to increase the rates to a class basis, and this for the reason that the southern connections of the Seaboard have objected to the continuance of these particular rates, and have asked the latter to cancel them. The rate of $4.83 per net ton which it is proposed to cancel is in effect via other routes.

REBATE TO P. LORILLARD CO.

WASHINGTON, January 29.—Drawback has been allowed on cigarettes manufactured by the P. Lorillard Co. at their factory at Jersey City, N. J., with the use of imported cigarette paper. The rate was effective on and after December 5, 1917.

The allowance is not to exceed the quantity of imported cigarette paper appearing in the exported cigarettes as shown by the sworn statement of the manufacturers.

Pacific Division of the Navy has been awarded to H. L. Judell & Co. The contract covers their full line of cigars.

J. J. Alexander, who has been in charge of the sales force for P. Lorillard & Co., on this coast for the past eight years, has severed his connection with the company and is preparing to go east to make other affiliations.

Sam Arkush, who has been the representative of the Martinez Havana Cigar Co., for many years is now with Welcher Bros. and will handle the "Cyro" line for them west of Denver. Mr. Arkush's large circle of acquaintance in that territory will insure his success in the new venture.

"Within Two Years"

An Employer Who Waited Too Long to Prosecute an Embezzling Employe

(Copyright 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

PITTSBURGH, Pa.

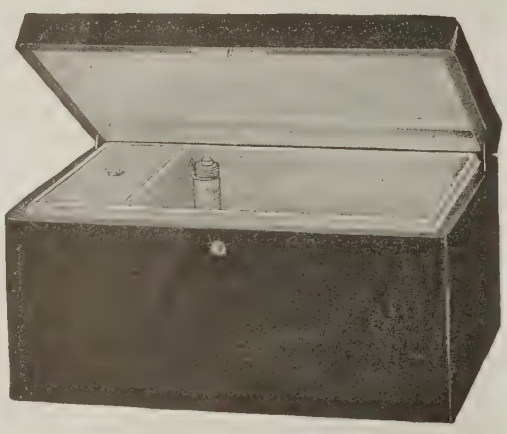
About three years ago we detected a bookkeeper and collector in our employ stealing money. When discovered, his embezzlement reached, as near as we could tell, about $1,600. He made a complete confession and he and his wife begged so hard that we made an arrangement with him that we were to keep him in our employ at a slightly reduced salary, the difference being credited to him to pay back what he had taken. We did not agree not to have him arrested, but said that as long as he did right, we would keep him on and do nothing against him. This was in the summer of 1914.

The man continued in our employ until last month, when we discovered him in what we thought was a very dishonorable action, which made it impossible for us to keep him on any longer. We therefore discharged him. Payments against the $1,600 he had taken had gotten it down to about $1,000. When we discharged him we made demand upon him for the payment of this, and as he did not pay it, we had him arrested. Our attorney was not in town when we did this, and we went ahead and issued the warrant ourselves. The bookeeper has hired counsel and evidently intends to make a fight, and when we took the case to our own lawyer, he told us we would lose it, as the time had expired when we could prosecute him. I cannot understand such business and write you in the hope you can enlighten me.

E. R. B. & BRO.

This correspondent's counsel is quite right. The prosecution of the bookkeeper is barred by the lapse of time. Under the Pennsylvania law, a warrant would have to be sworn out within two years after the embezzlement was discovered.

For the benefit of this correspondent, and also of any other reader who may be hazy about what "limitation of actions" means, I will devote this article to an explanation, keeping particularly in mind the bearing of the doctrine upon conditions arising in business.



Every State in the Union has a law providing that legal action, no matter what kind, must be brought within a certain time, or it cannot be brought at all. Different periods are provided in all these statutes for different kinds of actions. For instance, an ordinary suit on a book account must usually be brought within six years. If you have a customer arrested for stealing from your stock and this proves to be a mistake and the customer sues you for malicious prosecution, this must usually be done within two years. The same period (two years) is usually given to such suits as one for damages if you run down somebody with your delivery wagon, and to all other cases partaking of the nature of civil wrongs, as distinct from contracts.

Criminal prosecution such as this correspondent mentions also must be brought within certain periods, usually one or two years, depending on the character of the . I cannot be any more definite than this, cause every State handles the matter to it itself; in other words, each one has a law its own.

This law didn't always exist. Under old English law it was considered that i man had a right to sue, or prosecute, so body to-day, that right would exist until was used. And there is much to be said that view, but there is another, viz., tha man who is liable to be made a defendant a civil or criminal action has a right to ha the thing settled while the case is reasonal fresh, so that he can get his witnesses a his facts together, and make the best possi defense. It isn't altogether fair to w twenty or thirty years before suing a m for a book account, or to hold a prosecut such as this correspondent describes, o the poor victim's head indefinitely. So t law says you must get after your claim wit in a certain time, or you are done. And c tainly the law is sufficiently generous wh it gives you six years to sue a customer f an unpaid account.

The period that the law gives you alwa has a certain time to begin. That time is t first date you could have gone ahead. In t prosecution which the Pittsburgh cor spondent tried to bring, the period began run from the date of the discovery of t embezzlement. In a suit on book account, on a note or a protested check, it begins run from the date it is due. In cases li damage suits for a delivery wagon collisi

COAL TRADE OF THE WORLD

The proposed reduction in exportation of oal from the United States suggested by Dr. arfield, will probably not affect the rank of ie United States as a coal exporting country. compilation by The National City Bank of ew York shows that the United States now olds second rank as a coal exporter. Prior the war Germany ranked second in the list coal exporting countries, and the United tates third, but with the cutting off of Ger- any's export trade the United States took econd rank as a coal exporter, though far ehind Great Britain.

Exports of coal from Great Britain in 1913 ere 93 million tons against 40 millions from ermany and 29 millions from the United tates, these figures including in all cases the unker coal" supplied to vessels engaged in oreign trade; in 1916 Great Britain 52 mil- on tons; United States 31 million tons.

Great Britain, Germany and the United tates have supplied for many years the bulk the coal entering international trade. The otal amount of coal passing out of the coal roducing countries of the world in 1913 was out 200 million tons, of which about 40 illions was "bunker coal," supplied to vessels ngaged in international trade for their use the oceans, while a considerable percentage that recorded as "exports" went to the orld's coaling stations where it is supplied steamers. The coal burned by steam vessels on the oceans aggregates in normal times about $250,000,000 a year in value out of a total of nearly $700,000,000 worth passing out of the coal producing countries of the world.

The principal coal exports of the world in 1913, including that used for bunker purposes, were Great Britain 93 million tons, Germany 40 millions, United States 29 millions, Austria-Hungary 9 millions, Belgium and Canada about 5½ millions each, Netherlands slightly less than 5 millions, Japan nearly 4 millions, British South Africa 2½ millions and Australia 2 millions.

The fact that a comparatively small number of countries outside of Europe and the United States have any considerable coal for exportation has compelled shipping interests to establish many coaling stations in all parts of the world, but especially in the Orient, and the tropics off the coast of South America and Southern Africa. The most important of the coaling stations aside from those of Europe are at Algiers, Port Said, Aden, Colombo, Ceylon, Singapore, Hong Kong, Moji and Yokohama, Japan; Montevideo and Valparaiso in South America; Durban, South Africa; Sydney and Melbourne, Australia; and Wellington, New Zealand. The United States Government has established since the opening of the Panama Canal one of the most important coaling stations of the world, with large supplies of coal in stock and the most modern facilities for transferring coal to vessels.

Much of this 200 million tons of coal exported by the coal producing countries of the world goes to adjacent territories and a smaller quantity than might be supposed over-sea. In the case of Great Britain for instance, which, as already indicated, exported in 1913 over 90 million tons of coal including that for bunker purposes, about 13 millions went to France, 10 millions to Italy, 9 millions to Germany. In fact, about two-thirds of the coal exported from Great Britain in 1913, the latest normal year, went to European countries and the remainder chiefly to the great coaling stations of the world. In the case of the United States also a large proportion of the coal exported goes to adjacent countries. Of the 32 million tons of coal passing out of the United States in the fiscal year 1917, over 17 millions went to Canada, while another 8 millions passed into the bunkers of vessels engaged in foreign trade. This 17½ millions exported to Canada is the largest in the history of our trade with that country, and is valued at $58,000,000, about one-fourth of the quantity being anthracite. Italy ranks second in the list of countries to which we export, the total to Italy in 1916 being nearly 3 million tons. Cuba ranks third, the exports to that island being about 1½ million tons in 1917, Panama about one-half million tons, most of which, however, is for the coaling station at that point, Argentina and Brazil about three-fourths of a million tons each, and Uruguay 100 thousand tons. The quantity of coal exported from the United States in 1917 was larger in both quantity and value than in any earlier year in the trade, the total quantity being about 32 million tons, including bunker coal, and the total value $113,000,000.

In 1913, the year preceding the war, the quantity of coal exported from the United States including that for bunker purposes was 28 million tons valued at $89,000,000. To South America the total exports of coal in 1917 were nearly 2 million tons against less than a half million in 1913. The value of coal and coke sent out of the United States since the beginning of 1900 exceeds $1,000,000,000.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Wellington advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

Don't let another season go by without carrying a full line of W. D. C. pipes—the Wellington in particular. Tie up with the largest pipe manufacturer in America and your pipe business will grow in a way you never thought possible.

Gladly will we send you further information on request.

TOBACCO CROP NOTE

WASHINGTON, January 28.—In o nection with the January crop repo th Department of Agriculture says con r ing tobacco:

"The Franklin County, Ill., gr w writes: The tobacco was on good e ridge land. The rows were about 3 e apart and plants about the same dis n apart in the rows. The crop was s tivated ten times, hoed three or o times, primed and tapped fourte sixteen leaves.

"The Bracken County, Ky., gr w writes that his production was 0 pounds on three-fourths of an a equivalent to 2,726.6 pounds per acr good seed bed was prepared. ground was in excellent condition transplanting. The ground was lai in rows 3½ feet wide and the p were placed 22 inches apart in The weeks were kept cut out an tobacco plowed almost each week. this same farm was produced in 19,280 pounds from 10 acres. Th equivalent to 1,928 pounds per ac big yield for so large a field.

"The Washington County, T grower writes: My 1916 tobacco of 4 acres weighed 8,438 pounds an 1915 crop of 4 acres weighed pounds. In 1914 I made 5,300 poun 2 acres. I have been growing tob for only eight years and have made less than 2,000 pounds, excep first year." Continuing he writes his standards have been to have p of good vigorous plants; to be rea the proper time to transplant in a deep well-prepared seed bed with p of available plant food; to trans when the ground is not too awfully as by so doing the plants will live grow off better and the ground wil be packed down so badly; to make first cultivation a very deep one so tear up the soil that has been pa down in transplanting; to follow frequent shallow cultivations up the time when one can not get thr without tearing off the leaves; to all filth down; keep the worms sukers off; and not let it bloom to as soon as the bud forms, take it to not cut the tobacco until it gets and so handle it very carefully; t hang it too close together in the to not hang it too close to the gr as it cures better higher up; an give the barn plenty of ventilation.

Fewer dealers are getting tobacco licenses from the city clerk of Huntingdon, West Va., this year. Figures for the last six months just compiled at city hall, show. Last year, July 1, 1916, to July 1, 1917, 322 such licenses were issued, which is about 50 more than officials expect this year. During the last six months, July 1, 1917, to January 1, 1918, 243 licenses to sell tobacco were given out, City Clerk K. L. Hamilton announced Monday. "Most of the applicants for licenses tell us that they're selling tobacco only as a convenience."

Freight embargoes and weather delays to freight shipments have thrown a heavy new burden on the mail service by adding thousands of tons to the parcels post. Otto Praeger, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, said Tuesday that steamers were being used for the first time in carrying parcels post in an effort to forestall congestion and that various changes have been made to speed up the service. Owing to missed connections and weather conditions, deliveries now are from twelve to twenty-four hours late between New York and Chicago, and from twenty-four to forty-eight hours to the Pacific coast. Delays to south-bound shipments are due more to shortage of cars, commandeered for military use, than to ice and snow.

If Kicks Are Made Regarding Business

CHICAGO, January 27.—It is possible to discover a heap of complaints here this week. But what's the use?

One large Clark street saloonkeeper hung out the following sign last Monday: "Our Country, may it always be wet, but wet or dry, my country closed 'til Tuesday morn."

Al Johnson of the Ramesis sales force is here putting "them over." Herbert Coe of the Melachrino staff has returned from his visit to New York.

Stanton and Co., 30 W. Washington street, have used the newspapers in calling attention to a special sale they are running to make more popular the Eden, Calixto Lopez and Baronita brands of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co. During the sale goods are sold to the consumers at wholesale prices. The cigar department is owned by Tobin & Co.

The Sanchez Grande mild havana, made by the Congress Cigar Co. is "catching on," in fine shape. Wherever placed this brand has become a steady seller.

E. T. McGuire, formerly employed by Ivan Ries & Co., at 104 North 5th avenue, is no longer connected with this firm. He is again with Fay Lewis & Bro. Co. and is covering his old stamping ground, the State of Wisconsin.

Sig Meyer, who represents F. Lozano Son & Co., has taken on new territory. He will cover parts of Michigan, and Missouri, in connection with his western field.

Clark Cutler is expecting a visit from Jose Diaz very shortly. "Cut" is going to introduce his boss to the many customers of the Preferred Havanna Tobacco Co. in this market. Diaz will have to step some as C. C. is no slow traveler.

Sam Ladensohn, who ran a retail store at 1139 Argyle avenue, has gone under, owing a bunch of money. Some of the creditors got wind of what was coming early in December and this helped to hasten things to the closing point. Fred Oakes of E. H. Gato & Co. was the largest creditor. His claim being around $1,200.

Thomas Carpas, a collector for the Raklios system of lunch-rooms was held up as he was entering the commissary at 125 West Ohio street and robbed of $1,500. Carpas was badly beaten and had to be removed to the hospital. He had just collected the daily receipts of nine restaurants.

Emil Weeger is hard at work boosting the city trade for the Falk Tobacco Co. Weeger was formerly a retail clerk and won his spurs as a missionary salesman you see a lot of his firm's goods all over the territory he covers.

Egyptian Deities are heavily advertised in all the daily papers.

Scottie cigars selling at 2 for 5 cents and packed in tins of 50 each are now on sale in the many retail stores of Albert Breitung. Another new offering with this house is Breitung's Hand Made extra quality stogies which retail 2 for 5 cents.

Many Blanc Co. distribute the Flor de Bana Brand made by Mendel & Co. You see them in a lot of cases.

The retail stores of the Best & Russell branch of the General Cigar Co. are all boosting the new "laddies" size of Robt. Bu little cigars that retail 10 for 25 cents. package is most attractive and is provin ready repeater.

The Certificate 5 cent cigar of Best Russell Co. is now being made in Evansv Ind. It has a large sale with the drug resturant trade in the city.

The first shipment of Henry the Fou mild Havanas lasted one day with the tributers McNeil & Higgins who had to in for an express shipment. This size C House packed 100 to the box, sells for $6 to the retail trade and is sold for 10 c straight.

S. Anargyros is out with a very nifty which sets forth to great advantage the 25 cigarette a brand of high grade cigaret put on the market last fall. You see the n sign in all the windows.

Breitung's Stub Brevas Havana Merits Henry Weaver cigars have all been advan to the 6 cent class. They are big sellers w the Breitung chain of stores.

Taking life—or anything else—just as came, Chicago's two most patient band waited thirty-five minutes a few nights a in Lee Pedigo's drug store 44-55 North Cl street for the proprietor to return from neighborhood bank. As customers ente they were robbed and disposed of behind prescription case and when Pedigo came he was relieved of his cash and the robb departed after taking a handful of ciga The loss suffered by Pedigo and his patr was $120.90.

The sympathy of the trade is extended Lee Smitz, a well known south side cigar and partner in the firm of L. H. Smitz & at 51st and Calumet avenue, who lost mother last week. Mrs. Smitz was 80 ye of age.

"Not the Same Old Game"

A Lament Made in Canada

The raw leaf market is generally an infallible thermometer by which the temperature of the trade may be gauged. Speaking of this raw leaf situation, one big manufacturer expressed himself to the Journal in this manner:

"It would be almost humorous, if it were not so serious, the way the raw leaf market conditions have changed in the past few years. Formerly we were besieged with the leaf travelers. It seemed as if we could hardly turn around before one would be in to see us. Now they never come. That is, the majority of them never do. Those who do talk turkey to us.

"With the leaf men now, it is generally a 'take-it-or-leave-it' attitude, when they used to consider it a favor if we'd give them an order. Then, too, under the new conditions the raw leaf men in some cases don't even buy in Cuba until we have put up our money.

"It used to be that we had attractive credit terms held out, but now the jobber takes our money and buys for us. Then he wants us to take over the purchase on the docks at Havana. The dealer not only passes up buying until he has already resold the tobacco, but he doesn't want to undertake the water risk between Havana and New York. In other words, we put up our money, the jobber buys for us in Cuba, then the tobacco and all risks are ours.

"What would the manufacturer give for the good old days when the traveller always tried to unload as much as possible.

"Truly this is a merry time to be in the cigar manufacturing game. We have no longer courteous appeals from New York houses for our business. Why, houses that used to be glad to receive a firm's check will turn up their noses at anything like it now, and we have to buy New York exchange to liquidate our obligations."—Canadian Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

THEFTS OF GOODS IN TRANSIT.

An unusually large amount of thieving is going on "somewhere en route" between Minneapolis and eastern factories, according to reports made by consignees. It is not believed that the thefts are to be attributed to railroad employes, but that they are the result of cars being side-tracked along the road in out-of-the-way places, thus making thefts much easier than under ordinary shipping conditions. Delays in shipping are also expensive otherwise. Many hundreds of dollars have been paid manufacturers by Minneapolis houses, in order to take advantage of discounts, while the goods in many cases are not received for several weeks after payment has been made.—Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

CHIRPS FROM CHICAGO

James Sheridan who joined the city sales staff of J. & B. Moos the first of the year is cleaning up the north side trade. Jim is out to establish a record.

Sam Dores is the man behind the counter at Moe Seigel's popular retail store 230 North State street. He knows how to make friends and also how to sell cigars.

Still another hold up, Andrew Marck of 2875 Lincoln avenue lost $74 when bandits paid him a visit and Ed. S. Wirth who runs a drug store at 3365 Broadway was touched for $25.

Harry Milo Adams who covered this field for the Cameron Tobacco Co. is no long connected with that firm. Adams has a l of friends in Chicago. He placed the Camer brands of smoking tobaccos with ma dealers here.

V. A. Scott formerly with the Universi Club is now behind the counter of the ma store of Albert Breitung. H. S. Hatton is new man in at the Sherman Hotel store. H was formerly employed by the United Cig Stores Co.

James Gleason who owns a retail cig store at 111 West Erie street was visited l hold up men who cleaned him out of cash a smokes.

Judge Gemmill fined Attorney Jacob Ka lan $5 for smoking a cigarette in his cour room, but excused the lawyer on explanati that the "sig" was a gift from a friend.

Ed Morgan is still selling Algeo cigars a has a lot of accounts around the city. H does the heavy work for Algeo & Co. t makers of the brand.

M. B. Seigel says he is going to open new store in the near future. Moe is one our live wires and always has his eyes op for good locations.

"Buy your smokes now for Sunday a Monday." It's funny to read these signs b that is what greets you on Saturdays in all t loop stores. The dealers are not going let any trade get away if they can help it fuelless days. H. L. H.

Winston, Harper, Fisher Co. of Minneapolis, are supplying the trade with neatly printed cards directing attention to the causes which have contributed to the advanced cost of cigars, these being intended for use by the retailers as a help to smoothing the wrinkles out of trade when kicks are made. One of these cards calls attention to the fact that wages "are the highest ever paid"; that there has been a "material increase in the cost of boxes, labels, and freight"; incidentally mentions the war tax as a contributing factor, and concludes with the statement that "the advance could be met by lowering the quality at the smoker's expense, but this has not been done." The final words in the card are: "No smoker should try to dodge these facts." While the arguments apply to many cigars, the card is utilized as an advertisement for the Tom Keene brand.

More than 100 workmen walked out of the E. H. Gato cigar factory at Key West, Thursday morning, because the management refused to pay them twice a week instead of once a week, as is the custom. This demand had been made earlier in the week, but the management would not grant it because it is said to be contrary to the rules of the manufacturers' association. When the demand was not complied with the entire force left work and when outside the building appointed a committee to confer with the management. And the difficulty was settled.

The New York State Department of Labor reports that the food, liquors and tobacco group in December employed 1 per cent fewer workers but paid 1 per cent more wages than in November. Only three industries reported increases in activity. On account of the sugar situation and a general drop in the business, groceries employed a smaller force than at any time since November, 1914. In a comparison with December, 1916, there were increases of 5 per cent in the number of employees and 18 per cent in the wage payments.

The following notice has been placed in the rooms of the Hotel Radisson, Minneapolis: "Because of the greatly increased cost of fuel, labor and general operating expenses, the management is obliged to increase room rates by the addition of ten per cent to present prevailing rates. The order for the increase of rates will go into effect on the 21st day of January, 1918, and remain in effect until further notice."

Miss I. M. Shork has surrendered the lease of the store which she opened a few years ago, upon leaving the West Hotel, and as a result loses the fixtures and in fact her entire investment except the stock and the illuminated sign. "I shall be obliged to begin all over again," she philosophically says. The rental of the store has been $170 a month and the landlord refused to reduce it although it is reported that he now offers the place on a three months' trial at $100 a month, with no obligation to continue beyond that period if the business does not prove satisfactory. Miss Shork on Tuesday took over the cigar stand at the Hotel Majestic on Seventh street.—Cigar and Tobacco Journal.

Bills Pending in the New York Legislature

How Do They Happen to Strike You?

Service of Summons and Orders on Factory Owners.

Sen. Int. No. 97, Pr. 97 (Mr. Boylan).
Assem. Int. No. 99, Pr. 99 (Mr. Donohue).

To amend Section 69 of the Labor Law in relation to service of orders and summons upon owners of factory premises, by adding the following proviso:

"When such owner is within the jurisdiction of the court charged with the trial of violations of the labor law, service of any order or regulation issued under the provisions of this chapter or any summons from any court having jurisdiction shall be upon him and not upon the agent. If, however, the owner is not within the jurisdiction of the court having such jurisdiction, the court may upon proof by affidavit of that fact, direct that such service be made upon the agent of such owner."

Under the provisions of the Labor Law, the owner of every factory is required to register such factory with the State Department of Labor within 30 days after commencing business, giving name of owner, home address, the business address and the name under which the business is carried on.

Automatic Vending Machines.

Sen. Int. No. 82, Pr. 82 (Mr. Carroll).

To amend the General Business Law in relation to registering vending machines, by the addition of new Section 37.

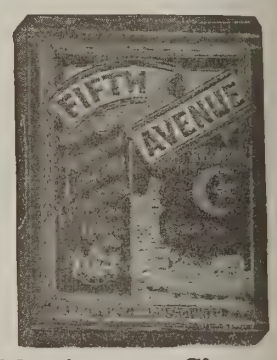
Provides that all stationary or portable machines which are used in any public or private place for exposing or offering for sale by any automatic device or mechanism, any goods, wares or merchandise, or the rendering of any service of any kind or description, shall be registered with the Secretary of State. Registration fee, $2 a year. The registry number assigned to such machine must be conspicuously displayed thereon.

The operating of such machines without registration is made a misdemeanor and the violator is subject to a fine of ten dollars a day for each day such machine is unlawfully operated.

State Wage Commission.

Sen. Int. No. 93, Pr. 93 (Mr. Wagner).

To create a State Wage Commission consisting of three members, to be appointed by the Governor, with the Commissioner of Labor as an ex-officio member, without vote.



The Commission is empowered to investigate wages and working conditions in any occupation in the State in order to determine whether living wages are paid to women and minors employed therein. Such investigation shall also be made at the request of not less than one hundred persons engaged in any occupation in which any women or minors are employed.

The terms 'living wage" or "living wages" are defined to mean wages sufficient to supply the necessary cost of living and to maintain the worker in health, and the words "minimum wage" or minimum wages" are made synonymous with "living wage" "living wages."

After conducting an investigati if the Commission has reason to b lieve that a substantial number women and minors employed in t occupation investigated receive le than living wages, the Commissi shall establish a wage board consisti of an equal number of representativ of employers in the occupation question and of persons to represe such employees in said occupation a of one or more disinterested perso appointed by the Commission to re resent the public.

Such wage boards are to report the findings, with recommendations, such Commission, and public hearin on such reports are to be held by t

Now Floods Are Feared

LOUISVILLE, Ky., January 30.—Cities d towns along the tributaries of the io having their origin in the moun- ns of southeastern Kentucky and east- e. Tennessee were today anxiously tching the progress of floods which ried on their crests great quantities ice.

Flood conditions were reported in ctically every important stream in the te, and extensive damage had been he by the grinding ice the water car- d with it. The Big Sandy was gorged its mouth at Catlettsburg and the wa- was backed up for many miles. The ntucky River was rising along its er reaches and ice was gorged just ve the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad. Some subsidence of the water was re- ted on the upper stretches of this eam as well as in the Cumberland er, down which floods were carrying at quantities of ice toward Nashville l cities further down stream. The een River also was reported on a mpage, and was rising along its entire er length.

At Paducah at the mouth of the Tennessee the great gorge which had formed in the Ohio just above the city was being anxiously watched for signs of its breaking up. It is growing every hour, according to reports, and the prospect is that if it breaks suddenly it will carry away all the river shipping still left unharmed in the Paducah ice harbor after approximately $1,000,000 worth of craft were swept from their moorings yesterday. Paducah citizens are also keeping an anxious eye upon the Tennessee River, down which stream an immense ice gorge is reported to be coming, and which is expected to reach there some time Wednesday.

CINCINNATI, January 30.—The great Ohio River ice gorge broke at Maysville, Ky., 62 miles above Cincinnati, at 10:15 o'clock last night, according to the Chesapeake & Ohio operator at that point. Telegraph operators at Concord, Manchester and Glenn, just east of Maysville, say the ice began moving early in the evening, and was going fast at midnight, carrying river craft of all descriptions. The river began rising at Cincinnati at midnight.

MORGANTOWN ISOLATED.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., January 30.—With the exception of two districts of the State, the danger of disastrous floods which threatened West Virginia is believed to have passed. The city of Morgantown, on the Monongahela River, was isolated from the outside world last night, with the exception of a single shaky telephone wire. The city was communicated with during the evening for the first time in 48 hours.

In the Winding Gulf coal region landslides and washouts are reported to have demoralized railroad traffic, and it is expected that it will be some time before the movements of coal from that region can be resumed. The Kanawha River, after reaching a stage of 27 feet here at 8 o'clock last night, began to recede and the possibility of a flood in the Kanawha valley was believed to have passed. The damage is estimated at less than $15,000.

An ice gorge has formed in the Monongahela River, stretching from three miles south of Morgantown to six miles north of that city. Efforts were being made to dynamite the gorge, but without success.

ICE GORGES IN GREEN RIVER.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., January 30.—Reports reaching the local weather observer from points along Green River indicate that ice gorges are causing heavy damage along the stream. Two steamboats and several small gasoline boats, trapped in the ice, have been destroyed. A gorge has formed above Calhoun, Ky., and threatens many large Evansville packets moored near the mouth of the river.

His tobacco is of a peculiar badness, at its best, and if the imitation is designed to be like the original, only cheaper and inferior, it is no wonder that Fritz-in-the-hole had reason to complain. But this, not for the badness of the substitute alone. Cartoonists picture the German with a porcelain pipe; it is an anachronism. His staff of life is the "zehnpfenniger" cigar. He loves it even more than he does its companion krug of beer. If the war has taken it away from him, there is warrant for the stories of unrest in the country.—Baltimore News.

Another plot to bring death and suffering to the apprentices at the naval station at Newport, R. I., was halted Tuesday night, when cooks at the barracks discovered a large quantity of ground glass in meat balls. Investigation showed that a great part of the meat prepared for the evening mess contained glass particles, and as a result the entire meat supply for the one meal was destroyed. Previously, it had been intimated that "injurious substances" were discovered in candy intended to be sold to sailors.

Max Green, a Chilliwack cigar dealer, who formerly ran a store in Vancouver, B. C., is plaintiff in an action in the Supreme Court against Mr. and Mrs. Seth Witton, of Vanguard, Sask. Plaintiff claims damages for the non-fulfillment of an agreement entered into in June, 1917, for the purchase of Witton's business in Murrayville. Green alleges that he paid over $100 to bind the deal and started to sell off the stock of his Vancouver store at a loss, only to find later that he could not secure the Murrayville business. The defence is that the deal was tied up by creditors.

SPECTOR BROS.' PROTEST OVERRULED

WASHINGTON, January 28.—Relative to custom ruling protested by Spector Broth of Chicago, the question was whether certa unstemmed leaf tobacco was dutiable wrapper or filler. G. A. McClelland, the Ge eral Appraiser rendering an opinion in t case, says:

"The bales of tobacco in question we found to be mixed wrapper and filler. It held that they were properly classified as co taining more than 15 per cent of wrapp tobacco at $1.85 per pound under paragrap 181 and 182."

"Non-Essential Industry"—There Is None

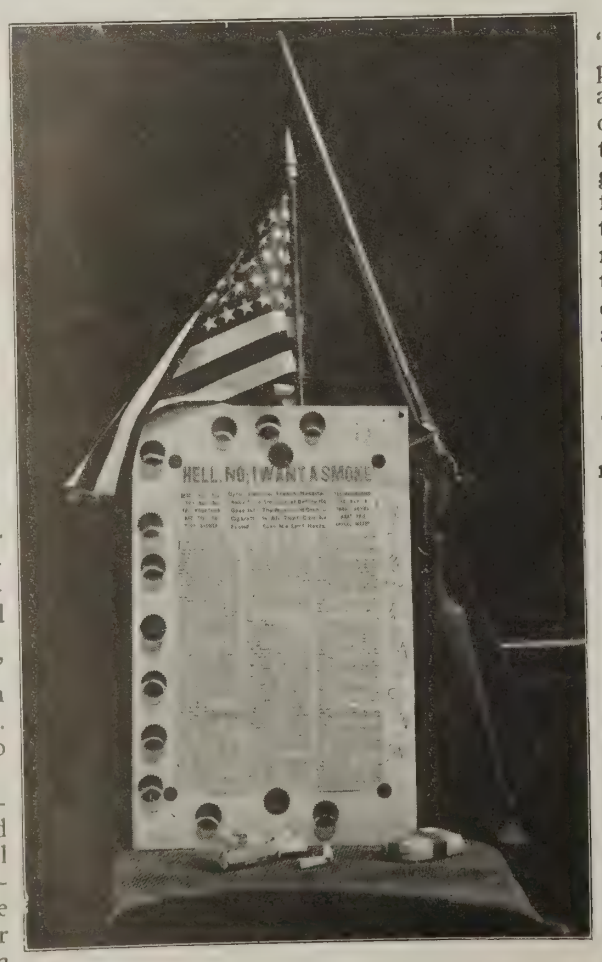
ndustries Which Do Not Minister to Human Safety, Comfort or Happiness Fail to Survive—So-Called Non-Essential Industries Support 10,000,000 Workers—Facts That the Fuel Administration Is Carefully Considering

By P. B. NOYES

Director of Conservation, U. S. Fuel Administration

ou all know that as the war has pro-ssed the limitation of the so-called "non-sential industries" has been much under cussion, owing to the scarcity of war es-tials of three or four kinds. Fuel may haps be considered the most basic, but we faced with the scarcity of transporta-n, of materials and of men.

always visualize such a problem for my-f. It has seemed to me that the area, as it re, needed for war has been growing more idly than most men outside of Washing-have appreciated. There is not to-day om enough—neither equipment, nor mater-s, nor men enough—to carry on success-ly a war like this one and at the same ie support a business boom. The first ng is to decide just how large a space non-r business may occupy and still leave el-w room to fight this war as it should be ght.



By visualizing the problem, as I have said, becomes immediately evident that some-ng in the way of co-ordinating industrial ivity is absolutely necessary. It becomes dent that such limitation is not up to the cision of some department or officer of the vernment; it is something to be done, if we uld win the war, and the only question t is how to do it with the least inconveni-ce to business, and in such a way as to best eserve all our industries for the days of ace.

I think it very unfortunate that this discus-n was first started in the newspapers un-r the misleading description of "non-essen-l industries." The misuse of words led some very dangerous conclusions.

There are no "non-essential industries." dustries which do not minister to human fety, comfort or happiness fail to survive. rtainly no industries are non-essential to e workmen engaged therein.

This false nomenclature, suggesting some-ing unimportant to the nation at large, led a hasty assumption in fairly influential arters that the so-called "non-essential in-stries" can be properly "swept from the ard," to make room for the war game. For moment, the fact was overlooked that ten illion workers are dependent on these "non-ssential industries"; and that thirty-five to fifty billions of the country's capital is tied up in their operation, and that with a structure so interdependent as the modern industrial and fiscal systems, one has only to attack the business community in the spirit of: "Cut off the non-essential industries" to insure a crash accompanied by the most wide-spread unemployment and insolvency ever experienced in this country.

In considering the relations of different industries for the purpose of limitation, the true distinction is between industries directly essential to the war and those which are not.

It Gets Smokes for Soldiers

Displayed in the Store of F. C. Hoeckel, Denver

Considered from this angle, every one with the future of the country at heart would study how to save these non-war industries for peace. The future prosperity and safety of the country is going to depend upon our emerging from the war with an economic and industrial system which can carry the support of one hundred million people.

The fact is that this is no time on the one hand for unthinking talk of cutting off "non-essentials," nor on the other for industries not essential to the war to hold back their share of the sacrifices. Government and industry must get together and have a perfectly clear understanding, first, of why limitation is necessary; second, where that limitation will do the least harm, and then work out a plan which both will support enthusiastically.

A number of large industries have greatly assisted us in working out our plans by voluntarily submitting specifications for limiting their own industries, and from their volunteering has come a plan which I wish to submit to-day. I wish to submit it in enough detail so that we can begin work at once, if it is approved, because winter is on.

The plan is this: It has been defined as a "voluntary limitation of the least essential portion of each existing industry," first, by agreement with such industry, or a majority of those engaged in it, and then having obtained this majority assent, restriction by government order. The order is necessary for two reasons. In the first place, participation by the government makes such arrangements legal; and in the second place, where there are many manufacturers in a given industry few dare restrict unless in some way assured that all their competitors must restrict also.

I will illustrate this plan by one or two cases which have come up in the last week.

Men representing two-thirds of one large industry came to Washington and volunteered a reduction, in this case specified in hours of running, which would amount to twenty per cent of their present speed. Since this industry uses four and a half million tons of coal per year, this voluntary reduction would save nearly a million tons, besides relieving the railroads of a large amount of freight. In this case, the representatives of the industry proposed to look over their various lines and decide which could be best spared. The government was to make the agreed on "reduction in time" effective by specifying it in coal. We would order not only that twenty per cent less fuel should be burned this year, but would include in the order detailed restrictions to conserve the real interests of the industry.

In another case an industry has offered to discontinue for the period of the war their less essential items of manufacture. These items may be interesting and profitable to the manufacturer, but their discontinuance will do the least harm to the industry in the end, and so they are selected for sacrifice. Eighty or ninety per cent of the industry having decided it practical to discontinue this part of their product, the government will come in and make the restriction uniform and one hundred per cent effective. The order will say to all:

"No coal shall be burned for the manufacture of such and such items."

Restriction of electric signs, which has had much discussion, and has been tried for a month past with unclassifiable exceptions which could not be enforced, bids fair to be settled in this same way. First, by voluntary understanding, and then by an order that on so many nights a week there shall be no illumination.

To return to the practical steps in carrying out this plan of restriction: Each industry should discuss their common interests, analyzing their lines minutely, and deciding where reductions can best be made. They should then agree with the Fuel Administration as to their share of the coal saving, which means more than coal saving, since transportation is over-taxed and such reductions save not only coal transportation but much merchandise transportation.

The methods of reducing should be up to the industries. The amount should be agreed upon between the industries and the Fuel Administration, and in this connection I would suggest that the less an industry contributes toward the war, the more it should contribute in the self-limitation.

Having settled these details, having corresponded with us to make sure that the industry and the government are together on the general plan, authorized representatives should come to Washington to work out some detailed agreement, which would then be put in the form of an order binding on all engaged in this line of manufacture.

Daniel Willard has said very happily that the real test of democracy comes when individuals make those sacrifices voluntarily which an autocracy would force them to make. The much-advertised restriction of "non-essentials" is a case in point. Here is a test as to whether this meeting is a success, whether the idea of appointing representatives of an industry to meet the government is a success. Can our great American industries do voluntarily what they have feared the government would do by force?

The details of this plan have not yet been worked out, but enough has been decided so that work can be started at once in connection with the industries represented here. You can start figuring out your just contribution to the country's war resources. I will not go over the old list, which is known so well, of the things that will win the war, but one thing is certain. The government being absolutely committed to win the war, there will be government limitation of the consumption of coal and other necessities if some system of self-limitation is not found successful.

In my opinion government limitation would necessarily be clumsy and would be a calamity. We cannot afford such destruction. We must find a way by which the men who know each industry will make the diagnosis, will decide what should be done, and let government simply come in to make the restrictions uniform and universal.

I want to say in conclusion that with a very little figuring, a million tons here, five hundred thousand there, two hundred thousand, etc., it is possible to see where the fifty million ton shortage can be easily provided. I believe that American industry can, without serious injury to itself, show the government more than fifty million tons of reduction.

American business men want to know what they can do to help the United States in the war. Each wants to coordinate his part of the country's business with the government so as to make them both more effective.

They also are interested—and very rightly at such a time—in finding out what changes are necessary in their business, what the future has in store.

There is a cheap cynicism which we all, I suppose, adopt, as we grow older, that if we want to get anything practical from other people we must appeal to their self-interest. To a certain extent, I have appealed to self-interest, and I ought undoubtedly to appeal to self-interests in discussing the matter. But in spite of this cynicism, I cannot, at a time like this, put the appeal on such a basis. I must, in fairness, put my appeal squarely on the grounds of patriotism. I believe that the Fuel Administration can get the whole fifty million tons of coal needed on that basis.—The Nation's Business.

SOON WILL BE READY

International Cigar Banding Machines—Work on Which Was Delayed by "Priority Orders."

Priority accorded machinery necessary for war purposes, caused work for the International Cigar Banding Machine Co. to be delayed quite a time. The better to overcome difficulties of this kind, the company has purchased at great cost, equipment required in the manufacture of banding machine parts. New equipment now is being installed in the company's machine shop and, shortly, the cig banding machines will be completed and ma ready for service.

Isidor Steiner, the president of the Intern tional Cigar Banding Machine Co. says: "P triotism comes first. If work about to be do for us was side tracked for construction th the country needed, the only thing is to mal the best of it. The company will fulfil eve promise made. The cigar manufacturers wh ordered banding machines will get them at th earliest possible moment."

International cigar banding machines alrea in use are giving great satisfaction.

Beach & Glenn Do a Big Business—New York and Ne Jersey Distributors for the Hernsheim Co., H. C. Nolan & Co. and Kraus & Co.

By securing orders for more than a millio cigars within a month, and by doing other b business besides, a firm newly established New York City rather safely may give assu ances for the future.

Beach & Glenn, having offices in the Asto Court Building, adjoining the Waldorf-Astor Hotel, are starting off unusually well.

Still, considering who the two partners ar great achievements naturally could be expecte

George E. Beach, for years, managed th cigar department of the great Liggett cha of drug stores. His associate, W. B. Glen aforetime in the service of the American Cig Co. and later in the employ of the Liggett com pany, also is esteemed a most capable man.

In this territory representing H. C. Nolan Co. of Philadelphia, and the Kraus & Co. Baltimore, Beach & Glenn also are New Yor and New Jersey distributors for the Hernshei Co. of New Orleans.

Of Sumatra wrapped cigars from the facto of H. C. Nolan & Co., a most pleasing exhib is made by Beach & Glenn. The cigars hav character. In quality they are notably fine. Th workmanship is excellent. The colors are a that dealers desire. In sizes, there is a goo variety. The two brands, La Rosa Aroma an Critico, are shown in shapes as follows: Invi cibles, Londres, perfectos, triangulares, concha and Midways.

Particularly attractive, too, are the Waldor Locksley Hall and Imperial Manhattans, ciga in the seven cent class.

The popular Hernsheim line, including Ca ulets, Rex Roys, Rosa Vista, Kings Court, Pr mios, Jackson Square, La Belle Creole and I surgents, gives the dealer latitude for selectio and opportunities to get more business. Fo the brands named are favorites and sterlin sellers in various localities.

In-B-Tweens, made by Kraus & Co. Baltimore, is another brand noted as a de veloper of good business.

Aside from their cigar connections, Beach Glenn are identified as the New York repr sentatives of the Ever Ready Co., Boston. Als of their own, they have a clip for fastening pa pers, a convenient, reliable and quickly applie device that bids fair to be a big winner. Sal of the clip assumed such proportions, increase so fast that rush orders had to be wired to th manufacturers.

In each department of their business, Beac & Glenn are opening up in a way that invite confidence and insures respect. The big bus ness done, right from the beginning, for shadows a surprising growth.

Armed soldiers, customs inspectors an private watchmen on guard at vital poin along the waterfront in the Port of Ne York soon will be reinforced by a large de tail of detectives.

WHERE THE WAR WILL BE WON

A French captain, talking to a group in the National Press Club the other day, startled his hearers with the statement, "The war will be won on your soil, here, in the United States." "You don't mean—?" began one. "No, not that," he replied. "I mean the direction and drive of the last stage of the struggle will come from the civilians of your country. This spirit will prove the prime factor at the mahogany peace table."

The Frenchman has phrased what many of us have vaguely felt. That indefinable something which we call spirit or morale is necessary to victory. A follower of sports recognizes its absence when he says a team is in "a slump" or has "gone stale." Some daring writers dissected it psychically and found it to be an inner atmosphere, binding the units of a human machine into a complete harmony of purpose. The rank and file of us call the same thing "team-work" and let it go at that.

"Team-work will win the war for us," says the Nation's Business. "It follows that any force, innocent or malign, which tends to impair this team-work, this unity of purpose, should be promptly classed as enemy alien and interned. There are many such forces at work to-day. Last week a report gained wide currency in Western States that the Red Cross was in the hands of Wall Street and that 75 per cent of the contributions were going into Wall Street pockets in the form of salaries. That report, absurd as it is, gained credence with a great many; and this canard is only one of a number which could be mentioned."

The stuff that makes for hesitation, that destroys zeal, and undermines spirit is composed of such rumors as these. The proper way to treat such a rumor-bearer is to grasp him by the arm and say, "This thing should be looked into. Let's go together at once to the source of your information and assure ourselves of its authenticity. Then we'll be able to act." In nine cases out of ten the rumor begins to fade until it reaches the source where it vanishes into thin air.

Two French soldiers in the trenches were talking. "We'll win," said one, "if they'll only hold out." "They? Who?" said the other. "The civilians at home," replied the first.

That bit of dialogue contains the heart of the whole matter.

CAMOUFLAGE

Most of us have a general idea that this new and overworked word "Camouflage" refers chiefly to deceptive coloring used on ships and battle paraphernalia.

But as a matter of fact it's one of the commonest features of civil life. Probably nine-tenths of us have been camouflaging during the larger part of our lives. We've been trying to seem what we are not—to look richer, wiser and more important than providence and fortune have made us. This is usually a harmless sort of camouflage, though it sometimes leads to extravagance and financial ruin.

But the kind of camouflage that is insidious and dangerous in this country just now is what we might call patriotic camouflage. The German propagandist camouflages himself as an apostle of democracy and a pacifist; the disloyal senator camouflages himself as a watchdog of the treasury, a ferreter out of extravagance, a protagonist of efficiency and a guardian of the rights of the legislative over the executive branches of the government—also a defender of the constitution. (Ever notice that the servant of privilege is usually the most zealous and solicitous about the sacredness of the constitution?) The profiteer camouflages himself with a few liberty bonds as a patriot and tries to conceal his rapacity under the deceptive coloring of war necessity. Then there are the women—proportionately rare but actually numerous, who camouflage their selfishness and inutility behind knitting needles—who knit scarfs and sweaters for themselves—and the hotel and restaurant keepers who camouflage their greed behind Hoover menus, where the portion is halved and the price doubled; and about 77 other brands of patriotic camouflages who put things over on their fellow countrymen and often deceive even themselves into believing they're useful and loyal Americans.

No, camouflage isn't confined to the battlefield, and now is an excellent time for everybody to take a searching look at themselves and their neighbors and discover just how much is genuine Americanism and how much is paint.

Berton Braley, in the Tampa Times

CORPORATIONS

In the recent report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue are some interesting facts which show the exact situation of corporations, facts that serve to dissipate the idea that a corporation necessarily means accumulated wealth and lavish expenditure. A comparative statement of returns received, number of taxable returns, and the amount of tax assessed against corporations during the years ended June 30, 1916, and June 30, 1917, is presented.

For the year 1916, it is shown that 366,443 corporations made returns, but only 190,911 were in a position to pay what is known as the corporation tax. Any corporation in 1916 which had any net income had to pay a tax. Therefore the inference is plain that the difference between 190,911 and 366,443, or 175,532 corporation or partnerships did not make enough money in 1916 to show any net return.

This must be astonishing news to those who hold that corporations make unlimited amounts of money. If only a few of the corporations had shown that they were exempt from the tax there would have been less significance to the figures. But 47.9% of all corporations in 1916 making returns did not possess any net income to warrant them to be taxed.

Considering the fact that a net income of $5,000 represents little, to a partnership or to a fairly profitable store, the idea must be emphasized in the mind of any fair person that a corporation is not necessarily a prolific source of wealth, and further, that the attacks against corporations in general are not only ill founded but directly antagonistic to the best interests of the United States.

The figures for 1917 are equally illuminating. In that fiscal year 345,047 returns were received and only 204,551 came under the corporation tax income. In 1917 140,496 corporations did not show any net income, and this represents 40.7 per cent. of the total number of corporations in the country.

But these figures did not tell the whole story. It will be admitted by any person that a corporation making three, six, seven, eight, nine or up to fifteen thousand dollars net a year is not a great menace to the country. Or a corporation making anything from fifteen thousand to forty thousand dollars a year is certainly not a political factor, or one that can use its funds for political persuasion. It is probable that the percentage of corporations substantially taxed is not 10 per cent., and those paying a tremendously heavy tax represent only a very small percentage of the total.

THE BALM OF THE MAKIN'S

Oh, it ain't all roses an' romance,
An' it ain't all ladies an' love—
When you're doin' your bit you're apt to get hit
By an aeroplane bomb from above.

The trenches ain't divans of eider,
An' you wouldn't choose cooties for pals;
The roar of the guns of the blitherin' Huns
Ain't much like the chatter o' gals.

But we don't mind the mud and the water,
An' we don't mind the cold an' the sleet;
If we're suckin' a fag an' there's more in the bag
We won't kick on chills an' trench feet.

Sweaters an' trench caps an' helmets,
They all comes in handy, don't doubt.
But you'd mortgage your soul for a little white roll
When you an' your matey's fresh out.

Taxpayment of Cigars Retailing at Three for Ten Cents

Amending Regulations in T. D. 2569 in Regard to Rate of Tax to Be Paid on Cigars Which Retail Three for Ten Cents

Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has issued the following circular to all collectors.

Section 400 of the Act approved October 3, 1917, provides in part:

"That upon cigars * * * which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the taxes now imposed by existing law, the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof: * * * (b) on cigars made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than three pounds per thousand, if manufactured or imported to retail at 4 cents or more each, and not more than 7 cents each, $1 per thousand; * * * Provided, that the word 'retail' as used in this section shall mean the ordinary retail price of a single cigar, * * *"

In the regulations in T. D. 2569, it was held that:

"The ordinary retail price of a single cigar is held to be the price at which cigars are or would be sold singly. Where cigars are manufactured or imported to retail at two or three for a certain price, the rate of tax payment is determined upon the retail price at which such cigars would be sold singly."

Further consideration has been given the question of the proper rate of tax payment of cigars manufactured to retail in lots, as, for instance, three for ten cents or ten for thirty-five cents. Accordingly, that part of the regulation quoted is hereby ameded to read as follows:

"The ordinary retail price of a single cigar is held to be the actual retail price in all cases at which cigars are sold singly. The ordinary retail price of a single cigar in the case of cigars which are manufactured or imported to retail at the rate of three for ten cents or ten for thirty-five cents, and which are practically never sold in any other manner, will be determined, and the proper rate of tax paid as follows: If the cigars packed in a statutory box are subdivided into parcels and each parcel is enclosed by band or other wrapper, and if the only actual retail price is for the parcel or lot, the nearest approach to the actual price of a single cigar is the price of the parcel or lot divided by the number of cigars therein. For example, the rate of tax on cigars which are sold at retail only at the rate of three for ten cents or ten for thirty-five cents and which are not sold singly, is $3 per thousand.

"If the cigars contained in a statutory package are not sub-divided into parcels but are sold at two, three, or more at a certain price, it may be assumed that they are also sold at retail singly, and the price of a single cigar may be determined by dividing the price of the lot by the number of cigars therein, and adding such fraction of a cent as will make a price in integral cents. For example, cigars manufactured to retail at three for ten cents and which are not enclosed by band or other wrapper, will be assumed to retail singly at four cents and shall be tax-paid as cigars of Class B at the rate of $4 per thousand."

BRITISH CIGAR IMPORTATIONS.

M. P. Troy, representative of Henry Clay and Bock & Co., in Great Britain and chairman of the cigar importers sub-section of the London Chamber of Commerce, is quoted by Tobacco of London as saying that if any scheme of further importation of tobacco were practicable and approved by the Government, cigars, being so small a matter from the tonnage point of view, would probably be included in any arrangement. Especially considering that the recent licenses were for only half the 52 millions imported in 1915. The amount of tonnage required for the 1917 licenses would have been that which was necessary to carry about 390 tons of cigars, not all of which had come in by any means. The 390 tons was net and had to be doubled for gross weight, making 780 tons. Again, there was a small difference between tons in terms of space and in actual weight. But the demand on the present basis of licenses could be brought over without making any appreciable extra demand on tonnage. To illustrate the matter, Mr. Troy pointed out that if a draft of 1,000,000 soldiers from America brought a few cigars in their pockets, each man having a box of 25, the resultant 25,000,000 cigars would cover a year's supply on the present basis. Although he considered cigars a luxury, one could not but admit that a man who was used to smoking an Egyptian cigarette or a Havana cigar liked, if possible, to continue that particular form of smoking, and his doing so made no demand upon the tobaccos usually used by working men.

REFUND TO R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO CO.

WASHINGTON, February 4.—The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has been allowed reparation amounting to $15.75 by the Interstate Commerce Commission against the Winston-Salem Southbound Railway Company et al. The refund was allowed because of the unreasonable charges collected on one less-than-carload shipment of tobacco baskets from Winston-Salem, N. C., to Kingstree, S. C., on July 24, 1917.

ANTONIO GARCIA

The younger son of Col. Alvaro Garcia, of Garcia & Vega, was eager to join the army so soon as war was declared. He volunteered. And since his enlistment, very favorable reports have been received concerning him. Being a graduate of Dartmouth College and a notably capable man, his aptitude was soon observed. He did his work well. Immediate recognition took the form of assignment to special duty. Then came chevrons. And the prospects are that a Lieutenant's commission soon may be conferred on Antonio Garcia.

THE WAR AND ADVERTISING.

In view of the discussion of the effect of the war on advertising in trade and general mediums, it is of interest to record that the Annual Review Number of The Iron Age, dated January 3, was the largest weekly trade paper ever published anywhere in the world.

That issue contained 848 pages, the advertising section, including 718 pages. In commenting on the significance of this enormous volume of business, which is impressive even in a special issue of this kind, Charles M. Baur, advertising manager of The Iron Age, said:

"This issue shows indubitably that although America's genius and energy are concentrated on winning the war, her industrial leaders have not neglected to make ready for the return of usual competitive business conditions.

"Perhaps this is one of the most hopeful signs in these times of extreme trial. The discerning and sagacious optimism of our business executives indicates a quiet faith not only in the outcome of the war, but also in an ensuing period of well-being.

"A surprisingly large percentage of the advertising in this issue is of the nature of business insurance—that is, its main purpose is not to effect immediate sales, but to build confidence and good will for the time when keen competition at home and abroad must again be faced.

"It is interesting to know many of The Iron Age advertisers continue to increase their space, even though they are loaded up with war business."

WITTROCK SAYS THE RIGHT THING.

President Charles B. Wittrock, of the Cincinnati Cigar and Tobacco Association, upon being inducted into office for his second term, commended the patriotic spirit in which members closed their stores on Garfield Mondays, and called upon them and all retail dealers in Cincinnati to continue obeying the edict of the state and national governments.

"It is easy to criticize, but I take it, the man on the inside knows best, and if we will but suppress those who, irrespective of politics, would hamper and handicap the government, and if we ourselves make great personal sacrifices readily we will win this war in half the time it otherwise will take," declared J. A. Cruse in a ringing patriotic talk.

Mr. Cruse instilled also into the minds of those present the necessity for all retail cigar dealers of Cincinnati brushing up and brightening their stores.

Jacob Wertheim and War-Savings Stamps

The acquisition of riches is not always associated with the upbuilding of a good reputation. Wise and deserving of praise is the man who, while accumulating money, makes an honored name for himself. For, preferred to a fortune, sometimes, is an attestation of excellent character. Cash at command ever is advantageous, but proven integrity may be a greater asset.

The attainment of wealth isn't everything. However successful a man may be in business, his success is sweetened, his happiness will be intensified, if he has not neglected his duty nor failed to be charitable. If he dealt fairly, if he didn't misrepresent, if he kept his word at whatever cost, he has something to be thankful for, he is assured of pleasant retrospections, he can be proud of the record he has made.

And, as he looks back, reviewing his life, considering what aided him most, he is apt to attach chief importance to honesty, initiative, ability, prompt decision, quick action, courage, thrift and established reliability. Having a higher appreciation of sterling character and real qualifications, he has a greater realization of obligations. He will not banish from his thoughts all consideration of the less fortunate. Nor does he forget what he owes to his country.

Among magnates of the cigar trade, Jacob Wertheim is pre-eminent. Starting as a cigar manufacturer in a small way, many years ago, he encountered numerous difficulties. But the barriers across the road to success only caused him to exercise greater shrewdness and develop more ability. Neither discouraged nor embittered by adversity, he persisted in his determination to succeed. Observant, revolving instantaneously on a course of action, ready to seize any good opportunity, always alert and busy, he took fair advantage of each chance and kept going ahead. Surmounting obstacles, he climbed up, step by step, until he reached heights of wealth beyond the dreams of the average man. A multi-millionaire, self-made, he did not, in later life, become entirely absorbed in the game of money getting.

In a position to continue piling up big money, so situated that he could be the master of vast and prosperous enterprises, he preferred to retire from business. Not to indulge in a life of idleness nor to be hedged about by the restrictions that surround the very rich.

JACOB WERTHEIM
President of the T. M. A.

Availing himself of opportunities to do good, he kept at work. Becoming identified with far-reaching charities, his shrewd judgment, his commanding ability, his ripe experience, and every attribute of power that helped to make him a multi-millionaire, he has used diligently for the benefit of the afflicted and poor. In the relief of distress, he has worked harder, perhaps, than he did while acquiring wealth. Not only has he labored to lessen misery, but also he has induced many others to assist in the alleviation of woe. Through his efforts, various charities are assured, most systematically, of enduring support. Though few could tell the full extent of his generosity, enough is known to prove that Jacob Wertheim has not stinted his contributions.

Under his leadership, organized efforts in behalf of Jewish charities has been made most effective. In the recent "drive," the generalship of Jacob Wertheim was productive of results far exceeding what was hoped for when the campaign was begun.

An American, one whose patriotism is uncompromising, a man who doesn't hesitate to declare that everything possible should be done the better to enable the United States to assure the winning of this war, he takes advantage of every occasion to be of service. In speech and action his earnestness and zeal are shown.

As befits a big man, he is "doing his bit" handsomely.

To intensify patriotism, to induce great a small to come continuously to the support the country, he is leading a movement to accelerate and multiply purchases of "War Savin Stamps."

In his day a great and most successful cig salesman, he is laboring assiduously now to i crease and "speed up" purchases of stamp He does more than preach the gospel of thri He isn't content merely to explain the adva tage and safety of investing in War Savin Stamps. Concerning the desirability of the securities he argues strongly to wage earner Every family and each member of the famil should be buying War Savings Stamps, or a least Thrift Stamps. Not at rare intervals, b frequently, not lackadaisically but with the de termination to buy more whenever a five-dolla bill or a twenty-five cent piece can be spare "Cultivate the habit of buying War Saving Stamps." Because it is a patriotic duty and a evidence of thrift. "Because each stamp yo buy, besides assisting to make the world saf and free, will help you to be financially inde pendent.

"No investment is more carefully safe-guarded.

"War Savings Stamps are better than a savings bank account."

Justifiable pride is associated with Jacob Wertheim's acceleration of War Savings Stamp sales. For Jacob Wertheim's elder son, Maurice Wertheim, now on duty at Washington as assistant to Frank A. Vanderlip, was the one who devised the blue postal card which is such a potent instrument in procuring purchases of War Savings Stamps.

President Vanderlip of the National City Bank of New York, who has given his services to the country for the duration of the war, worked out the problem of providing a U. S. security that would be within the reach of even the humblest. Vanderlip proposed the War Savings Stamp and the Thrift Stamp. The element of popularity was embodied in the new idea. Interest bearing Government securities of very small denom-ıation were made feasible. The stamps ⁄ould stick millions of dollars in the national reasury. Stamp purchases would inculcate hrift. Stamp sales would be doubly benefi ial.

The desire is to place the greatest possible umber of War Savings Stamps immediately n the hands of the people. Team work was esolved upon. Newspapers were utilized. In arious ways, in thousands of places, people vere urged to buy War Savings Stamps. Even chool children were actively inducing stamp ales.

The practical promotion of War Savings Stamp purchases has been made easier, "mis-ionary work" now becomes much more ef-ective, because of the "blue postal card" de-vised by Maurice Wertheim.

To be obtained free, in proper quantities at almost any post office or bank, "blue postal cards" certainly serve the purpose for which they were intended.

The "blue postal card" explains its utility to all who can read. It is a convenience and a guarantee to everyone who can be persuaded to buy War Savings Stamps or Thrift Stamps. Use of the "blue postal card" does away with uncertainty, difficulty and delay in delivering the securities. Bother and risk are eliminated by having the letter carrier, an authorized agent of the government, bring the stamps and receive the money.

Likewise, the "blue postal card" provides the simplest, easiest, safest, least objectionable way of obtaining a pledge to buy War Savings Stamps.

Utilization of the "blue postal card" permits a vast amount of patriotic campaigning to be done advantageously.

To spread and speed work to be done to secure a greater sale of War Savings Stamps, Jacob Wertheim has offered cash prizes amounting to $5,000, which will be awarded to school children in New York city.

In a most interesting address delivered at the Tobacco Salesmen's meeting, Friday evening, Mr. Wertheim urged each salesman to participate actively in the War Savings Stamps campaign and similar patriotic work. He spoke of the supreme claim our country has on us all and eloquent was his plea for service and sacrifice to secure victory.

At the conclusion of his speech, he dedicated the service flag of the association, speaking fervently, proudly, "as a father might do." For he has "a boy in uniform." His younger son, Albert Wertheim, is a First Lieutenant in an Infantry regiment now at Camp Meade.

A SPEECH THAT PLEASED.

Jacob Wertheim, president of the T. M. A. and Marc Eisner, collector of internal revenue for the third district of New York, were guests of honor and speakers at the meeting of the Tobacco Salesmen in the Hawthorne building, Friday evening. A series of instructive talks, which J. J. Ollendorf, president of the Salesmen's Association, had planned, to be made by important men in the trade, was inaugurated by Mr. Wertheim.

His speech was especially interesting. It was patriotic, happy and descriptive. In the part pertaining to salesmanship, he told of conditions and practices that existed when he entered the cigar business, long years ago.

Discoursing on his own experience, Mr. Wertheim described the "speckled beauties" he sold to Asa Lemlein. He enriched the narration of an adventure of a manufacturer who, going to Boston to deal with Hynemann Bros., used a set of uncertain furniture to expedite the sale of some cheap cigars. He related how he secured his first wholesale customer for the old Crescent brand. He outlined the development of the business that now manifests its immensity in the General Cigar Co.

"In the old days," he said, "the ambitious salesman was given an assortment of samples, a book of labels and an exhortation to get business how he could. Then a salesman rather 'depended on his personality' to put deals through; too often he had recourse to schemes; he jollied customers along or resorted to expedients that wouldn't do at all in these days of known brands and much advertising."

In giving advice concerning the attainment of success, in selling cigars, Mr. Wertheim emphasized the importance of dependability.

"Don't misrepresent. Stick to your promises. Be just. Keep your eyes open. Remember what you hear. Decide quickly. Act without delay. It's profitable, sometimes, to be impulsive."

Collector Eisner didn't make an extended speech, but he did an appreciated service for all present by answering numerous questions concerning income taxes. His helpful replies covered practically every point previously considered doubtful.

Though the attendance was not the largest, the meeting was voted to be one of the best ever held by the Tobacco Salesmen.

Sidney J. Freeman unanimously was elected a director of the association; Max Levy, Leo Lehman, C. A. Bond, Sig. Weill and M. Samuels were named as members of the new House Committee.

"A MILLION MEN INSURED"

WASHINGTON, January 30.—Insurance written by the United States Government to protect its fighting forces and their dependents passed the five-billion-dollar mark last night, according to an announcement by Secretary McAdoo.

A record-breaking day of applications brought the total amount of insurance up to 5,071,458,000. This represents 603,976 persons in military or naval service insured against death and total disability by the United States Government. The average amount of insurance applied for is $8,397.

More than twenty thousand applications, aggregating $147,544,000 of insurance were received yesterday. In the last three days more than 65,000 applications, representing insurance of more than half a billion dollars, were received.

The insurance written by the United States Government on the lives of its soldiers and sailors to date is approximately twice as great as the ordinary life insurance on the books of the largest company in the world.

Insurance officers, commanding officers and other persons and organizations arrayed in the nation-wide drive are striving to reach the goal of "A Million Men Insured Before February 12th."

DARWIN R. JAMES AUGMENTS CHEWING GUM

The American Chicle Company Nationalizes Its Brands

Some Insights on Advertising and Selling—Given by Henry A. Beers, Jr., in Printers' Ink

The war eliminates bad trade practices. The war reveals wastes and ineffectiveness in our selling work. Business that works out well in peace often cracks under the strain of war.

These things we have been hearing, and also we have been hearing that war will not be without its benefit if it leads us to find our weaknesses, and to discard the wastes which are made evident under the present pressure.

What are some typical wastes in a big organization which is, we shall say, advertising nationally, has branch offices in various cities and plants scattered here and there over the country? It would help everybody if that company's practices and policies were pulled apart and put under the spotlight so that we could all look at them. It would help further if we could see some master hand at work changing uncoordinated and wasteful practices into strong, well-knit selling plans.

The American Chicle Co., as everybody knows, was an amalgamation of separate manufacturers of similar products. There were the Adams & Sons Company, of Brooklyn, with its famous Tutti-Frutti brand; W. J. White & Son, of Cleveland, with Yucatan; Dr. E. E. Beeman, of Cleveland, with his pepsin gum; J. P. Primley, of Chicago, and his California Fruit; the Kisme Gum Company, of Louisville, and the Sen-Sen Chiclet Company, of Rochester, N. Y. Included with these better-known brands were around a hundred others.

Most of these brands had their sectional strongholds already established, Adams and Beeman's pepsin being practically the only brands that had anything like national sales. Under the amalgamation it seemed the part of wisdom to follow the line of least resistance, to let well enough alone so far as attempting to obtrude any of these brands into another's own personal bailiwick. The element of compromise entered largely into this policy. Moreover, it was considered wasteful to set up one brand of the combine in competition with another in territory out of which good profits were assured on the seller already entrenched there.

Therefore, what came to be known as the territorial plan was put into operation. The company started to strengthen the position of the several leaders in their particular territories, dividing an annual appropriation of around a million dollars for maintaining the brands where they were already popular.

In the meantime, Mr. Wrigley came into the field and put across an enormously successful "national seller," an object that the company had apparently side-stepped from the start. In recent years another brand, less heralded of itself, but well introduced by a good selling organization and by the reputation of other older and well-advertised products of its family, crept unostentatiously but surely into public favor nationally. And hard on their heels still another competing brand smashed its way into national attention through an advertising and sales campaign, establishing a record for quick national distribution.

Enters, then, the element of competition, that powerful stimulant that has aroused many a smug, sleek, prosperous business out of a state of lethargy to efforts that completely reconstruct its ideas of the possibilities latent in its products that keen advertising and sales effort can and do develop.

Here was the American Chicle Co., the so-called chewing gum trust, and the largest manufacturer of this product in the world, without a single dominating brand of really national reputation, while across its horizon at least three independents were crashing into national distribution and prominence. For years it had been averaging 18 per cent dividends, browsing leisurely on a comparatively non-competitive market, but still it had no national seller to boast of, and in 1914-1915, at the very height of its national competitors' endeavors, gross sales fell off by $2,000,000.

At this time a thorough shake-up occurred in the organization. An outsider was brought in as president of the company, and he in turn gathered around him an executive staff, none of them a chewing-gum man, so-called.

The new president was not new in his role of corporation doctor. Mr. James was formerly president of the Pyrene Manufacturing Company, and before that a manufacturer for himself. From fire extinguishers to chewing gum looks like a far cry. Nevertheless, he proceeded to gather about him a group of men from as comparatively unrelated industries.

Mr. James did not feel that it was necessary for him to surround himself with chewing-gum men any more than did the directors of the company who put him in charge of the corporation. He had helped to make a great success of a fire extinguisher against considerable problems. The same ability, it was felt, could do the same in the face of their problems. In choosing his immediate executives, Mr. James followed the same line of reasoning.

The study they made of the proposition, inherited from the old régime, and the course of action they laid down as a result of their findings, seem remarkably simple in the telling and hearing. That is, again, because business is as simple, and therefore as complex, as human nature.

Almost their first look into their new field satisfied them on the following all-important point. At the time their sum-up of the situation as they found it was stated in part as follows:

"For several years the chewing-gum business in the United States has been merely drifting along with the tide of good times.

"The manufacturers have been complimented upon the enormous growth of their industry. The layman has opened his eyes and marveled at a reported total volume of retail business exceeding sixty million dollars.

"This is not surprising in the same way to the new officers of the American Chicle Co. They are surprised because the total volume of retail business has not exceeded a hundred million dollars a year.

"There is no reason why chewing gum cannot be put across the counter as a necessity. It is merely a luxury because it has been handled as a luxury."

They found a jumble of brands, some of them comparatively well known in each one's particular territory, many of them logical competitors of one another if set side by side in any one region. So far as amalgamation was concerned, it appeared to have been more in name than in fact. So far as the several plants were concerned, they went about turning out their products, as before. There was absolutely no standardization of manufacturing procedure or packaging.

Thus happened an enormous and expensive duplication of effort and inter-plant competition. For example, each factory had its own sales force, and a Maine man would be found selling his product in Texas, a Rochester man on the Coast, despite the existence of a plant much nearer to these sections. This was simply because no one of the plants in the combine was prepared to make any other than its original products, and the waste in sales effort, combined with the enormous waste in traveling expenses and shipping costs to distant points that might just as easily be served with a standardized product from the nearest plant is clear.

The selling side presented other equally anomalous situations and cross purposes. The free deal was rampant, and it was found that toward the end of a fiscal year it had been the practice to overload the trade heavily by such methods. The sales chart month by month varied widely.

There was no standardization either of advertising or sales effort for the several brands. The campaign for one brand in a territory was maintained without any apparent relationship to any other campaign. Thus a considerable appropriation was split up annually and thrown into as many separate territories, dissipating a great deal of its potential strength as a unit.

Under such a system a sort of locomotor ataxia and fatty degeneration had sapped the advertising vitality of the aggregate appropriation. Decidedly antique methods of advertising, the separate sins of the several brands visited on the new corporation that embraced them, were still in force, eating heavily into the so-called advertising funds including the old familiar custom of gifts to jobbers, diamond rings to their salesmen, etc.

Their was neither similarity nor uniformity of packages—on the one hand showing the complete lack of union of the several sales campaigns; on the other, a costly manufacturing waste.

While distribution was generally according to the territorial layout of the original corporate methods, it had its freakish side overlapping in places without apparent reason. A brand would go heavily, for example, in New England, and then the books would show that for some unknown cause it would crop up again in, say, Des Moines, Iowa, South Bend, Ind.; or Harrisburg, Pa. This is not an accurate statement of an actual case, but an hypothesis of a condition that often did exist without ready explanation. Demand for several brands was decidedly spotty.

"We first wanted to find and establish a common denominator on which to base all our future efforts," said Mr. James. "It was impossible to market so many different brands under separate names. We wanted to find one definite factor in the business so that in advertising the different brands, nevertheless all of the advertising would tend equally to advertise the house, and thus pave the way for the introduction and sales of subsequent brands in the same territories. We decided that in the name of Adams we already had this element, partly because Adams had three comparatively well-known brands to one each of the others. The name of Adams was also well known in the trade, and moreover, Adams was the first man to use and patent the use of chicle in chewing gum, having been first introduced to this product by the Mexican, Santa Anna."

With this object in mind, the management attacked the problem from several angles. Some of the action that followed was positively revolutionary. First of all, it looked about for certain brands that might be developed into logical national sellers, bell wethers to carry the company's name across, up and down the continent. Beeman's, it is true, had a sort of national distribution,

Philadelphia's Mayor Is Opposed to Punchboards

Threats That Numerous Cigar Stores Will Be Raided—Frigid Monday and the Day After—Manufacturers Disposed to Aid the Dealers' Association in Adjusting Prices—Increased Demand for Clear Havanas

PHILADELPHIA, February 2.—About nine out of every ten cigar stores in this man's town are about to be raided.

Tom Smith, who is the mayor over here, even if he is under indictment and awaiting trial on three counts growing out of the Fifth Ward election campaign, when everybody who got in the way got beaned with a brick or a blackjack, Tom Smith has said so, or words to that effect. He called in his man D'rec Wilson of the Department of Public Safety t'other day and told him to hustle right out and gather in all the cute little gambling cards—those things one pays a nickel to punch out a set of cards, profiting if the cards run right, pokerishly speaking.

Perhaps the estimate is a trifle high, but if memory serves us right nearly every small cigar store here and in other towns has one of these devices hanging around. They pay in trade only and serve as a form of amusement for the boys. The mayor, however, has been rather hard pushed by some of the newspapers to make good his brags about what he was going to do to the gamblers, so he has picked out this small stuff to vent his wrath upon. And presumably every man in the city who sells cigars will be explaining to cops for the next sixty days or thereabouts that he hasn't any of the stuff in stock.

Once in a while the special gambling squad finds a dealer who has given up trying to figure out his share when he sells cigars at a nickel, and who has put in a sure thing nickel in the slot machine. One such was taken from an up town store this week. The owner, if he hadn't been caught with the goods, would have had enough margin to satisfy him for some time out of the nickels in the bottom of the contrivance. But now that goes into the city treasury where it can be properly safeguarded by city employes until such time as the contractor politicians feel the need of it.

However, this is no time to be pessimistic, when every dealer in town is hunting for coal. Although Philadelphia is nearer the anthracite fields than any other big city, the town has had a hard time of it this Winter. Fringstance, the M. J. Dalton Co. got its entire steam plant overhauled a few weeks ago, but yesterday the system got sore over the fuelless Monday or something and the radiators refused to work. Many other centrally located stores have found it impossible to get steam on Tuesday after a frigid Monday and clerks wearing overcoats are no uncommon sight.

In this connection the Philadelphia Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association came to the conclusion last week that something ought to be done in the way of getting a definite order from the fuel administrator as to just where they get off. So a committee consisting of Horace H. Leach, president of the association, Nathaniel W. Mead and Samuel Greenwald was appointed and it went around and handed in the following communication to Bill Potter, the fuel administrator:

"At a meeting of the Philadelphia Cigar and Tobacco Merchants' Association, held at the Hotel Adelphia, it was unanimously voiced that the status of the retail cigar dealers be clearly defined in regard to closing on Monday of each week.

"It has come to the attention of this association that many of the dealers evaded the order, mostly some of the chain stores. We wish, therefore, to have the opinion of the fuel administrator as to wether it is permissible to open on such days, provided no heat or light or fuel be used.

"If the edict is to be enforced, all dealers or cigar departments of other establishments should also close. It is the consensus of opinion of the association that all cigar stores close on such Mondays as prescribed in the order of the fuel administrator, as we desire to co-operate with the Government to the fullest extent."

In reply to this the fuel administrator camouflaged by solemnly asking the cigar dealers to obey the law. He informed them that they couldn't be forced to close, but strict obedience to the spirit of the law called for closing. Later it was said that Doc Garfield was responsible for this passing of the buck. At any rate, friends of ours tried their darndest to get a smoke last Monday night and succeeded only in borrowing from friends one at a time. They couldn't be bought.

Manufacturers here are getting squarely behind the new association, which, although still in its swaddling clothes, now boasts more than a hundred members. Sixty-three of them attended the semi monthly meeting held last week at the Adelphia Hotel, at which the principal speakers were Ben R. Lichty, of the Otto Eisenlohr & Bros., Inc., and H. F. Pent, of the Pent Brothers Co. After sketching some of the difficulties the cigar man is up against today, Mr. Lichty made the following significant statement:

"In view of the increasingly hazardous situation, I am greatly distressed to note dealers dissipating their present stocks and profits, through their failure to maintain a fair and equitable selling price upon their goods."

The association voted to send out strong letters to every cigar dealer, jobber and manufacturer in this territory setting forth the aims of the organization and urging them to join at the earliest possible opportunity.

Bayuk Brothers, manufacturers of Havana Ribbon and the Philadelphia Hand Made, as well as other popular brands, are still growing. Some months ago they virtually doubled the size of the office to take care of the increased business following the organization of the Mapacuba Company, but they are now forced to make other extensions to handle increased business. At the same time the company has announced the addition to its staff of Henry Harrison, formerly Philadelphia representative of the lithographing firm of George Schlegel, New York, and C. E. Terry.

Recent visitors to the trade in this city included L. Hirst, representing Gans Brothers, New York City; Mortimer S. Heineman, of Heineman Brothers, Baltimore; Julius Klorfein, manufacturer of Garcia Grande cigars, and his representative, Victor Lopez; Harry Boston, representing William Demuth & Co., New York, pipe makers; D. S. Erb, head of the firm of D. S. Erb & Co., of Boyertown, Pa.; George Themelis, of Themelis Brothers, Inc., New York.

The usual regular quarterly dividend of one per cent. on the common stock has been declared by Otto Eisenlohr & Bros., Inc., makers of the famous "Cinco," to stockholders of record February 1, payable February 15.

Despite the recent increase in the wholesale price of pure Havana goods of from five to ten dollars a thousand, which of course was followed by a corresponding increase in the retail figure, centrally located dealers here say the demand is still standing on its own hind legs and there is so far no sign of a falling off. The smokers who get used to Havana don't care what it costs and more war brides are getting accustomed to the old island stuff every day. In this connection, here we go with an advance tip that something is going to be done to the wholesale price of the old nickel smoke in this fair burg pretty soon. According to E. J. Cattell, the city statistician, twenty cigars are made every second in Philadelphia, but we have a suspicion that his figures were compiled some months ago—are low—or high. At any rate, changing the price hits a lot of people. Roughly, it is now about $43 a thousand, with the less widely known brands ranging down to $41 and in some instances below for smaller than standard sizes. We understand that costs of manufacture have convinced several of the larger manufacturers that from $3 to $5 a thousand more will be about right. "The little fellows who have survived the ordeal of buying their leaf in the present market were already convinced. They agree unanimously."

Unloading Cargo At San Francisco, 1850

In 1849, Captain Charles Allen Thacher of the ship Pleiadies sailed from San Francisco across the Pacific to Manila to obtain a cargo of supplies. He returned in 1850 with provisions and some luxuries, among them Manila cigars. The voyage netted him a fortune.

Full cargoes of Manila cigars are now bringing fortunes to importers and dealers in the United States.

Metaphors and Figures Required to Show Conditions Up-State

NEW YORK STATE CAPITOL DISTRICT,
February 4, 1918.

All the way down town, in the pale glow of the 7 a. m. electric-lamp sunrise, Benny was a-thinkin' how tough 'twas to be a cigar clerk!

Here it is 9 below Mister Fahrenheit's meanest idee o' mean low temperature, with ears, nose, face, an' fingers all a-zippin' in th' frosty-dew! And there's that Wakeful Willum Willett, proposin' to save daylight by gettin' up sixty minutes sooner every day!

Gee! Wouldn't yer think a feller'd have-a-heart? What dif does it make that Iceland an' a lot of them there nut-nations have adopted the fooley fancy? An' what's th' idear of postponin' th' thing 'til May first? Won't it be even harder to git up then, in th' sarsparilla-spring, than it is now, when there ain't no green grass an' spreadin' chestnut-trees? I guess so!

Then, that's right, rub it in! For Benny's first customer is a fella all laced up like a boot, smilin' thru a stack o'cloes numerous enuf for th' inventory sale of Rogers-Peet-Babbitt!

An' what does th' gink say? What! He's goin' fishin'? Goin' to cut a hole in th' ice with that jig-saw on his back, an' stick around all day waitin' for a bite?

Good-Nite! That there fella is a-goin' to do that there thing just for fun, an' here's Benny kickin' about bein' a clerk in a nice, warm cigar store!

In the drive for 1,500 members for Albany's reorganized Chamber of Commerce the boys got right out and did it. Fact is, they got just 1,644 in exactly four days.

But if it hadn't been for George Van Slyke, captain of one of the membership teams, the score would have been just 1,596. Because George rounded up 48 three-year members in his outfit alone.

Those in the trade who chipped in were the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., G. W. Van Slyke & Horton, J. W. Stevens, S. E. Fulder, Thompson & Hare, and several other leading manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers.

Since his fire of some weeks ago, Sol Levy, the Albany leaf merchant, has settled down in permanent quarters at 79 Green street. Business is very fair indeed in the leaf line for this season.

From the ting-wha on the desk came three tiny tinkles. When the Albany tobacconist answered the summons with a "Lo, what is it?" the party on the wire inquired, "Do you handle Estabrook & Eaton's Rockefeller cigar?"

"Certainly," replied the dealer, "How many do you wish?"

"Oh, send me four boxes," instructed the voice, giving name and address.

"Thank you," acknowledged the cigar man, just about to ring off, when in comes Harry R. Stearns, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the aforementioned Estabrook & Eaton, Boston.

"Hold that party a minute," hurriedly asked Handsome Harry, as he made a grab for the phone.

"'Lo, 'Lo, there! This is Harry Stearns, selling the Rockefeller you just ordered. Can't you use more of those cigars? Price is going up, sizes are coming down, so you'd better take all you can get at the old figure, which is——"

"Wait a second, Harry," interrupted the retailer, "Our stock on that shape is about cleaned out. Don't oversell the order."

"Sorry, old man," resumed Harry, talking again to the customer, "but I guess you've already cornered the market. We'll send you all we have, tho, and thank you very much indeed."

"Well!" ejaculated Harry, replacing the receiver, "That's the time I did butt in! However, there's no harm done. I know the chap, and I'll explain the situation when I see him later."

But the dealer, thinking it over, concludes the only error Harry made was in the stage entry. Either too soon, or not enough so!

With assets of $1,325 and liabilities of $2,612, cigar manufacturer John R. Quinn, of Albany, filed his bankruptcy petition in the Utica Federal Court last Friday.

Among the several creditors are these Albany merchants: I. M. Strasser, leaf tobacco, $218; and Philip R. Richter, retailer, $102. It was Mr. Richter who took over the Quinn retail interests at Hudson avenue and Daniel street some months ago.

"I'm still in the store," said Sam Fulder, "waiting for warmer weather and improved conditions before I venture again on the road for the year. But I guess I'll have to pack my grip for a trip pretty soon. Checks are arriving slowly, and both Jake and I will have to help Irving with collections."

In the dim light of a Garfield evening a familiar form appeared hull-down upon the horizon. Sure enough it was the sample case of an A. T. Co. scout-cruiser.

And, on the quarter-deck, peering through the murk of the snow-seas of State street, Albany, who should come forth but Cap'n A. N. Duker, the man who puts sugar in your coffee.

"It's me," admitted Duker, "and I'm selling swift stamps! All the boys of the department are out this week with the little green stickers. We're trying to put 'em in every happy home, office, and factory. If you're thrifty you'll buy one now, otherwise you'll lose the penny in the February advance to $4.13 after Thursday P. M."

Poor Father! There he is, all rigged out like the maitre de hotel at the Ten Eyck, boisterous black clo'es, sad stiff shirt, which gleams in the mazda-light like the piece of tin it represents at the buoyant bulge.

But wait! What does the shirt say? For there, right across the beautiful bosom, are some symbols.

Ah! So Father admits it! And he's that proud of the 'bacca he smokes when he sits-in-slippers, front of the coalless grate, that he has writ on his manhattan-front "I smoke Edgeworth tobacco!" Now, should he slip on the ice of forgetfulness, Father's tobacconist on State street could hardly overlook the memory-mender right there alongside the pewter-stud.

And Father's carmine-hair! Well, that simply indicates the disposition Geo. McManus has given him. Which, translated into action, surely, firmly, brilliantly announces Father will fight for Edgeworth, rather than accept a substitute.

This is just what Father's son wants to impress upon the folk of the Capitol District. He wants people everywhere to observe Father! To accomplish this, Father's son is still distributing ten-inch miniatures of Father, plaster cast.

While the gang out-front, allus alive to somethin' good, teases the toleration out of J. H. Hardsworth, who's Father's Son, for another one of them there Larus & Brother Richmond statuettes.

Then Father grins, chucklin' a-bout how powerful popular he's makin' that there Edgeworth 'bacca which he allus smokes, wife or no wife, hen-peckin' th' Oirish joy from his daily life.

"Still giving away Chesterfields," Charlie Fox philanthropically announced, "and I guess you'd better get in on this gratis deal before Liggett & Myers withdraw this Carnegie enterprise. How's balance of stock on Fatimas, Piedmonts, Richmond Straight Cuts, with all the rest of our cigarette list? Dealers everywhere are rushed today, after that mournful Monday."

Three of the clock in the cold, grey morn is a lovely time to be turned out of the house for a $3,800 fire.

Yet that was the Friday-luck of Gus Duri last week. And, in addition to the loss of his business, this Fair Haven, Vt., blaze also damaged Gus's residence, opposite, to the extent of $500, making a total loss for Duri of $4,500.

In the intense cold of a real winter's dawn, the firemen worked for three hours before the conflagration was controlled.

"Saturday next, if the fuel administrators don't relent, I may as well return to New York 'til Tuesday," observed Que Placer Fleischmann, of the Metropolitan Tobacco Co. "Alabanza cigars are now $43.50 the thousand. This automatically puts them in the six-cent case, of course. But retailers all over tell me six-cent brands are outselling the fives. And I don't see why they shouldn't, because the average five, if made for quality, can't be produced for a nickel any more."

"Gold soup is on the me-an'-u today," joshed Joe McElveney, "an' they say it's made of 14 karats!"

Some stormy day, when you're lookin' outa th' windy, feelin' sympathetic-like for those two boys you see a-comin' thru the snow an' sleet to your very door step, you'll open the door to a coupla lads who don't mind the weather a nary bit, providin' you come acrost wi' a favorable response to their lil' offer.

For the pair of chaps will probably be the Lucky Strike cooks. Maybe Boss Draudt and one of his chefs. Anyway, they'll set up their hoopla outfit, if you pass the word, with the thigamajig to demonstrate the manufacture of Lucky Strike cigarets.

Then either Draudt, or his hired man, will sterno-toast a few grains of Tuxedo or Lucky Strike tobacco, merely to make the store smell like a bacon-an'-stickney coffee roasting room on a busy day in May.

When in-an'-out going folk get sniffin' around for the come-to-breakfast odor, Draudt gets busy, too! Watch 'im!

First thing, he collars a fellow who looks as though he oughter smoke Lucky Strike cigarettes. Perhaps he already smokes Camels or Helmars. Doesn't make any difference. Draudt will talk to 'im!

Coffee can't be poured from a percolator as fast an' fluently as Draudt spiels it off to the now group of ear-drinkers surrounding the Lucky Strike toasterole!

And they lissen! And they smell! Oom-ahh! Gee, that's great! Sure, they read the news ads. But they couldn't whiff that aroma, an' hear this Draudt dissertation by simply readin' th' Morning Discourse!

So they dig down dimeward, coming across with sufficient silver to remind Draudt of the days he uster be payin' teller at th' Ninth National, before he became the A. T. Co.'s Lucky Strike!

Be careful, Jimmy, be careful! See how easy 'tis for mail to wander around loose-like, huntin' for a destination!

For there's that case of the New York dago.

He wrote a letter with an address which resembled the work of John Hancock, his mark. And the postoffice people, seldom seeing such fine ideas-in-ink, sent the thing to Palisades, New Jersey.

'Course that was wrong! Because the inside information told about a mafia-murder, intended as a clue to "Mr. Policeman, New York."

So be prudent, Jimmy, be prudent! Hereafter, when you write that you, the Right Honorable James T. Stuart, are about to approach the New York State Capitol District, per postal poco tiempo, otherwise next Thursday, please be cautious enough to write the non-rubber stamp part so the P. O. won't think the hull darn thing is a code-plot in stenographic German, therefore puttin' your Cinco customers under secret service suspicion!

"My, my, but I'll soon be a perfect man!" so sighed Chris Bittel while sortin' his morning mail from Vice-President Belt, of the Pierre Lorillard Co., and President Wilson of the E Pluribus Unum.

For, in addition to a pile of correspondence from Jersey City about reducin' th' price of Ziras to four cents, thereby creatin' a ruse de guerre to stop Meccas, there was also one other legal dockeyment.

This directed one Christopher Bittel, cigarette culturist, to appear for the third time before his district draft board for physical exam. as Division Commander of Uncle Sammy's National Army!

What color is a cigar? No, none of that there claro-oscuro shade stamping! But James McGahan & Brother, of Troy, want to know if American Seal paint, in red, white, blue and gold, properly blended, can produce a Sumatra-tint of the Prof. Morse cigar.

If paint won't do it, maybe ink will. So the McGahans gave a book-match concern an order for enough fire-sticks to lick up the entire eight billions of insurance on New York State property!

And the understanding was, right there in the contract, for the paper match house to put a lithoed fac-simile of their best-at-any-price Prof. Morse brand on the covers as a striking ad.

Well, any artist is entitled to try once or twice to git that Deli M/L mark of Sumatra's wrapper on a proof sheet. In fact, three times is not considered too many to try to imitate the brown-silk tissue of tobacco selling around $6 the pound!

Still, after so much fuss, you'd really suppose the match man might have made a cigar in some sort of brown! That's what the McGahans thought.

Instead of a Prof. Morse in brown, though, the finished match advertisement came through in red, with blue stripes! This didn't suit the manufacturers of cigars at 347 River street at all, and they said so!

However, the real Prof. Morse cigar has not changed its leaf-color, while the present scarcity of any kind of matches makes it necessary for the Brothers McGahan to use the disapproved licensed match number seven, whether the lithographed cigar be blue or black!

Mentioning matches recalls the remark of Manager C. J. Shaxby, of the J. W. Stevens store, Albany.

Sez he: "Last Monday the only sale we made was a penny one. It represented a single box of matches in the slot machine. If that was a violation of the Garfield order we'll have to go to jail for it, because the lad who put the cent in the box got away with the goods before we could reprimand him for his disloyalty!"

All other cigar stores were closed throughout the entire Capitol district last week Monday. From the open handed manner of selling on the previous fuel holiday, this was a conspicuous change. Please note it.

Some cigars, tobaccos and cigarettes were sold, however. These smokes came from the pool and billiard halls. Tuesday closing of such amusement places appeared to be the cause of this exception to the general rule, religiously followed by every tobacconist in the many cities of this territory.

No change has been announced for the coming Monday, notwithstanding the suggestions made to the Administration that business be permitted every day upon a shorter time basis.

This plan has its boosters and opponents, though it is quite likely, during the present severe weather, that the lid will remain securely clamped for the period of ten fuelless Mondays, no matter what is done about the other days of the week.

But it does seem to most dealers quite unfair they should meet the total cost of the closing. With their tremendous rentals, retailers believe landlords ought to be compelled to share a portion of the trade moratorium.

Wouldn't it make you mad, if, upon entering the grounds of a concern which had just invited you to call, you should see, first shot, a small sign stickin' out of a snowbank sayin' "Keep Off the Grass?"

Especially, too, if you had never walked on grass since last Summer's band concert in the park, when the cop chased you all around the marigolds for steppin' on six inches of sunbaked, brown, so-called grass?

Then, to rub it in, the very next thing you see is still 'nother sign readin' "No Admittance, Apply at the Office." That, also, tacked right on the gate, where you expected to see the manager waitin' with the firm's brass band!

Well, you go in. Er, that is, a big brass-bound mick at the door glares you down, stetson-to-douglas, and lets you in, with a grouchy growl.

However, you're in! Now what? Over there, on the wall—what does that sign caution? Is it don't or musn't?

Ah, now we can see it. And holy smokes! It bristles right out with "Positively No Smoking!" While not a word does it qualify about applying-to-the-office!

Gee, this seems to be a cheerful place! You can't walk on the nice, soft grass. You can't walk in the nice, big gate. You can't smoke in the nice, airy building! Shucks!

But who's that man over there walkin' on the snow-banked grass? An' he walks right through the gate as though he owned the place, without even a wink at the wop on guard!

Jimminy cripes! He's smokin', too, saunterin' along past that very sign which tells him not to do it!

Who is he, men, who is he? Does he do that just to make the signs look foolish, or is he really some pumpkins 'round here?

Oh, that's it, then! He's the guy who came to work in this place puffin' a panetela, an' then, when the friendly fellow indicated the slogan on the wall, tellin' the chap he hadter cut it out, see, why the stogie smoker simply told him to go where the asbestos cat went.

Immediately-right-away, you say, the other watchmen started to kick in, goin' to throw the violator, panetela an' all, outer the windy without botherin' to unlock it, hey?

But several chairmen-of-the-board, admirals-of-the-fleet, vice-presidents, and so on, rushed out of their busy dens an' persuaded the hired help to dispense with the closing scene!

So they all went into executive session, includin' the panetela perplexer, an' they cussed and discussed the subject about smokin' like a Caius College crowd at Cambridge.

After they got all through, motionin' to adjourn, an' singin' Hank Mead's lullaby, "The Brewer's Big Horses Can't Run Ov Me," to the tune of the Reverend Willyu Ashley Sunday's sawdust jig, the manag ment of th' meetin' quietly made it know to the proper parties that the aforesaid pan tela puffer could smoke either in or out of t plant, signs or no signs, rules or no rules!

That's the little chap there, then, with t slightly stooped, more than round shoulder with more hair on his face, 'round his eye top of his head, than a foot-ball fullback, a ways minus a hat, you say, who carries a pe petual panetela between the second and thir fingers of his right hand when not in h mouth—that's the man, is it, who's the mo remarkable smoker in Schenectady?

Jobs paying a Romanoff ransom are a mer trifle to this smoker, you tell me? Wasn he offered a Frick fortune as an increase testimonial of the firm's regard, and didn't h say he wouldn't take it?

Didn't he say he wouldn't stay on the job a all unless he was permitted to smoke wher and when he pleased, regulations by Herber C. Hoover or Lord Rhondda, the Socialis Party, or General Manager Emmons, not withstanding?

He did that! And he meant it, that's th itch! Otherwise the 25,000 people in the G E. Works—the great General Electric o Schenectady—would have seen their elec trical chemist no more.

Such was the decision of a scientific smoke —a smoker who smokes because he find in smoking his greatest personal pleasure— Charles P. Steinmetz. THE SMOKER.

"NEVER IN 54 YEARS"

Were Conditions in the Cigar Business What They Are Today—Kent Co., of Binghamton, Refuses Big Orders.

Orders for millions of cigars have been refused by the George A. Kent Co., of Binghamton, N. Y., because of inability to obtain competent workmen to produce the cigars. Mr. Kent, president of the company, stated that never before in his 54 years' experience in the cigar business has he seen such conditions as exist in the cigar market at the present time.

"We do not need any Government orders," he said, "but we do need help to make cigars. Our old customers and many new ones have sent in so many orders that we are literally swamped with them. If the cigarmakers of the city would use their influence to bring other cigarmakers here and so increase the output of cigars, Binghamton will once more stand at the top in the manufacture of the product for which it has for years been famous.

"In 1890 the world's record for increase in population in 10 years was held by this city with a record of 100 per cent. Old residents of the city, recalling the prominence of the cigar industry here at that time, say that the prime cause of the big forward movement was this same industry. Now it seems that history will repeat itself and the name of Binghamton will once more be known from coast to coast in the cigar world."

CONSERVING LIQUOR BUT NOT COAL.

"We have conserved liquor but not coal," was the succinct reply of Thomas D. Green, president of the Hotel Association of New York City and manager of the Woodward Hotel, when asked whether fuel had been saved by the closing of the bars in the large hostelries, says the New York Herald. "Steam is a by-product," Mr. Green declared. "After we have operated our laundries, lights and ice making machines the steam is forced by vacuum through the pipes and goes to heat the entire hotel. And Monday not an ounce of coal was saved."

OSTERLOH'S $ MIXTURE

¼ lb. for a Quarter

A few years ago Osterloh made a certain blend of pipe tobacco all for himself.

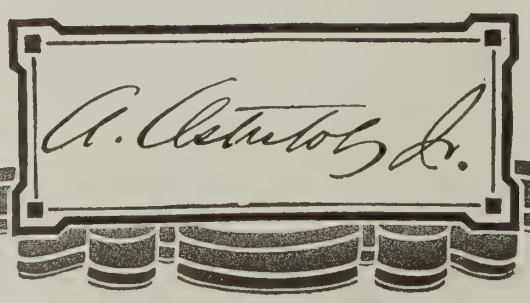
Next, as a favor, he made it for a friend.

First thing he knew, he was making it for his friend's friends.

And then the friends of his friend's friends demanded it.

Finally, he found he had a big business in his Osterloh's $ Mixture.

Now you, Mr. Dealer, want to sell tobacco on which repeat sales are big.



Any tobacco that will grow in public favor as Osterloh's $ Mixture has grown right from the beginning is the kind of tobacco you ought to carry—and push.

There are big sales and big profits in Osterloh's $ Mixture—and that is what you want.

Australia a Purchaser of Cuban Tobacco

Elliot R. Jacobs of the States Tobacco Co. of Melbourne Buys 1,200 Bales in Havana—A Considerable Increase of Cuban Cigar Exports—Partido Wrappers and Resagos Are Lower in Price—But Vuelta Abajo Leaf Probably Will Continue to Be High.

HAVANA, February 1.—Comparing the exports of cigars from Havana during the first half of January, 1918, with the same month in 1917 one experiences a pleasant surprise to note that Cuba increased the exports by nearly four million cigars. For in the month of December it looked as if exports would drop. The continuance of orders from Great Britain and the United States have helped materially, and recent shipments to other countries contributed also to the excellent result achieved. Nevertheless most manufacturers complain that high prices for leaf and the impossibility of raising the prices on the cheaper sizes, leave them hardly any margin of profit. The outlook for getting the new crop upon more favorable terms, so far as Vuelta Abajo is concerned, grows beautifully less from day to day, as the drought in the country continues, and unless a change for the better occurs, the quantity harvested will be smaller than last year.

The large factories are well supplied with orders, but the medium and smaller ones are not so fortunate, for besides having fewer orders, they can not replenish their stocks of leaf, except at a great sacrifice of money.

The leaf market during the past fortnight became quite active again. Purchases were made, not by American buyers alone, but buying has been done for the Spanish and Portuguese Regies, one good-sized transaction for Australia took place and local cigar and cigarette factories have secured more leaf. Prices remain very firm for all good vegas of Vuelta Abajo, and the different grades of Remedios, but Partido wrappers and Resagos are lower in price. Evidently the holders have come to the conclusion that the stocks are excessive for the lessened demand, and a good and large crop seems to be in sight. One American commission house purchased 800 bales for its customers upon lower terms.

There is no change in the crop news, as far as Vuelta Abajo is concerned, or for that matter as regards Semi Vuelta, Partido and Remedios. The latter is still regarded as promising the best yield.

Sales during the past fortnight totaled 12,337 bales, divided into: Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta, 7,953; Partido, 1,551, and Remedios, 2,833 bales.

Buyers were: Americans, 4,698; exporters to Europe, 2,200; shippers to South America, 1,012; to Australia, 1,200, and our local manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes, 3,227 bales.

Receipts of leaf tobacco from the country: From January 1 to January 24, 1918—

Vuelta Abajo	4,750	bales
Semi Vuelta	338	"
Partido	...	"
Remedios	784	"
Total	5,872	"

Exports of cigars from Havana per S. S. Wacouta, totaled 290 cases, containing 1,365,060 cigars, which were consigned to the following countries, viz.: To Great Britain, 613,945; United States, 466,090; Australia, 76,525; Canada, 58,500; Uruguay, 48,750; Argentine Republic, 41,000; Egypt, 37,500; Brazil, 12,750, and British Africa, 10,000 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco, from the port of Havana, during the week ending January 24, 1918, totaled 9,246 bales, and which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: To all ports of the United States, 6,769; to Canada, 465; to Spain, 1,000; to the Argentine Republic, 706; to Uruguay, 286, and to Chile, 20 bales.

Among the leaf buyers who arrived at Havana lately were Carlos Garcia, of Carlos Garcia & Co.; Ted Smith, of Hinsdale, Smith & Co., and Benito Rovira, the president of the Benito Rovira Co., all of New York. Harry Slavinsky, buyer of the Edomera Cigar Co., of Chicago. L. Fernandez, of L. Fernandez & Co., of Milwaukee. Pancho Arango, of Francisco Arango & Co.; Jose Escalante, of Jose Escalante & Co.; Leopoldo Bustillo, of M. Bustillo & Co., and Bernabe Diaz, of F. Lozano, Son & Co., all of Tampa. S. Grysmich, of S. Grysmich & Co., of Boston. There also returned to Havana: Abraham Haas, accompanied by his wife; Walter Sutter, of Walter Sutter & Co., and Joseph Mendelsohn, the president of the Manuel Suarez Co.

When Sidney Rothschild returned here, he formed one of a party of four, the other three being Elliot R. Jacobs, Mrs. Elliot R. Jacobs and Harry Rothschild. The latter represents the sterling house of Cullman Bros., of New York, while Mr. Jacobs is a director and manager of the States Tobacco Co., Pty Ltd., of Melbourne, Australia. He purchased and registered about 1,200 bales of our leaf with the assistance of the two Messrs. Rothschild, and as Australia has never before handled such a large quantity of our leaf, perhaps this may be the opening wedge of an extension of our trade in leaf tobacco.

Leslie Pantin was a buyer of 2,347 bales of leaf tobacco in the last fortnight for account of his customers.

The Cuban Land & Leaf Tobacco Co. purchased 1,365 bales for the supply of its local and American cigar factories.

Walter Sutter & Co. bought in all 1,099 bales of leaf, and of which 800 bales were Partido Resagos, for account of their American customers.

Cuesta, Rey & Co., the General Cigar Company and Y. Pendas & Alvarez were buyers each of several hundred bales of leaf tobacco lately.

Romeo y Julieta bought 632 bales of Vuelta Abajo last week, and the factory is as busy as never before at this time of the year.

Por Larranaga, Punch, Hoyo de Monterey, Belinda, Calixto Lopez & Co. are all busy.

Partagas purchased 895 bales of Vuelta Abajo last month. ROSAM.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., February 1.—Railway blockades, drifted highways and zero weather have again curtailed the movements of the tobacco crop in almost every direction. Little or no work can be accomplished on the farms towards preparing the crop for market while such severe winter weather continues. Some receiving is going on at warehouse points, but it is quite impossible to set delivery dates at country stations where shipments to packing houses are contemplated because of the uncertainty to get cars for loading. So the receiving of the crop seems likely to be a question of patience and improvement in railroad facilities. The shutting down of the packing plants on Mondays in conformity with the fuel saving order further delays the season's work but is submitted to gracefully.

The only transaction in old leaf noted is th sale of a 132cs lot of '16 by John Linaas, mad to C. H. Spitzner & Son.

Shipments out of storage are still bein held up by embargo on eastern consignment in spite of the pressing needs of some of th manufacturers.—Edgerton Reporter.

DEMAND FOR HAWAIIAN TOBACCO.

The output of tobacco of the Kona district o the island of Hawaii, which a few years ag practically went a-begging for lack of custom ers, either locally or on the mainland, has be come a certain commodity in the market, an practically all the tobacco in Kona was recentl disposed of to Harry Green, of San Francisco at rates which were far above previous offers The price was 28 cents.

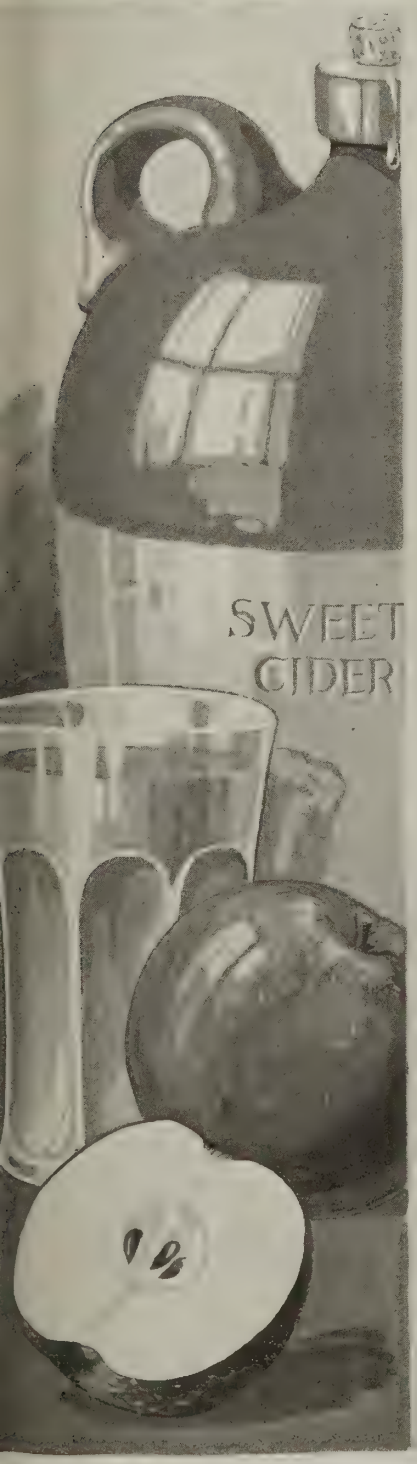
The tobacco industry in Kona has had har sledding for years and the shortage of tobacc in Cuba and other places at last caused th manufacturers to turn to Hawaii for a new supply. A few years ago a representative of one of the Kona tobacco raising concerns went to New York, but, after going from house to house and waiting at his hotel for weeks for orders, found that his product could not be sold except at a fearful loss.

With a successful planting year the prospects for Hawaiian tobacco have become very much brighter.

Pay Roll Statistics

WASHINGTON, February 4.—Experts of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor who have charge of the monthly figures on labor employment have noted for the month of November that the cigar-manufacturing industry showed the greatest increase in the number of employees for that month, 11 per cent. In connection with the change in wage rates the report for November says:

"In the cigar-manufacturing industry one plant reports an increase of 8 per cent of its salaried men—about 2 per cent of the force."



Comparing the employment in the same establishments for November, 1917, and 1916, the figures show that of the 57 cigar manufacturing plants answering both years there were 18,135 persons employed in November, 1916, increasing the following year to 20,129, or an increase of 11 per cent. The payroll in these same plants in November, 1916, amounted to $209,222, increasing the following year, same month, to $258,904, or an increase of 23.7 per cent.

Taking up the statistics in 61 cigar manufacturing plants for October, 1917, and November, 1917, it is shown that in October there were 19,727 persons employed, which increased the following month to 20,777 or an increas of 5.3 per cent. The payroll in these establishments in October was $250,809, increasing in November to $269,527 or an increase of 7.5 per cent.

NO EXPORT LICENSE DUPLICATES.

The War Trade Board announces that hereafter no duplicate of an export license which has been lost will be issued unless and until an affidavit is made by the applicant, upon an approved form and filed with the War Trade Board, stating that the original license has been lost or destroyed, and that no goods whatever have been shipped under said license, and agreeing that in case the original license is found the applicant will return the same to the War Trade Board immediately; and further agreeing not to ship or attempt to ship any merchandise under the original license, under penalty of the law.

Good Judgment Dictated 6c on Tom Keene

It is a fact that cigar makers' wages are now the highest ever paid in the industry, enabling them to meet the high cost of living.

. . . . . .

It is a fact that tobacco, boxes, labels, freights, etc., have all advanced so that they have materially increased cigar costs.

. . . . . .

It is a fact that Uncle Sam has taxed tobacco $60,000,000. for war purposes in addition to the revenue taxes which still remain in force, and we all contribute our share—cheerfully.

. . . . . .

It is a fact that these advances in the cost of producing the Tom Keene Cigar must be met to maintain quality.

Dependable Cigars
— — what should they cost?

Last year your lucky brothers enjoyed over 100,000,000 OWL and WHITE OWL Cigars. They paid 5c for OWL, Londres shape and for the Invincible WHITE OWL 6c.

To get really dependable cigars these experienced smokers gladly pay, today, 6c for the OWL. For WHITE OWL—7c. Aware as they are, of 1918 costs in cigar making they know that we could not continue to uphold OWL and WHITE OWL dependability and charge less.

For we constantly maintain for these two cigars a great store of aging leaf. And never does a bit of this leaf go into OWL and WHITE OWL until experts in curing say, "Now this lot has reached the very peak of mellow fragrance."

Such curing takes, on the average, 18 months. And it requires, friends, an investment of never less than $1,000,000 in idle leaf. And at some seasons almost $2,000,000.

Manufacturing Activity Evidenced By 1917 Foreign Trade

The 1917 activity of the manufacturers of the United States is evidenced by the fact that the value of manufacturing material imported in 1917 was double that of 1915. The value of manufacturing material imported, as shown by a compilation by The National City Bank of New York, in the calendar year 1917, was in round terms $1,800,000,000 against $957,000,000 in 1915 and $874,000,000 in 1914. Manufacturing material formed in 1917 61% of the total merchandise imported against 54% in 1915 and 49% in 1914.

Another evidence of the activity of the manufacturers of the United States in the year just ended, is found in the fact that the value of manufactures exported in the calendar year 1917 aggregated nearly $4,000,000,000 against $1,791,000,000 in 1915 and $974,000,000 in 1914.

Thus manufacturing material imported in 1917 was nearly double that of 1915 and more than double that of 1914, and manufactures exported were more than double those of 1915 and four times as much as in 1914, the year in which the war began.

These large increases in manufacturing material imported occurred in nearly all of the important articles of foreign production required in our industries. India rubber imports of 1917, for example, aggregate over 400,000,000 pounds against 270,000,000 pounds in 1916 and 221,000,000 in 1915, and the value in 1917 was approximately $240,000,000 against $160,000,000 in 1916 and $111,000,000 in 1915. Hides imported in 1917 show a slight increase in quantity when compared with 1915 but a large advance in total value, aggregating for 1917 over $200,000,000 in value against $173,000,000 in 1916, $127,000,000 in 1915 and $112,000,000 in 1914. Raw silk imports of 1917 show a total value of nearly $200,000,000 against $150,000,000 in 1916, $95,000,000 in 1915 and $93,000,000 in 1914. Wool imports of 1917 aggregate in value over $150,000,000 against $125,000,000 in 1916, $95,000,000 in 1915 and $58,000,000 in 1914. Tin imports of 1917 show a total value of approximately $70,000,000 against $56,000,000 in 1916, $39,000,000 in 1915 and $33,000,000 in 1914. Fibres show an aggregate value in 1917 of about $100,000,000 compared with $66,000,000 in 1916 and $45,000,000 in 1915. Raw cotton shows a total value for 1917 of approximately $46,000,000 against $26,000,000 in 1915 and $23,000,000 in 1914.

While some parts of these large increases for 1916 are due to higher prices, the quantities imported are in most cases much larger, especially when compared with 1915. Rubber imports for 1917 are nearly double those for 1915; silk about 25% more than in 1915; wool, despite the scarcity and extreme high prices, slightly more than in 1915 but less than in 1916, and hides slightly in excess of 1915 but below the total of 1916.

The share which the manufacturers of the country have in the foreign trade shows a marked growth as a result of the war. Raw material imported for manufacturing formed in 1917 43% of the total imports against 33% in 1914, manufactures for use in manufacturing 18% compared with 15% in 1914, and total manufacturing material 61% of the total imports of 1917 against 48% in 1914. Manufactures exported formed in 1917 66% of the total exports against 51% in 1915 and 47% in 1914.

The Dehner cigar factory at Burlington, Iowa, has been closed down since the holidays. This is the first shut-down for the establishment in a number of years. Concerning the delay in resuming work, the Burlington Hawkeye says: "The firm had a very heavy stock on hand, which was to be reduced. The plant was to be overhauled, and the painters have almost finished brightening up the rooms. Other improvements are planned, and it is the intention to resume operations within a week. The installation of machines for putting on binders is planned. The factory has been a union shop up to the present, and the relations between employer and employe have been all that could be desired. There are questions at issue now.

BETTER BE SAFEGUARDED

FIRE PROTECTION MAY FALL DOWN

(Copyrighted, 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

————, Ohio.

Please advise upon a dilemma in which we nd ourselves. We have a large double store ere which up to the time of a fire which we ad a few days ago, was crowded with a large mount of stock. Please omit names and ad-resses if you print, for certain reasons. The re almost completely destroyed our store nd contents, and the loss being several thou-ands more than we had insurance to cover. he reason was not having enough water for se by the fire companies.

Our town is supplied with water by a mun-ipal water company and we pay taxes for ater for all purposes. Owing to political oubles the town has allowed the reservoir nd plant to run down, and the supply of ater for all purposes, especially for putting ut fires, is not what it should be. The pres-ire at our fire was very poor and the conse-uence was that the fire got beyond the fire-ien, who worked manfully, and almost utted everything.

As we are taxed for our water supply, is ot the city liable for our loss, same being be-use of not enough water? It seems to the riter as if we had a good claim against the ty. We can produce all kinds of testimony om expert firemen that they would have put ie fire out a full hour before they did if they ad had enough water.

R. O. M. & Co.

This inquiry fits in well with an incident hich recently transpired with a client of ine, who was hesitating whether to install n expensive system of sprinklers in his lant for the purpose of automatically extinguishing fire. He consulted me about it, and after an examination of the law, I advised him to install the sprinklers, for the reason that in the average case a property owner who has a fire that is made worse by an insufficient supply of water, has no claim against a city water company. The law holds that since a municipal water company is performing a governmental function when it supplies water, it cannot be sued for cupplying it inefficiently or negligently. Perhaps the layman will hardly comprehend this, and even to lawyers it doesn't seem quite in accord with justice, yet it is the settled law.

It therefore behooves business people who dread fires to provide all the protection they can for themselves and not to depend too much on the city furnishing the protection.

It follows from what I have said that this correspondent cannot successfully sue his town for failure to give him enough water.

This is from a leading case:—

A municipal corporation (city, town, etc.) undertaking by the establishment of water works or through other means, to prevent destruction by fire of property of its inhabitants, performs a public or governmental function and is not liable to them for the burning of such property in consequence of a failure of such municipality, or any agency employed by it, to supply sufficient water.

And another case holds that

There is no liability even where the city has taxed the property owner for water, and where there was an understanding that there should always be an adequate supply for extinguishing fires.

The courts go to the utmost limit in protecting city water companies, even against the results of gross negligence, and even in protecting private water companies. In one case it was held that where a city granted a private water company a franchise, and provided by ordinance—to which the company agreed—that the company "should pay all damages that may arise to any citizen by reason of the company's failure to supply sufficient water to extinguish fires," the company was not liable where insufficient water aggravated a fire and increased the loss.

I was talking the other day with a wholesale merchant who does business in a town which brags of its public water company. It is such a good water company, and has such a fine supply of water that this particular business man carries about half as much insurance as he ought to have. I was able to enlighten him a little as to where he would stand in case he had a fire, and the boasted water system, just then, should break down. If I were a business man in a town which maintained its own water company, I should, if I knew the law, completely cover myself with insurance. Really, the business interests of a town or city which has a private water company are, if the company has made proper contracts with its subscribers, much safer than those served by city water companies. It is well established that a private water company which unconditionally contracts with consumers to supply them with sufficient water at proper pressure for fire purposes, is liable for damages where damage is suffered because of insufficient water or insufficient pressure.

Many Blanc & Co. Become Manufacturers

Chicago Distributors of Garcia Grande and El Dallo Acquire a Factory and Will Feature the Shrine Cigar—Dealers' Association Secures Many New Members —An Interesting Session—Thomas Describes Business as Being Good in Minneapolis—"Hold Up Men" Continue to Molest Merchants in the Windy City—Various Trade Items.

CHICAGO, January 30.—Many Blanc & Co. have purchased the Shrine Cigar factory and will enter the manufacturing field, featuring the "Shrine" label. The factory, located in the same building with Many Blanc & Co., will begin operations in a few days, with Mr. Issacson, the former owner, as manager. This house controls several well-known brands including El Dallo and Garcia Grande. Scarcity of goods and increased business prompted the firm to go into the manufacturing end, the products to be sold by the sales force. Complete support is assured by the local trade to Many Blanc & Co.

The Chicago Dealers Association met Monday evening at King's Restaurant. A luncheon followed the enrollment of many new members. Interesting speeches were delivered by L. Hoffman, Henry Kantor, Chas. Winkleman, Paul Drell, Julius Dulsky, Harry Janek, John A. Weber, Harry L. Harris, E. Rappaport, and S. M. Bernstein. A red, white and blue button, with the picture of an Indian in the center, is being made to be worn as an emblem by the members. A committee was appointed to see why cigar stores cannot remain open Mondays, provided heat and light are not used, and to find out why hotels, clubs, and drug stores are not included in the fuel order. A resolution was passed that a telegram be sent to Washington asking for a ruling on the matter. A big mass meeting will be called shortly to discuss the situation.

Carl Thomas, owner of a chain of stores in Minneapolis, and Sec'y of the Minneapolis Cigar Dealers Assn., paid Chicago a visit and reported good business in his home town. His association has 700 members and is steadily growing. While here Thomas kept in touch with Clark Cutler and F. P. Oakes. After looking at Gato's "Cressida" clear havana line, Thomas left an order and started back home.

The La Salle Sherman, and Morrison Hotel cigar stands, as well as the Schulte stores, were open Monday.

Frank Lopez, representing Garcia & Vega, who always finds this town a profitable field, paid a visit to our city and put up at the Illinois Athletic Club.

Frank Elliott, formerly with Park & Tilford, N. Y., and now handling the Cordero line, breezed into town.

M. E. Micko, of W. S. Conrad & Co., St. Paul, was here last week. Mr. Micko is secretary of this well-known Twin Cities jobbing company.

Prince Albert, in the 2 ounce size, is now on sale. It sells for 13 cents, two tins for 25 cents.

Cuesta Rey cigars have changed in price, and Thorwart & Roebling are advising the trade concerning the advance. Cuesta Reys are good sellers and can be found all over town.

A. L. Levy, the Garcia Grande traveler, is here. He found the distributors, Many Blanc & Co., very short on this well-known brand. Prices have increased on this brand and there is talk of selling the old 10-cent sizes for 11 cents to overcome the raise.

Morris Weiss, who represented the United Cigar Dealers Co. in the local market for a long period, has resigned and is now the manager of a large retail cigar store out in Logan Square.

The news that the Tobacco Products Corporation has acquired the business of the Falk Tobacco Co. came as a surprise to most dealers here. A few knew of the pending deal. The Falk Co. does a large business in this territory.

John King, of the Havana-American Co., took a run up to Milwaukee last week to look things over. John increased his business last year $180,000 over the previous year.

Another traveler to visit the "Cream City" was Ramon Dobler, who booked several fine orders for Park & Tilford.

The big express companies are limiting the collection of packages. "The Garfield Monday order affecting saloons has done the same thing."

L. C. Widduck, at 118 North La Salle street, has hung up a big sign calling the smokers' attention to the fact that they are closed on Mondays, "Fuelless Day."

Albert Ellinger, merchandising manager of the Boston Store, passed away at his home here a few days ago. He was 45 years of age. His reputation for merchandising was international.

Hats off to Wm. White, the new manager of Albert Breitung's store at 40 North La Salle street. White has a way of drawing and holding trade. And a big increase in business is noted at this place. Shown in fine window displays this week are the Statesman of Jeitles & Blumenthal, Henry Weaver from Heineman Bros., Baltimore and Club Quality, Mansart and Albrituna from Harris-Schwarz, Inc.

Pandora, the mild Havana from the factory of the Erlich Manufacturing Co., is advertised in the newspapers. Sprague Warner & Co. are the distributors.

The Hotel La Salle Company has filed papers at Springfield decreasing the number of its directors.

The Mayer Drug Co., of Chicago, has increased its capital from $2,500 to $10,000.

The Chicago Morning Telegraph, a theatrical newspaper, has been revived. This paper was founded in 1913 by Jack Lait and Thos. Bourke. It is published every Saturday.

All retail stores in Iowa except drug stores may be open from 8.30 a. m. to 5.30 p. m., the State fuel administrator has ordered.

"Smokey" Heilbronner, of Heilbronner & Jacobs of Philadelphia, "breezed" in before all trains were annulled. Havana Brown cigars are carried by several dealers.

Charles Daly, Wengler & Mandell's manager, was kept home for 10 days. Charlie suffered from an attack of la grippe. Business with this store, which is located at Madison and Dearborn streets, is very good, in fact January was far ahead of last year.

A firm that entered the retail game last year with three stores in the loop is finding the going hard and is trying to dispose of one of the stores. A deal is pending and details will follow later.

Tom Keenes are featured in newspaper displays and Owls and White Owls are securing a lot of attention through well placed advertising.

Cabarets are "up against it strong" these days. Besides having to close Sundays because of the State law, they must close Monday because of the Garfield coalless order. They must close Tuesday also if they make a covert charge. The attorney general has classed them as amusements with theatres, movies, dance halls and the like, and Tuesday is amusementless day.

The drug store of Newman Kohn at 3 West 75th street was held up and touched for $60. L. A. Eisenberg at 6527 Champlain avenue, had his drug store robbed.

The National Cigar Store located in the First National Bank building has a fine display of Valkyries. This is one of their leading sellers. Pipes of the better kind are featured in this progressive store. H. L. H.

ROPER GRANTS RELIEF

Commissioner of Internal Revenue Mitigates Hardships Excess Profits Tax Would Impose Because of Conditions Peculiar to Tampa Cigar Factories.

It has been customary for most of the cigar factories in Tampa to pay their executive heads only a nominal weekly salary, which has been entirely satisfactory to officers and stockholders but it is found that under the workings of the war excess profits tax the factories are paying an undue proportion of tax, compared with other corporations and partnerships. The matter was of such importance that it was taken up by Senators Fletcher and Trammell, assisted by Attorney Peter O. Knight, and brought to the attention of Daniel Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Mr. Roper has granted the desired relief, as shown by the following letter from him to Senator Trammell:

"My Dear Senator: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 8th instant, with which you forward a letter from P. O. Knight of Tampa, with regard to the matter of making reasonable salary allowances for the supervisory heads of concerns manufacturing cigars in Tampa, Fla.

"It appears that a peculiar condition has existed and still exists in regard to the payment of salaries to the individuals in question. The great majority of the manufacturers are Spaniards, and the bookkeeping methods and the manner of transacting business are distinctly Spanish. Some of the concerns are corporations, others are partnerships. It has been the custom to pay the executive heads and officers a nominal sum each week, exactly the same as if these officers were employes only.

"In the past this practise has made no material difference, inasmuch as the earnings of the manufacturers have been distributed to the owners of the business who are all actually engaged in the business. Now, however, a condition exists which may have the effect of working a hardship on these concerns in comparison with other corporations and partnerships. That is the war excess profits tax imposed by Title II of the Acts of October 3, 1917, is of such importance that unless the acting heads of the business are allowed a reasonable salary to be charged against expenses in preparing the return of annual net income, those manufacturers will be subject to a tax not at all in proportion to the real earnings on the business.

"The information submitted in this connection has been given very careful consideration, and I agree with you and Mr. Knight that the peculiar condition referred to is one that needs relief, and you are informed that it is not considered illegal or improper for either corporations or partnerships to pay salaries to their officers, provided such salaries are based upon actual services rendered in behalf of the corporations or partnerships and in no particular to be based upon the capital invested in the business by such officers.

"In the event that such salaries are properly established, deduction based thereon will be allowed in ascertaining the net income of these concerns, not only for subsequent years, but also in the return filed for the year 1917, which should be filed on or before March 1, 1918.

"Sincerely yours,

"D. C. ROPER, Commissioner."

"THE UNWELCOME CENT COMES TO STAY"

Esberg Wins Two Suits of Clothes—Cigar Men on the Pacific Coast Have Ascertained the Value of the Penny—Improvements and Expansion at M. A. Gunst Headquarters—Ehrman Bros. Report Excellent Business—Advantageous Advertising for Six Cent Cigars

San Francisco, January 30.—The people are getting used to the Six Cent Cigar, or perhaps it may be expressed better in the language of Mose Gunst, the veteran cigar man of the Coast. "The unwelcome cent has come to California to stay," he says. "The cigar man, by necessity, has learned the value of the penny,.and he has found that he can give the consumer his money's worth in a way that he could not do before." Edward A. Cohn, sales manager of the General Cigar Co., says, "It is all a matter of getting the penny habit. The women get it first and the men follow. The war is giving us all the penny habit." Cohn said that the increased cost of tobacco and labor together with the war tax made it necessary to use the penny. When it was first under discussion cigar men said that the men of this State would not use the penny and that sales would fall off at least 35 per cent. Milton Esberg, vice president of M. A. Gunst & Co., was the only one, according to Cohn, who thought it could be done and he won two suits of clothes from his associates on the question, for experience has demonstrated that thus far no difference in sales is shown by the books. "Smokers are getting used to paying six cents," says H. L. Judell. "The Tom Keene and T. & O. are just as much in demand at the increased price as formerly." Other dealers are as emphatic as the above and it would appear that the Odd-Penny cigar has won its way in this territory.

The M. A. Gunst Branch has leased the premises adjoining its headquarters on California street, which will give the store 5,000 additional square feet of space. The new quarters will be used for the offices of the executives of the General Cigar Co., and of the M. A. Gunst Branch, as well as the executives of the retail department of the Gunst Branch. It will contain a large meeting room for the salesmen as well as the stationery and supply department. The vacated portions of the present store will be devoted to a large wholesale salesroom and the accounting department will be greatly enlarged. The mezzanine floor will be given over to the window department.

B. Mersky, the prominent jobber, who was sued by his nephew, Fred Mersky, for an accounting on allegations of partnership, has been given judgment on the ground that no partnership existed.

Ehrman Bros. & Co., report that business is excellent with them. They have no difficulty in selling goods and their main trouble is in making deliveries. The firm is oversold in ten cent and three for a quarter cigars and in the Santaella, Optimo and Roi Tans.

E. A. Goodwin, 322 Market street is making a fine window display of Isabella Manila cigars, and reports that the sale of the cigar which he is featuring is growing to immense proportions.

Phil Conradi, Jr., of Phil Conradi & Son, has just returned from a very successful tr through the northern part of the State. H leaves for the States north of California ne week and will extend his trip into Briti Columbia.

Eddie Allenberg, salesman for E. Golinsk & Co., one of the best known men in th trade, was stricken with appendicitis at Sa Jose recently and brought to this city whe he was operated on. He is reported to b progressing finely.

Arthur Meyers, Pacific Coast agent for th Humboldt cigar, is visiting the trade in th interior of the State.

Advices have been received here giving n tice of an early advance in the price of cle Havana goods.

That Government control of the railroa has its advantages is demonstrated in a shi ment of cigars which recently reached H. Judell & Co. The shipment was billed over t Santa Fe and arrived over the Western P cific. By thus diverting the shipment th Government landed the shipment in this ci in remarkably short time from the east.

TAMPA DISAPPOINTED

Id Not Get Naval Base—But Cigar Production Increases—Stamp Sales for January Jump Up.

TAMPA, February 2.—Of interest to cigar anufacturers and tobacco dealers generally, the announcement, made yesterday, that ie Atlantic Coast Line railroad will discon- nue its fast train, the Tampa special, run- ig between Tampa and Jacksonville and onnecting with large cities of the East and Vest. The train is discontinued in order to ieet the government's need of engines for he hauling of war supplies. The discontin- ance is effective Sunday night.

Tampans were greatly disappointed late iis week over the announcement, from Vashington, that the report of the Naval ase Commission relative to the establish- ient of a naval base on the Gulf or Southern tlantic coasts would not be favorable to iis city, the report favoring the Virgin slands, it is said, instead. The fight in be- alf of Tampa will not be given up, however.

Internal revenue collections for the month f January amounted to $109,553.67 as com- ared with $88,910.67 for the first month of 917. The increase is due to increase in cigar roduction. A falling off in customs receipts or the month was shown, however, the rec- rd being $153,381.76 as compared with $211,- 88.78 for 1917.

Cigar manufacturers and other visitors to ie city will be pleased to know that signs or the designation of many important streets ave recently been ordered by the City ouncil.

The rush on at the various factories is hown by the internal revenue receipts. Quite number of manufacturers, however, have as et not raised their prices, as a result of which he question is still being agitated. Those ho have made increases contend that they re absolutely necessary for making the busi- ness profitable under the present conditions.

George Leon of the San Martin & Leon factory, has moved his family from Havana and will remain here permanently.

Matthew W. Berriman of Berriman Bros., is still detained by business at the New York office of the firm.

USED A WASTE BASKET

To Conceal Stolen Cigars and Cigarettes—Rothenberg & Schloss Looted of Thousands of Dollars Worth of Goods.

How five men are said to have systematically looted the Rothenberg & Schloss cigar stores at Springfield, O., of thousands of dollars' worth of cigars, tobacco and cigarettes was revealed at police headquarters after the arrest of two men at a cigar store at 18th street and Grand avenue by City Detectives Paul Wirtkam and Edward Smith.

The plan followed by the accused men, according to a confession made by one of them, was for a clerk in one of the stores to drop cigars and cigarettes into a waste basket. Then the porter would empty the basket into a trash can. Later the fireman, who was supposed to burn all trash, would sort out the tobacco and call an expressman, who carted the loot away and concealed it. At auspicious times the cigars and cigarettes would be sold to saloonkeepers and other dealers. One saloonkeeper, who is said to have bought some of the cigars, will be cited to appear before the police board.

Says the Herald of Quincy, Ill.: "Walter H. Levi has accepted an offer made him by the directors of the Illinois State Bank under which he will take possession of the cigar stands and billiard hall in the bank building at Sixth and Hampshire. The furniture and fixtures are in place, just as before Mr. Enlow made assignment as an insolvent, and will be used by Mr. Levi, who will take from his establishment at 611 Maine street only his stock. He is negotiating for the sale of his furniture and fixtures there, and the store is not likely to be closed, or, if closed, to remain in that condition only a short time."

BOSTON'S CHIEF WOE IS A LACK OF COAL

Cigar Dealers Scrupulously Obey the Closing Order

BOSTON, February 4.—The Monday closing order has been obeyed to the letter by all here in Boston; no cigars could be purchased except where food was served.

The United Cigar Stores Co. had a special deal on Saturday, on all their merchandise, offering extra amounts of certificates with all purchases; the clerks got after each customer, advising him that he must buy his smokes that day, or he would go smokeless on Monday. This advice was also given by the independent stores and reports are to the effect that the total sales amounted almost equally to a two-day business.

Jobbers' salesmen, who formerly took Saturday as a holiday, are now calling on the trade and spending Monday at headquarters instead of Saturday.

King Coal is supreme in Boston this week. The shortage is greater now than at any period this winter, owing to the continued freezing weather; the coal barges have been stuck in the ice and can't get around the Cape. Schools and office buildings are closed.

Embargoes have tied up shipments coming from the South. The United States Tobacco Co., J. G. Dill and Larus Bros. Co. have received but little merchandise the past six weeks. Jobbers are short of cigarettes and tobacco.

Pippins and Totems are sold to the retailer so he can retail them for a nickel. How can these long established brands, made in Boston, bearing a Union Label, be purchased for five cents? How can the manufacturers do things that other concerns cannot or will not do, where labor is cheaper? That's their business. One does not know how much they are making, or how much they are losing, but they go on filling orders at these prices.

Jobbers' salesmen are worn to a frazzle trying to explain why their brands must be sold for six cents. The six cent proposition will not be an entire success until all brands are being sold at a six cent price.

The many friends of Fred Baker, of Baker Bros., extend their sympathy because of the death of his infant son.

The bursting of a hydrant on Devonshire street flooded all the cellars on Dock Square, causing considerable damage to the stock of M. Roitman, the Dock Square retailer and jobber.

R. M. Ellis, vice-president of the Tobacco Products Co., was a recent visitor.

Superintendent Pearson, of the United Cigar Stores Co., who has been confined to his home on account of illness, is back on the job again.

Reed Estabrook, of Estabrook & Eaton, passed the examination for a commission as an officer in the Aviation Corps.

Frank Taylor, of the selling force of C. B. who enlisted in the Naval Reserve, had shore leave last week, and called on some of the boys. Frank says selling cigars is a Sunday school picnic in comparison to the job he now holds down, manicuring decks and shampooing coal barges. He says he takes a lot of orders each day from his superior officers, which reminds him of the selling game.

Walker-Rintels Co., in their Summer street store, are featuring the brands of Wood, Pollard Co., who closed up their store on the next corner recently. Manager Bailey, formerly of the cigar department of Wood, Pollard, is selling to box trade.

Frank Taylor, of the Selling force of C. B. Perkins Co., is on his regular Vermont tri; he took along his own coal.

Baker Bros., the Broad street jobbers, a now handling the Philadelphia hand made si. cent cigar of Bayuk Bros.; this concern al has the Prince Hamlet line, that is makin some noise in the section.

The Marie Antoinette, the cigar par exce lence of Emil Kleiner Co., New York Cit made a big hit in the special holiday package This brand is in demand in the best and mo select clubs.

The Boston Druggists' Association cho Charles C. Hearn as president for 1918 at i annual meeting held recently at Young Hotel. The other officers are: Treasurer, Herbert Packard; secretary, Harry C. Wig gin; executive committee, Prof. E. L. Patc Charles F. Ripley, H. E. Bowman, A. H. Bar lett, William S. Briry, F. W Dolbier and Fre L. Carter.

Prof. Julius A. Brown, of Columbia, durin a speech at the meeting, discredited repor to the effect that United States forces abroa are not living clean and wholesome lives, an said that the troops are in the best possib condition, physically and morally.

One of the largest business deals which ha been consummated in Memphis for some tim was effected in the consolidation of two whol sale houses—the Fanning-Hay-Hart Co. an the Enochs-Edenton Co. The concerns hav a combined capital stock of $60,000, and will b directed by the following officers: Presiden J. W. Enochs; vice-president, Will C. Far ning; secretary and general manager, Wi W. Hay. GARCIA GRANDE'S undeniable mildness is associated with the distinctive quality of Vuelta Abajo tobacco.

When we originated the Garcia Grande, we gave the world a real mild Havana, a large cigar, a good cigar that could be sold for a moderate price. The Garcia Grande represents the triumph of a new idea.

The Garcia Grande has attained a national distribution, not through extensive advertising, but strictly on its merits. It has developed continually increasing sales in all parts of the country. The fact that it appeals to everyone who likes a mild Havana, makes the Garcia Grande a brand that both the jobber and retailer may depend on for steady business.

DARWIN R. JAMES DOES IT

mainly in drug stores. Adams, however, also had a pepsin gum, which logically reserved it for a place in the big push to come.

Looking about in the shop for the logical choices for their cardinal brands, the new managers decided upon Chiclets, which, in a considerably altered form, they decided to launch under the combined appeal of a candy and gum in one; Adams' Black Jack, because its licorice element made it a logical brand to push in winter, on the ground of the medicinal properties in licorice; Adams' Pepsin, a peppermint gum that already had a good name and approximately a national sale, in which the digestive point afforded possibilities in the light of Beeman's experience; and Primley's California Fruit, a flavorable gum in which they recognized a powerful chance for an appetite appeal to women.

There were any number of minor brands, unknown save in extremely restricted territories. Some of these were discarded forthwith, but others, because they enjoyed a constant and inclusively profitable demand, were allowed to stand as "bread-and-butter" sellers.

Before starting any national sales plan, however, the several plants were put upon a basis that would allow for the manufacture of the several leaders in the company's different factories all over the country. To do this necessitated considerable liberties with the size and shape of the packages in which the goods had previously been sold—no such liberties, however, as were taken in the package design embraced in the new selling plans. Machinery was installed that, because of this standardization of package methods and sizes, made it possible to produce any of the contemplated leaders in any of the plants.

It was a radical departure, one that the "crank" on the subject of good will might have considered suicidal—that taken in this very matter of package design. We have mentioned that what the new management had found was a total lack of brand relationship when it came in. What it sought for immediately, as Mr. James explained, was a common denominator, a base for all the company's products, that would identify every product and every advertising effort as of the company while in no way disturbing the value of the brand name.

With the package sizes now standard, radical changes were next made in the design and coloring of the wrappers. Perhaps the most extreme step taken, and one over which the old-timers were wont most to shake their heads, was that in regard to Primley's California Fruit gum. This brand was chosen for national exploitation, as explained, because of its appetite appeal possibilities, and because it was felt that it would appeal to women particularly. The well-known Primley name, a powerful trade factor in many ways, was first eradicated nevertheless, and that of Adams replaced it. This was simply because it was felt that if the unification plan was to carry through to success, there must be no compromise that would in any way tend to obstruct this objective. Compromise had failed originally. Under the new plan the name of American Chicle founded on the house of Adams was the focal point for all subsequent efforts, and therefore this brand proves an ideal case in point of what the new plan has sought to accomplish, namely, the establishment of a base without radical disturbance of the brand name. California Fruit with all its trade and consumer associations was retained, and the name of Adams, with no less of a trade influence, substituted for the name of Primley to meet the new scheme of things. The physical operation no doubt carried its painful features, but was regarded as necessary for the corporate good.

The change in wrapper design, again, was decidedly radical. The original had been a sort of corrugated silver foil with bright and unattractive red letters. In its place was substituted a soft gray lithographed paper wrapper with a blue border and the name Adams, subordinate to the brand name in white, with the new trade symbol in blue, white, red, yellow, brown, green and blue piles of fruit that start the mouth to watering at first sight.

This was one of the most sweeping transformations enacted and is representative of similar action with regard to other packages, on all of which the double-peaked trade-mark device was introduced. The Chiclets package, for instance, was changed from an apple green to a soft pastel shade of the same color. This brand also assumed the name of Adams, and the product itself was changed; the unit was enlarged, and its color changed from a dirty gray to clear white.

Color, so far as possible, was used in a package to represent the flavor of the gum so contained. Adams Clove has a fiery orange-colored wrapper that suggests the flavor of clove—"takes the breath away" is the double entendre of its slogan. Adams spearmint has a cool combination of black and green, and the Black Jack package has an oval black welt on a field of blue.

The Beeman package perhaps escaped with fewer changes than any other, the principal elimination being the mass of black line scroll work that cluttered the original design, and the substitution of a half-tone photograph of

In the Nyasaland protectorate, East Africa, while there was a considerable extension in tobacco growing by the natives, the total area under this crop declined from 9,042 acres in 1915-16 to 7,484 acres in 1916-17. Notwithstanding this falling off in acreage cultivated, the exports rose from 3,706,203 pounds (valued at $450,910) to 4,304,124 pounds (valued at $546,610). It is estimated that the Nyasaland crop amounted to 500,577 pounds of cured tobacco.

One of the most notable banquets ever held in Mobile was that tendered recently to George Gordon Crawford, head of the Chickasaw Shipbuilding Co., a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. The company recently completed in Mobile an immense ship building plant, and nearly 200 of Mobile's leading business men were so proud of this acquisition to the industries of their city that they had Proprietor S. H. Peck, of the Battle House, go to the limit in a banquet testimonial.

George Themelis and Harry Noble, of Themelis Bros. Co., were in Albany last week. They met with splendid success, placing Rose Tip cigarettes in the principal places in that city. In New York the demand for Rose Tip cigarettes is growing so among the fashionable set that the factory finds difficulty in getting sufficient roses. They have to send a messenger two or three times a week into Philadelphia to obtain the kind and quantity required. Lately Themelis Bros. Co. was able to procure some of the finest Turkish tobacco ever brought to America.

If you ever ran a Ford you will appreciate this one: Traveling men are wont to tell about the horrible things they run into and over during their voyages, but Ted Lyman, of the W. Duke Sons Tobacco Co., has 'em all beat. He had occasion to go down through the Florida Everglades last week, and when he got out, his reports about high water on the roads was terrible. He said it was so bad in some places and the water so high that he had to run nine miles on low gear with his feet up on the windshield of his car to keep them from getting wet. When some one asked him who held the low gear pedal, Lyman vanished.

As El Tabaco of Havana says it: "T steamer Morro Castle, of the Ward Line, le behind 1,713 packages of leaf tobacco, no withstanding that the custom house clea ances had been made, but as per orders of th head office in New York, the steamer had leave at once for Nassau, without being ab to take all the cargo engaged for New Yor The worst part is that the steamer Mexic which left a week later, only carried t bales, barrels and packs which the Mor Castle could not load, as she had to take aga a full cargo of sugar, according to superi instructions. The steamer Esperanza, whi should have arrived from New York on h schedule time last week, has not arrived y So it can be seen that our shippers ha enough difficulties to dispatch their goods.'

PROPER PUNISHMENT

Dnanded for Thieves Who Steal From Trucks—Merchants' Association Protests to District Attorney Swann.

The Merchants' Association of New York hs always been active in urging the prosecuton of thefts of merchandise from trucks or fm warehouses. On several occasions it has ben of assistance in pushing the prosecution o such thieves.

These thefts amount to a large sum annually ad lax prosecution encourages their repetition. The association has sent the following letter to te Hon. Edward Swann, District Attorney of te County of New York:

"We wish to call to your attention the folwing case now pending in Judge Rosalsky's Court.

"In July last a man named Jacob Goldberg, lving stolen a parcel of silks, was arrested ith the property in his possession and identifd on the spot by the clerk from whom the roperty was stolen. He was held by the Grand ry under bail of $500. The case was on the lendar of Judge Rosalsky's court about ten ys ago. Several witnesses, having been sumoned, were in attendance, but the essential itness, namely, the police officer who made te arrest, was not there. The case was acordingly adjourned to January 21. No cases ere heard by Judge Rosalsky that day, all of em being adjourned to the 22d, for which ate several witnesses were summonsed. The efendant, however, was not present in court and his attorney secured an adjournment to the following day. Again the defendant was not present and an adjournment was taken to January 24, on which date neither the defendant, his attorney nor the police officer witness were present.

"In all of these varied proceedings the civil witnesses made their successive appearances at much inconvenience. At today's hearing Mr. Bruno, a member of the firm of Watts, Franken and Bruno, who had suffered by the theft, protested to Assistant District Attorney Markowitz, who had charge of the case, complaining of the failure to produce the defendant in court and proceed with the trial. Mr. Markowitz stated that as the result of the proceedings thus far the defendant's bail would be forfeited.

"It is manifest that this case has not been pressed with proper vigor. The result appears to be that the defendant, who could and should have been convicted of a felony and sentenced to imprisonment, will escape proper punishment practically by the forfeiture of $500, apparently by reason of the failure of the Assistant District Attorney properly to perform his duty.

"It is of first importance to the business community, which is constantly suffering from thefts of merchandise, that the punishment of imprisonment be inflicted whenever the circumstances warrant, in order that such punishment may, as an example, be an effective deterrent to the repetition of such crimes. It is very discouraging to citizens, who as witnesses are required to make repeated appearances in court.

"We therefore bring the facts to your personal knowledge in the confident belief that you will cause an inquiry to be made into the conduct of this case."

THE PROTEST OF THE REED TOBACCO CO.

WASHINGTON, February 4.—A hearing is to be held at Richmond, Va., on February 11, before Examiner Spethman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission in case No. 9742 of the Reed Tobacco Co. against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad et al.

The Commissioners have also just announced that they will reopen I & S Docket No. 921 relative to southeastern rates on manufactured tobacco. The case is being reopened so that further testimony may be taken.

PRICES MAINTAINED IN CARROLLTON.

CARROLLTON, Ky., January 25.—The Carrollton tobacco market maintained the better prices established the forepart of the week, which are equal to the opening week in December. All grades in strong demand. On baskets of better quality prices ranged from $8 to $45 a hundred. Estimated sales amounted to 155,000 pounds, with an average of $24.07, one house not reporting. Receipts indicate heavy deliveries for next week.

The building record for the Borough of Manhattan in New York in 1917 was the lowest in twenty-five years, both in number of new buildings and their cost. Plans for 363 buildings were filed during the year at an estimated cost of $29,214,200. The largest number of buildings ever projected in Manhattan in one year was in 1899, when 4,934 buildings were built at a cost of $129,250,376.

FIGHTING TOBACCO HORNWORMS.

WASHINGTON, February 4.—The Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, in a recent report to the Secretary of Agriculture on tobacco insects, says:

The investigations relating to tobacco insects at Clarksville, Tenn., have been confined principally to the tobacco hornworms, the mosaic disease, the tobacco beetle, tobacco cutworms, and miscellaneous insects.

Field experiments and observations upon remedies for the control of tobacco hornworms were conducted in 11 counties in Kentucky, three in Tennessee, two in Virginia, and two in North Carolina. In all, 156 experiments with arsenate of lead were made by agents of this bureau, and records of 244 applications of arsenate of lead and Paris green by the farmers were obtained. It was found that the farmers were obtaining practically twice as good results with arsenate of lead, which in many cases they had applied for the first time, as with paris green, which they had be using for years. The records show also that results obtained by the farm were not as good as those obtained fr applications made by agents of the t reau. On large tobacco a four-pou application of arsenate of lead has be found to be sufficient, unless a conside able number of eggs are present, which case it is necessary to apply fi pounds in order to keep the tobacco fr of worms for a week or 10 days. It w determined, further, that on account the small spread of the tobacco plants the more Eastern States an applicati of three to four pounds will be as effe tive in certain regions of Virginia a North Carolina as one of four to fi pounds in Tennessee and Kentucky.

And new appliances were tried.

NATIONALIZING GUM BRANDS

Doctor Beeman for the black line cut of the original. The result is a far simpler and more harmonious combination of soft grays and blacks that at the same time retains the essential design of the other.

The reason for this retention without other change was this: Beeman's had been the first gum to include and feature pepsin as a digestive desirability in a chewing gum. It had a strong hold in certain quarters all over the country, and so, while the management planned to make of Adams Pepsin one of its national leaders, it seemed best to continue to capitalize the good will represented in this line, and to feature the brand as a part of the "uplift" propaganda that was to play an important part in the company's subsequent advertising plans.

Similarly, under the same plans, White's Yucatan, which enjoyed an immense prestige in a certain territory, was allowed to retain the name of White for the time being, although the new emblem flanks the old trade name of the famous pink wrapper at either hand. A special advertising campaign for Yucatan was launched in its territory, when the big national drive was started. So popular is this brand locally that presently it may be put into the national field, undergoing in the process a shift to the new base name of the others.

Kis-Me, another immensely popular brand in its own right, and place, also underwent a marked change of dress, a bright red and white checkered uniform replacing the unappealing black and white-bescrolled affair so long its cloak. The new order found a supply of the old wrappers on hand sufficient for twenty years, at least, but still they have gone into the discard. The name of Adams also now surmounts the brand name.

An important point that the management established early in its investigation was the bearing of display on sales. Several different brands were displayed singly in certain appointed stations, and at each of these stations the brands in sight proved to be the big sellers. This led to the design of a uniform carton in which the gum comes packed, with folding wings that tilt the box at an angle for displaying the packages, and a back wing that follows out the decorative color scheme and design of the different brands, replacing the flat and often extremely hideous boxes of the old days, out of which the gum was either taken and put into dishes by the retailer, or else rested modestly and inconspicuously on shelves.

It is too long a story to go into the sweeping sales reorganization that took place as a natural corollary to this vast change. It was entirely in line with the same principles of modern practice. The disconnected and chaotic conditions of individual factory sales units were swept away, and a centrally controlled plan of territorial sales branches established in its place.

Preliminary returns from factories indicate a probable outturn of 466,000,000 pounds of sugar in Lousiana for the current season, and the estimated amount of cane used for sugar is about 3,600,000 tons. Since these returns for the 1917-18 season were made before the factories had completed their operations, the totals estimated above are subject to later revision. Last year (1916-17) 607,800,000 pounds of sugar were made from 4,072,000 short tons of cane, making an average yield of 149 pounds of sugar for each ton of cane. The average yield of sugar for the current season is forecast as about 130 pounds per ton of cane.

The largest storage building in the world has just been completed in the Brooklyn Na Yard. It has 700,000 square feet of sto space.

Tobacco men in York, Pa., are shouti lustily over the fact that the Internal Reven office in that city collected $145,211.86 duri the month of December, which was nearly $2 000 more than was gathered in during the cc responding period in 1916. They also call a tention to the fact that fourteen new cig factories were opened in York county in 191 giving employment to over 1,500 persons. Go record for a Pennsylvania community—b such a measly collection would be laughed at Winston-Salem, and Uncle Sam would thi North Carolina had abandoned tobacco growi and tobacco manufacturing. Unless the t gatherer rakes in an average of a couple of m lions of tobacco dollars each month in this go town we get discouraged.—Southern Tobac Journal.

SOLE ORGAN OF THE WHOLESALE AND RETAIL TOBACCO TRADE

Vol. LXV. No. 18. NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 14, 1918. PER ANNUM, $2.00 SIX MONTHS, $1.00

VANDERLIP ILLUSTRATES

"I tell you we have come to a time when we have got to weigh the expenditure of dollars in a new scale. It is no longer a question of whether we can afford to buy a thing that we want," says Frank A. Vanderlip. "The question now is: Can the nation afford to have us buy it? When we spend a dollar we put it into either one pan or the other of a balance. If it goes in on the side of unnecessary expenditure—if by spending it we employ labor unnecessarily, consume material, needlessly take up room in a workshop—that pan will go down and the pointer will turn away from victory. If we put it in the other pan of the scales—if we lend it to the government—we do two things: We give the government credit and we give the government room in the workshops to get its job done. We release labor that we have been commanding; we release material.

"Suppose you wanted a chauffeur, and you saw a man driving an ambulance. Would you stop him and say: 'I can give you a better job. I will pay you more than the government is paying you. You may be on an errand of mercy, but get off; I want a chauffeur'? You wouldn't do that.

"Suppose you saw a man turning out a shell at a lathe, and you knew that shell was going to be an effective instrument in a battle. Would you say: 'Shut off your lathe. Take that out. The cylinder of my automobile needs fixing. I want you to make a bicycle for my boy. I have a job; I will pay you more than the government is paying you'? Suppose your wife saw a woman making a gas mask. Would she say: 'I want a garment made. I want a new hat. Stop on that work'? Knowing that the gas mask might save an American life, she wouldn't say that.

"Yet we are all doing just that thing—all needlessly spending employees, money and labor and materials that ought to be going into the equipment of the army and the battle for victory."

COLLECTING SMOKES FOR ITALIAN SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT

To every nation now at war, comes a realization of the necessity for procuring smokes for the men who are fighting. In Rome today, through the ancient streets that once resounded to the tread of Caesar's legions, trundles this automobile collecting load after load of cigars, cigarettes and smoking tobacco for Italian soldiers at the front. However poor some of them may be, the people of Italy are generous in answering the appeal made in behalf of the men who are holding the foe on the line of the Piave.

PROMPT AND COMPLETE ASSURANCE IS GIVEN

From France, Major Perkins cables the following answer which should put a quick stop to insinuations that tobacco, sent to be distributed by the Red Cross to soldiers, is being sold:

"2018—Your 6521. Have been absolutely unable to run down any case in which tobacco has been sold by any member of our organization. Absolute unqualified orders have been in effect for months that under no circumstances should tobacco be sold by American Red Cross. Occasion might arise where individual soldier with saving tendency would sell tobacco to less provident companion, and this might be tobacco given him by one of the American newspapers. Every effort being made to see every American soldier receive some of newspaper tobacco, and we will continue to distribute as fast and as equitably as possible."

(Signed) PERKINS.

A GET-TOGETHER LUNCHEON

To Be Given by the New York Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade at Haan's Restaurant Saturday—Addresses By Prominent Men.

The New York Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade will give a get-together luncheon at Haan's Park Row Restaurant, Saturday, February 16, at 1 P. M. Beverly D. Harris, vice-president of the National City Bank of New York, will speak on trade acceptances, and it is hoped to have also an address by ex-Congressman Murray Hurlbutt on the "Advantages of a Free Port."

At a meeting of the officers of the Leaf Tobacco Board, last week, the luncheon was proposed, the better to provide opportunities for discussion of matters of interest to the trade. And it was resolved to follow the plan found so successful by the Merchants Association of New York. Each member who attends does so at his own expense. The price of the luncheon will be $1.25 per plate.

SOME SERIOUS CHARGES

Allegation Made That Cigarettes Are Stolen from Mail Sent to American Soldiers in France.

Indefinite delay charged against the mail service in the transmission of letters to soldiers in France, together with the theft or loss recently of documents revealing the Kaiser's spy system in the United States, went unanswered by postal officials in New York, who are handling the mail for Gen. Pershing's expeditionary forces. The charges of theft and delay were made in Washington, last Saturday by Representatives Britten, Huddleston, Rogers and Van Dyke before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department.

Among the charges made by the four Congressmen is the allegation that packages of cigarettes and edibles have been taken from the mails at the terminal, and that letters have mysteriously disappeared without trace being left of them. "So far as could be learned Tuesday," says the New York Sun, "the Postal Department has not laid down special regulations for safeguarding the mail during the inspection and classification period in the terminal."

NEW LORILLARD CIGARETTE PRICE LIST

The P. Lorillard Co. has issued a circular raising the prices of cigarettes as follows:

Deities	$24.25
Moguls	14.28
Murads	14.28
Helmars	10.20
London Life	7.65
Trophies Cork	10.20
do Plain	8.50

The prices quoted are for the Metropolitan district. Other prices are quoted for New Jersey, the Middle West and the Pacific Coast.

Resent the Accusation

This question came up as the result of an Associated Press dispatch from Washington a few days ago, in which it was stated that complaints were pouring in to the Internal Revenue Bureau regarding retailers who are using the war taxes on cigarettes, candy and other taxed articles as an excuse for price advances far in excess of the taxes. It was further stated that the law department of the bureau was endeavoring to find legal means of stopping this practice. Wheeling, W. Va., dealers were resentful of this accusation, stating that they believed such price-raising unpatriotic. A leading tobacconist stated that only an unscruplous and short-sighted dealer would try to make such prices. "Cigarette smokers are too keen," he said, "to be fooled very long, and the dealer who tries this trick is sure to lose trade by it in the end."

NO IMPORTANT SHIPMENTS MADE RECENTLY.

WASHINGTON, February 11.—In its monthly summary of conditions throughout the United States, the Federal Reserve Board has the following to say about tobacco conditions for last month in District No. 6, Atlanta:

"Tobacco trade in the Tennessee district has been rather quiet, due to the holidays, and bad weather conditions preventing delivery by farmers. The export tobacco stored in warehouses is owned largely by the representatives of the British and Italian governments, and no shipments of importance have been made recently on account of the shortage of cargo space.

EDWIN WILE

Fifteen years ago the General Cigar Co. acquired a new clerk, and before many moons passed, this young fellow, who signed the payroll as Edwin Wile, demonstrated that he would not remain a clerk for any length of time, but would put himself in line to qualify as a higher up.

And go up he did, until he became superintendent of the General Cigar Co.'s factories at Harrisburg, Steelton, Seven Valleys, Johnstown, Kulpmont, Shamokin and Mount Carmel.

But Edwin Wile was not satisfied—he still wanted to go higher—and in December his ambition was realized when the Government accepted his services in the Balloon Division of the Aviation Section Signal Corps.

Mr. Wile will be stationed at Omaha pending his transfer to the fighting front.

Prior to his departure for the West, the heads of the manufacturing department tendered Mr. Wile a farewell luncheon and presented him with a handsome wrist watch.

We bespeak for Edwin Wile a brilliant career in the service of Uncle Sam, and he goes with best wishes of our executives and the thousands of loyal workers who served under him in his capacity as Factory Superintendent.—The Burning Question.

REQUIRING IMPRINTS

The Garland Bill Would Compel All Goods Manufactured in This Country to Be Marked "Made in the U. S. A."

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11.—A bill interesting to manufacturers has been introduced in the House by Representative Garland of Pennsylvania, "providing that an imprint shall be placed on all articles manufactured in the United States and becoming the subject of interstate commerce, and providing that no manufactured articles or goods shall be admitted to the United States unless bearing an imprint."

This bill, which has been referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is one of the first "after the war" bills in connection with importing German goods.

The bill would require all manufacturers in this country to put the imprint "Made in the U. S. A." on their commodities. Further, that all imported articles should bear the country of origin. Any goods reaching the country not in accordance with the law (if passed) would be returned to the country of origin at the manufacturers' own expense.

BOOZE AND THE STATUTE

A Nice State of Affairs Exposed in Lewis County Washington—Exit Officials.

The State of Washington is supposed to be dry. But Lewis county, like Seattle a little farther north, swallowed the prohibition pill under protest. Especially strong was the protest emanating from Centralia and Chehalis, the two livest and largest communities of the county. The usual result followed. Most of the officials charged with the duty of suppressing the liquor traffic developed faulty eyesight. Right under their noses bootleggers and druggists coined money faster than the mint by selling cheap booze at famine prices. Conditions became so bad that the county commissioners petitioned the attorney general to come with a broom and clean up. He did. As a result of his activities the county prosecuting attorney and the city attorneys of both towns resigned; in both cities the chiefs of police doffed their uniforms and went to work, and the mayor of Chehalis, a physician, plead guilty to a charge of having issued illegal booze prescriptions, paid a fine and vacated the mayor's chair.—Sunset.

SOMETHING DENIED EVERY DAY

Wheatless Wednesday and meatless Tuesday have been supplemented with an ice-creamless Thursday by San Francisco. Optimistic Seattle has added a blueless Monday and Tacoma, not to be outdone, offers a Jinxless Friday. Another well-known city—not calling any names—has adopted a bathless Saturday. And as there is only one day left we will do our bit by observing a Restless Sunday.—Flour and Grain World.

Compliments for Edelstein

A former New Yorker, now serving in the Hospital Corps, "somewhere in France," recently was the recipient of a box of Constancia de Garcia cigars. And he shared the choice clear Havanas with officers and enlisted men convalescing in the hospital. The smokes were the cause of great rejoicing. A British officer asserted that the Constancia de Garcia was the finest cigar he had ever placed between his teeth. "My word," he said, "I would like to express my thanks personally to the manufacturer of that cigar. It's a beauty, the aroma is exquisite. Never before, have I enjoyed such a good a smoke."

T. M. A. Would Reform Trade Mark Registrations

An Important Meeting of the Committee of Which C. A. Speakman Is Chairman—The Selection of Suitable Trademarks Has Become More Difficult—Searching the Records of Affiliated Bureaus—3074 Applications Made—2192 Rejected Stop Indiscriminate Registration—Hopes for a Happy Solution of a Hard Problem.

The Trade-Mark Committee of the Tobacco Merchants' Association, of which C. A. Speakman, of the American Lithographic Co., is chairman, held a meeting Thursday afternoon at the office of the T. M. A., which will probably result in the happy solution of one of the most important trade-mark problems, namely, the re-registration of abandoned or unused trade-marks. The committee at the same time has issued an appeal for co-operation with the T. M. A. in its efforts to stop indiscriminate registrations.

In a statement issued by the committee after the meeting it is said that among the hundreds of thousands of registered trade-marks for tobacco products, of which the several bureaus affiliated with the T. M. A. have records, there is a great multitude of most striking and desirable names or phrases that have either been abandoned or have never been used at all. Yet because of the fact that they have been registered, they appear to be unavailable for adoption as trade-marks, although trade-marks that have been abandoned or that have never been used are entirely free for adoption and use by any one.

The selection of a suitable trade-mark for a tobacco product, said the committee, has become a most difficult task, for according to the records of the Trade-mark Bureau fully 75 per cent of the trade-marks selected for adoption are found to be already covered by prior registrations and are hence unavailable, although close investigations would probably disclose that a great many of such registered trade-marks have long since been abandoned or have perhaps never been used at all.

The Trade-mark Committee has adopted a system whereby such trade-marks will be thoroughly traced and investigated and re-registered if found to be unused or abandoned after due notice to the apparent owners in addition to the publication of such notice for two weeks in at least two trade papers.

In a strong appeal issued by the Trade-mark Committee, urging the discontinuance of indiscriminate registrations, the committee states:

The indiscriminate registration of trade-marks for tobacco products has caused no little amount of trouble in the tobacco industry, and has always been a means of producing much annoyance and embarrassment and sometimes substantial pecuniary loss. That practice has been developed largely as a result of the existence of a number of independent registration bureaus, each bureau being guided only by its own registrations and accepting trade-marks for registration regardless of the registrations made by other bureaus; and in many cases where proposed registrations were rejected because of prior registrations of the same or similar trade-marks by one bureau, the applicant, either while laboring under the erroneous impression that a registration certificate would make him the legal owner of the brand regardless of the rights of the originator or prior user, or because he was looking for some pretense or color or title in anticipation of an infringement suit, went to another bureau where the rejected mark was readily accepted and registered. Thus the records are replete with cases where the same trade-mark has been registered by a number of different concerns.

As a result of that situation, owners of valuable brands have frequently found their trade-marks infringed, not only by people who, without knowledge of the existing prior rights, had innocently adopted infringing marks as their own trade-marks, but by many wilful infringers under the pretext of color of title based upon the registration certificate that they had thus secured from one of the registration bureaus. It is needless to say that this situation has led to much trade-mark litigation.

Mainly to eliminate that sort of practice, the T. M. A. has effected a consolidation of all principal registration bureaus and secured their affiliation with the association, so that now there is but one bureau issuing registration certificates, after searching the records of all the affiliated bureaus for prior registrations, not only of the same trade-mark, but of similar trade-marks as well. Hence, a certificate issued by the T. M. A. means not only that the brand has been registered in accordance with the usual practice in the industry, but it furnishes reasonable assurance that the trade-mark thus registered may be safely used.

Although the T. M. A. is charging $5.00 to non-members and $3.00 to members for the registration of trade-marks, it is conducting the Trade-mark Bureau at a substantial loss because the clerical force required to keep up the elaborate records in order to be able to make thorough searches and to give reliable information is quite expensive. But it is felt that whatever the loss may be it is money well invested if the T. M. A. is successful in minimizing the evil of trade-mark infringements.

It is needless to say that the registration of a trade-mark is of no value. It is the search for prior registrations and the information as to whether or not the trade-mark sought to be adopted is free and available that makes the registration valuable. Manifestly, such searches cannot be made nor can such information be furnished without having complete records of all registered trade-marks. As an example, we may state that out of 3,074 applications for registration the T. M. A. Bureau registered 882 trade-marks and rejected 2,192 because of prior registrations.

It is apparent that registration certificates issued without such searches are not only valueless, but they may be harmful, for they create a false sense of security. They lead the registrants to believe that they are the owners of valid trade-marks whereas they may actually be infringers of existing trade-marks.

Efforts to thus eliminate, or at least reduce, infringements by maintaining a bureau where every tobacco man seeking to adopt a trade-mark may obtain reliable information as to prior registration of the mark sought to be adopted, are deserving of the co-operation and support of the entire industry.

LOOSE LEAF SALES IN INDIANA.

Sales at the four loose leaf tobacco warehouses in Madison, Ind., during the first week of February were light, compared with the previous weeks. The bad condition of the Ohio river and roads accounts for the small amount of tobacco offered for sale, which was 90,925 pounds. The total sales up to a week ago, at all four houses is as follows: W. H. Snook & Co., 393,540 pounds for $97,501.59; average $24.21. Farmers, 355,200 pounds for $82,610.47; average $21.51. Planters, 430,600 pounds for $106,424.74; average $22.90. Peoples, 181,065 pounds for $43,323.47; average $22.06. The receipts to February 4, $329,849.75, for an average of $22.92; 1,365,805 pounds of tobacco have been offered for sale here this season. This is far short of last season's figures, but the price paid is much higher. With the ice gorges of the Ohio river broken up and roads being put in good condition heavy sales are expected.

IMPORTANT DEAL MADE

Bobrow Bros. Transfer Cigar Factory at Binghamton to E. M. Schwarz & Co. of New York—The Reasons Given.

Announcement is made that the cigar factory of Bobrow Brothers on South street, Binghamton, N. Y., has been transferred to E. M. Schwarz & Co., of New York City.

Assurances were given that the factory will be continued and that the business will be expanded as rapidly as conditions warrant.

War conditions are directly responsible for the transfer. One of the members of the Bobrow Brothers firm said that because of freight congestion it had become increasingly difficult to get leaf tobacco to Binghamton from its purchasing centers and there also have been large losses on manufactured goods shipped to dealers.

Consequently it was determined to transfer the factory to some concern which has a purchasing center more easily accessible to Binghamton and which has a trade more easily covered from there. Only such a concern as would guarantee the continuance of the factory and insure steady work to the old employes would be considered by Bobrow Brothers. E. M. Schwarz & Co. have met these requirements.

MRS. SCHWEITZER'S GIFT

Wife of Importer of Cigarette Paper Gives $25,000 for Eye Hospital in Palestine.

Mrs. Peter J. Schweitzer, the wife of the well known importer of cigarette paper, has donated $25,000 to establish a model eye hospital in Palestine, in an attempt to eradicate the usually incurable disease of trachoma, prevalent in the Holy Land.

Announcement of the contribution was made Tuesday to the New York Herald by Dr. Joseph Krimsky, an oculist, of 164 Pennsylvania avenue, Brooklyn. Dr. and Mrs. Krimsky are close personal friends of the Schweitzers, and all four are ardently interest in the Zionist movement.

Mrs. Schweitzer became interested in the plight of the Jews in Palestine through the work of Dr. Krimsky for Zionism and for relief of eye diseases among the Jews of the Brownsville section of Brooklyn. Her donation was pledged to the Hadassah, the Zionist organization among the Jewish women of America. Mrs. Krimsky is chairman of the local chapter and vice chairman of the Brooklyn branch of the Hadassah.

Mrs. Schweitzer's donation of $25,000 is expected to build and equip the entire hospital, but she has expressed her willingness to add to her contribution if it is found to be insufficient. The building probably will be erected close to Jerusalem.

Partial reports from fifteen railroads in three states show that moving trains on these lines in five years killed 10,236 horses, 41,536 cattle, 62,561 hogs and 4,526 sheep and goats. If the ratio is maintained on the entire railroad mileage of the United States, more than 400,000 meat and draft animals are destroyed by trains every year.

THE RISE IN PRICES

Average wholesale prices in the United States last month were 81 per cent above that of July, 1914; that is, the purchasing power of money over goods in the wholesale markets has been almost cut in half.

The rise in retail prices of foods in the same period has been 57 per cent. This means a reduction to less than two-thirds in the purchasing power of money over foods in the retail markets. Abroad the rise of prices has been even greater.

Between 1896 and 1914 wholesale prices in the United States were rising at the average rate of only one-fifth of 1 per cent per month; but even that small rate, long continued, was enough to make the "H. C. L." a very painful fact.

Since the war wholesale prices in the United States have been rising at the rate of nearly 2 per cent per month, or nearly 10 times as fast as before the war. In some countries in Europe the rise in prices has been two or three times as rapid as in the United States.

TWO PHASES OF ONE PROBLEM.

There are a thousand schemes to enable the Government to obtain money or credit—purchasing power—without reducing the purchasing ability of the people. They are all fundamentally in error, because they overlook the fact that the use of purchasing power is limited by the supply of things to be purchased.

It cannot be too often pointed out that the industrial and financial problems of the war are closely allied. They are two phases of one problem, but it is easier to see the physical limitations of the industrial task than the limitations upon the use of credit. Everybody can see that the speed with which we can get ready for war is limited by the supply of labor and the capacity of the workshops, but a great many people overlook the fact that when the labor and shop capacity of the country are already completely employed nothing more can be accomplished by merely creating bank credit or issuing government credit in the form of money. Nothing can be gained except as labor, materials and shop-capacity are released from private use and turned over to government purposes. We cannot turn over purchasing power to the Government and still use it ourselves. We cannot put the Government in possession of productive power without curtailing our own use of it. We cannot make any serviceable contribution to the work the Government has in hand without curtailing in the same degree our own demands for labor and materials. In short, we cannot help without making sacrifices.

Let each begin "to do his bit."

THE SCARCITY OR DRUG CLERKS.

This is a pressing problem. It isn't any use to attempt to evade the issue. We must face it.

But how?

Various expedients have been offered, all more or less tinged with human nature.

The big stores say to the little ones: "Shut up shop; you're in the way anyhow!"

The colleges say: "Influence more boys and girls to come to our schools. We"ll do the rest and the glorious star of pharmacy will shine on undimmed."

The clerks say: "Pay more money and there'll be plenty of us."

There are no figures which will show us how many clerks have gone to war; such a table has not been compiled. The data is very hard to get at. It has been estimated that physicians have responded to their country's call to the extent of about 20 per cent., but it is doubtful if the retail drug trade can duplicate this record—for very good and obvious reasons.

But from all over the country comes the cry for more drug-store help.—Bulletin of Pharmacy.

ODE TO THE FIRST ROBIN.

The while I sit and shiver in a soulless, coalless town,
And watch the shuddering public as they hurry up and down,
You flit amid the branches of the green palmetto trees
And fluff your little feathers in the tropic ocean breeze.
And every day when you awake you slant a crafty eye
Upon the snow clouds piled against the wintry northern sky.
I know that weary weeks must pass before your song of cheer
Proclaims that you've come home again; but when you do appear—

You will not need to hop about in search of worms to eat;
I'll dig a million up myself and lay them at your feet.
And every morning after that the shining Summer long
You'll find your breakfast ready when you've sung your opening song.
For you will bring the Spring again, and I'll be there to see
That you are made right welcome to your old home tree.

Each day that you remain away from this intemperate zone
Is proof that you've got judgment that is greater than my own.
For while I wade through drifting snow, you soar through balmy skies,
And while I slip upon the ice, you dart at butterflies.
I know no words of mine can tempt your prudent wings to stray.
While still the blizzards howl and shriek along your northward way,
You stick around right where you are till Spring has cleared the track.
I only want to say to you that when you do come back—

I'll have the bird bath dusted out and fill it to the brim;
I'll hang up threads and twigs and straw on every handy limb;
I'll clear out all the prowling cats, so when you build your nest,
And brood above your pale blue eggs, your mind will be at rest.
It may be months and months before you're here, but anyhow,
You'll get a rousing welcome to the old home bough.

TROOPS RECRUITED IN MICHIGAN—SOME OF THE MEN WHO WERE ABOARD THE TORPEDOED TRANSPORT TUSCANIA

While America Produces Boys Like These, the United States Has Assurances of Winning the War Despite All That U Boats May Do

"Steps to Victory"

Says Gates W. McGarrah, president of the New York Clearing House and president of the Mechanics & Metals National Bank of New York, in a booklet enumerating and urging "Steps to Victory": For every American enlisted to take an active part in the present war, fifty Americans remain at home. How can these fifty, month in and month out during the war, help the nation take the steps necessary to victory?

"The question of the supreme duty of the citizen not called to military service is one that every true American has asked himself many times. 'I want to show my devotion; I want to express my patriotism in some tangible form,' is a statement we all have made.

"In seeking out hard tasks to perform, some of our citizens have, indeed, found an expression of their patriotism in duties that are proving of inestimable service to the nation. The tremendous progress in our war-advancing activities is evidence of that.

"All of us have not found the opportunity to undertake hard tasks, however, and in looking toward them from a distance we have felt constrained to ignore the small tasks at hand, because they were, seemingly, so insignificant. Yet, after all, it is in the performance of the relatively small and simple tasks that the majority of us will have to be content in carrying out our part of the war.

"It is a broad statement, yet a true one, that America's first great victory will be won when the personal advantage and the personal privilege of each of us have been submerged in unselfish devotion to the common cause. This first great victory will be won, then, when we have determined for ourselves the degree in which we shall recognize two fundamental duties that rest upon us, duties of regulating in our individual lives the

Things to do without during the progress of the war.

"Thousands of men and women, if age and sex permitted them to go to the front, would serve as well as any who have already gone. Love of country would on the battlefield find in them its highest expression. But because they remain at home, and because they do not wear the badge of service, their own part in the greatest contest ever fought by the nations of the earth has not been brought directly home to them.

"It is not a very heroic part to play, determining for oneself the things to do and the things to do without in war-time. Heroic or otherwise, the determination must nevertheless be made. So it rests upon us at home to make the determination. This war will not be won by the naked bravery of those who carry our colors to France; he is lacking in imagination, and in knowledge of economic facts as well, who fails directly to associate the elements of business and financial life with the vital elements of the war. The strength and prowess of individual combatants count, but there never was a time when war's success depended so much on the organization of the economic resources of the nations engaged.

"The sort of valor that is required of us in the performance of our duties at home ought not to be a very great strain on our patriotism, particularly when we come to appreciate how much this sort of valor has its definite place in the war. As compared with the past, the difference of modern warfare is after all only a difference of degree. In the primitive state of society the duty of those who stayed at home was perhaps more directly apparent than to-day; when a tribe made war every man, woman and child underwent hardship in order that the fighting men might be fed and armed.

"Modern warfare requires an infinitely larger number of things than did tribal warfare, but because its wants are supplied by industries wonderfully organized, individuals sometimes think their part not worth reckoning. Their part is most decidedly worth reckoning. There are three ways in which it is to be applied. These ways can be stated, very briefly, as follows:

By Rigid Economy.
The war is going to call more and more for thrift and for an elimination of waste that will enable us to give our men at the front the support they need.

By Careful Saving.
Saving will be called upon more and more to supply the capital with which the Government can carry on the war.

By Hard Work.
The war is going to be fought more and more with the output of the industrial establishments of the country.

"Never before were economy, saving and work so necessary. As time goes on they will increasingly be recognized as the basis for winning the war. Our soldiers and sailors alone cannot accomplish the purpose for which they have enlisted. Our soldiers and sailors, properly backed by the people at home, will be an invincible force for victory and peace."

"Get busy."

APPOINTED PHILIPPINE TOBACCO AGENT

Charles A. Bond May Be Depended On to Do His Duty

To increase and insure one source of its revenue, as well as to cause Philippine cigars and tobacco to be appreciated more in the United States, the Philippine government maintains supervision over manufacture, packing, shipment and distribution. Clear as crystal is the intent, shown in law and practice, that the consumer of Philippine products shall receive standard goods in proper condition.

Beginning, by giving instruction and aid to tobacco planters in the Cagayan Valley, encouragement is extended to the tobacco and cigar industry all along the line. And the regulations, always strictly enforced, are neither unfair nor at all prejudicial to honest effort. If certain restrictions are far reaching, they are made to serve more effectively.

Neither vague nor meaningless is the guarantee of the Philippine government stamped on every box of cigars exported from Manila to the United States.

Nor do Manila cigar factories suffer by comparison. Made models, as respects cleanliness and sanitation; allowed to utilize nothing but sound tobacco grown in the Cagayan Valley and graded according to established standards; employing skilled workmen who follow Spanish methods exclusively, making even the cheapest cigars entirely by hand, the factories gain rather than lose by strict regulation. Cigars made in Manila obtain favor in many parts of the world.

That an established good reputation may not be jeopardized, the Philippine government exercises a watchful care over Manila cigars, even after the goods are shipped from the Islands to the United States.

Mindful of the present value and the future possibilities of the American market for Manila cigars, the Philippine government displays business prudence, protecting itself and all concerned.

By attesting quality, by maintaining high standards, and by making sure that goods becoming inferior because of any deterioration are not foisted, through misrepresenation, on the public, the market for good Manilas in the United States is safe-guarded and a reputation deservedly obtained is honestly upheld.

Which work in this country is entrusted to the Philippine Tobacco agent. Regarded in one light, the duties of this important official may seem arduous and multifarious. Not the least of his labors is to make American smokers see the good qualities of Manila cigars. As the representative of the Philippine government, he is called upon to investigate complaints presented through the proper channels. His powers are not discretionary. The law, rather rigidly declares what shall be done. Every requirement or emergency that could be anticipated, is provided for; few pieces of legislation have been more carefully drawn. If Manila cigars, shipped to the United States, become wormy or mouldy in transit, the importer immediately may avail himself of all that is implied in the Philippine government guarantee.

When officially such a case is brought to his attention, the Philippine tobacco agent makes inspection and recommends what should be done.

Undeniably, the intention of the Philippine government is to be just, to protect the interests of manufacturers, importers, dealers and consumers as well as its own. If any deterioration occurs en route, re-conditioning will be made, if practicable. Where re-conditioning is feasible, the work will be done under the supervision of the Philippine tobacco agent. Cigars beyond reconditioning will be destroyed. Or, in some instances, cigars deemed unmarketable will be shipped back to the Philippines. The idea being to emphasize the desire of the Philippine government that only merchantable Manila cigars in good condition shall be sold.

The tremendous development of Manila importations naturally means more work and additional responsibility for the Philippine tobacco agent in the United States.

CHARLES ALLEN BOND
Philippine Tobacco Agent

A direct descendant of Ethan Allen, the hero of Ticonderoga, and having also a Colonial Governor, Crandall of Rhode Island, for an ancestor, he comes of staunch American stock—his people, on both sides, were pioneers of the best sort, men and women who helped to make history. Born in Sonoma County, California, passing his boyhood on a ranch in the Carson Valley, Nevada; a student first in the University of Michigan and later in the University of California, noted for his success in athletics while in college, being both a sprinter and a base ball pitcher, renowned in his day; he developed ability with brush and pencil and attended the Partington art school in San Francisco. His art studies were interrupted by a call to assist in the management of his father's store in Healdsburg, Cal. He seemed destined to become a country merchant. But, at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, he headed the "Healdsburg contingent" that became a noteworthy part of Battery L of the famous Third U. S. Artillery.

Going to the Philippines with the second expedition, he arrived in the Islands just time to participate in the capture of Mani He served during the Spanish-American W and he saw some of the hardest fighting th occurred in the Philippine Insurrection.

A corporal then entrusted with the importa duty of getting a lot of ammunition to the fro he obtained commendation for brave condu in crossing the Bag-bag River. It was the that General Wheaton made emphatic a appreciative remarks concerning Bond's abili Excellent service earned him praise and pr motion. At the expiration of his enlistme as a "volunteer regular," he was offered a co mission. However, having promised to ma the illustrations for a war book written by h comrade Jesse George, Bond returned to ci life and remained in Manila. Completing t drawings for the volume of Philippine histo he became the cartoonist for the Manila Tri une. One of his pictures, "Aguinaldo's movi capitol," attracted attention far and wide. B not for long was the Tribune able to empl a cartoonist. "Charlie" Bond was next knov as "a reporter on the Freedom." Mont afterward, he occupied an editorial desk the Daily American. Later, he was the edit of the Daily Bulletin. In Manila, he found a breezy weekly known as the Sunday Su which publication was very successful for while.

Leaving Manila, he went to Shanghai, Chir and edited a daily paper there for nearly a ye Eventually returning to the United States, planned "to settle down" in his old home Healdsburg. Within two years, though, "heard the East a callin'" and went back Manila again. Once more editor of the Bulle and Sunday Sun he did rather well, but a seco sojourn in the tropics proved to be not so go for his health. Coming back, via Suez, he ma a tour of Europe. Soon after arriving in Ne York, he was offered a position on Tobacc He contributed important articles to the b "twentieth anniversary number" issued on M 10, 1906, and he assisted materially in maki a success of the Tobacco Exposition opened Madison Square Garden the first week in Se tember, 1906. Transferring to the Tobac Leaf, he continued with that publication until came back to Tobacco as editor in Januar 1916, which position he relinquished, some f teen months later, in order to devote more tir to the Manila Ad. Agency, which he had esta lished.

For nearly 12 years in New York, Bond h been in closest touch with the tobacco trade. reporter, editor and artist, he has done much explain conditions and smooth out difficultie He is well and favorably known to almost eve tobacco man in this section of the countr Among the first to join the Tobacco Salesmer Association, he has been prominently identifi with the affairs of the organization ever sinc At present he is a trustee, delegate to the T. M A. and member of the house committee.

Of his work in New York in behalf of th tobacco industry in recent years, there is b little need to speak, for nearly everyone he knows how busy he has been.

Nominated, in an acting capacity some montl ago, the appointment of Charles A. Bond, Philippine Tobacco Agent was confirmed, th first of the year.

About the first thing he did, after being appointed, was to "take a glimpse" at trade conditions in the West. Although he went to the Pacific Coast primarily to visit his folks in California and Nevada, and most of his trip had to do with personal business, he availed himself of the opportunity to study business problems at some of the big distributing points in the South, West and Middle West.

He reports a growing interest in Manilas in every section of the country visited. Manila cigars have been successfully introduced in New Orleans. The trade at Los Angeles and San Francisco has attained unlooked for proportions. Importers and jobbers there report a heavy demand throughout the territory for Manila hand-made cigars.

Sacramento, Ogden, Omaha, Chicago and Buffalo are featuring good sizes of Manilas and dealers are anxiously inquiring for more information concerning Philippine products.

Recent advices from Manila indicate the value of the government's efforts to increase and improve the cigar business. Although conditions have increased manufacturing expenses and price raising has followed to some small degree the trend of business in the United States, Manila is endeavoring to maintain a conservative trade policy which has for its object the winning and holding of American good will. The quality has been improved and higher prices are being made the basis for a better grade of cigars.

"The proportion of high grade sizes coming to the market is far ahead of what it was a year ago."

PREVENTING TRADEMARK INFRINGEMENTS.

The General Cigar Co., Inc., announces that it has recently been compelled to institute proceedings to restrain the infringement of its "Little Tom" brand and its "Wm. Penn" brand. Injunction suits were brought in two of these cases, and resulted in judgments for the General Cigar Co., Inc. In the third case, the matter did not reach the state of court proceedings, but was settled by agreement.

That company is also prosecuting an action to restrain infringements of its "Tom Keene" trade-mark, and it is expected that that case will be reached for trial some time in May or June of this year. The General Cigar Co., Inc., has carefully protected its trade-marks from infringement in the past, and intends to pursue a still more vigorous policy in protecting these marks against infringements in the future. S. K. Lichtenstein, who secured judgments in the cases referred to, is acting as special trademark counsel for the General Cigar Co., Inc.

WHY THE DRUMMER BEATS THE HOTEL.

What is the matter with the feeding end of the country hotel? Years ago the proprietor of the best hotel in a fine Wisconsin city of 15,000 said to the editor: "I don't make a dollar in my hotel business, but my bar cleans up about twelve thousand a year, so it pays me to run the hotel." The above shows that in at least some good hotels in country cities the rooms now hold the relation to the feeding end that the bar above held to the hotel. The rooms carry the dining room. That sure is "rotten!" What's the matter?

The hotel men say that the commercial traveler—that is, many of them—go out of the hotel and eat in an Italian or Greek "hole in the wall" or at a Thompson celluloid eatshop and then turn into their house an expense account that is camouflaged—a "swindle-sheet"

BRITISH OCCUPANTS OF A CAPTURED GERMAN DUGOUT

—in which they charge up $3.00 or $3.50 per day for hotel expense when with the $1.00 room they always insist upon, their expense has not been $2 per day. Now that, as Grover Cleveland once remarked, is "a condition and not a theory," and no law nor proclamation can change it. It is up to the hotel man. Again, what is the matter? Well, here is one "matter." The dining rooms, restaurants and cafes in the hotel are too fine, too elaborate, too stylish, too lavish with space, finishing, decoration, furnishing, service. You can't run and make profitable a $10,000 place with a $1,000 business. Too large a percentage of the trade is too cheap and to make a profit on it the "shop" must be cheap. The whole explanation is contained in that one word cost.—Hotel World.

WM. H. GETZELMAN

Superimposed on an agreeable personality, a steadfast desire to make good, is something every employer is pleased to see. When trustworthiness and tact are joined to diligence and knoweldge, experience qualifies a man for a preferred position.

Wm. H. Getzelman has one. He is the manager of the Sherman Hotel cigar store in the Albert Breitung chain in Chicago. Starting in the drug business, he "just naturally gravitated" to the cigar trade. With Albert Breitung for the past 13 years, he has proven his reliability and developed knowledge concerning all that a man behind a cigar counter should know.

He has acquired popularity. Few managers of cigar stores have a larger following. At the age of 30 now he can consider past success as a positive assurance of a prosperous future.

UNION CIGAR CO. RE-ELECTS OFFICERS.

At the annual stockholders' meeting of the Union American Cigar Co. held in Pittsburgh, February 11, the following directors were re-elected for a period of three years: Tilghman Johnston, Jos. F. Cullman, N. D. Lean.

The Board is now composed of: G. P. Waidely, Frank Kitzmiller, J. J. Satterthwait, Geo. D. Edwards, Edw. G. Lang, Chas. B. Evans, Jos. F. Cullman, Tilghman Johnston, N. D. Lean.

After the stockholders' meeting, the directors met and the following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year: G. P. Waidely, president; Frank Kitzmiller, vice-president; N. D. Lean, treasurer; E. S. Hurt, secretary; D. R. Morris, auditor; E. S. Hurt, secretary.

The capital of The Falk Tobacco Co. has been increased from $1,000,000 to $1,750,000.

Max Kraielsheimer, general manager of The Tobacco Corporation of America, is in New York looking several pounds lighter since his severe illness. He returned to Allentown, Tuesday.

"We All Have To Fall For It"

Meanwhile Cigar Business Jogs Along Up-State

NEW YORK STATE CAPITOL DISTRICT,
February 11, 1918.

Which? Organization like the American Army, or dis-organization, like Russia's?

Take our own. Germany is reported rushing around in an effort to make a jab before we get our organization to work.

Take Russia's. Germany is reported standing around in an effort to look busy, while the Red Army is on strike.

Just so in Albany. Cigar men stand around the street talkin' about the injustice of the fuel order as applied to theatres, restaurants and lunch rooms, including hotels, last Monday.

Nothing happens. Then, to arms! Five or six downtown retailers meet in kuklux-klan. They decide to delegate Bruce Macdonald, of the Bruce Macdonald Co., 110 State, and Manager Drummond, of the United, to call upon Fuel Administrator Gy Lansing.

They call. "Certainly," says Gy, "I see the injustice of my position! But let me tell you how it occurred: Last week Mr. J. S. Riefield, of the Empire Theatre cigar privilege, came to me about opening his stands last Monday. He told me that, inasmuch as he was obliged to close all day Tuesday, with the theatre, he thought it only reasonable to be permitted to open Monday. I agreed with him.

"Then Mayor Watt 'phoned me about the lunch rooms, restaurants and hotels. He wanted to know if I didn't believe no harm would be done if these places, open anyway on Monday, were allowed to serve cigars and cigarettes. Mayor Watt proposed to limit such service to patrons of these establishments only, and not then unless some sort of meal was ordered with the smokes.

"Well, I fell for that. But, take it from me, next Monday, if heatless, will be absolutely so as regards tobacco products. You gentlemen have convinced me of the error of last week, and I'll surely be pleased to receive any future suggestions on the subject you may make. I aim to treat all merchants and manufacturers with strict impartiality, and I hope to have your trade support."

Now that the reorganized Anndora Cigar Co., Inc., has commenced to operate in its Albany plant on Broadway, jobbers and retailers look for lower schedules on the former Payn products.

Many hands have been secured from the American Cigar Co.'s shop at Broad and Arch Sts. Anndora pays a trifle more money for experienced help, and the girls are quick to respond. Some, however, prefer to work without the suction tables, rolling their cigars all-hand.

"And there you are!" greeted Jimmie Stuart, handing over a Cinco, when you know he really intended to offer a Henrietta! "I hope everything is all right by you. For it is with the House of Eisenlohr, where trade maintains its steady stride. If there is anything I can do for you, tell me now. Because, with delay, I'll be unable to squeeze any more orders in that packin' case I'm mailing to the factory tonight!"

Hear about Motlow? You remember him! That long telegrafo, tall, slim, narrow, thin chap who sold so many Lucky Strike cigarettes?

Well, the draft got him! That is, they looked 'im over, expressin' surprise he wasn't taller, more like a ruler. Then they weighed 'im!

My, my! There wasn't a half-ounce Troy scale in the place, so they balanced 'im against a package of Lucky Strikes! And the Strikes won!

Yes, that's right. Three strikes it took to put 'im out, the last time right after he was all dressed, too. But they weighed 'im again on the Troy plan, finally decidin' he was tall enuf to carry the Colors, but entirely too light to hold 'em down in a breeze!

"Is it Home Runs you want?" asked Charlie Fox, of the Liggett & Myers squad. "Well, I'll try to dig up a few for you, but they're harder to find than any cigarette we have, or, rather, haven't. Most jobbers are cleaned out on this brand. However, we can supply a few Fatimas, Chesterfields, Piedmonts, Richmond Straight Cuts, etc."

Taking it as a general rule, tobacco ain't skeered much of smoke. That is, a-course, its own smoke. True, Sumatra is a delicate thing. And its brothers and sisters in Connecticut, Georgia, Florida, even Wisconsin and Pennsylvania are not over husky just now!

But those six tobaccos are far better positioned to inhale their smoke than were the half dozen members of the family at 23 Broad St., Albany.

For it was there that a fire occurred last Tuesday night, compelling the wife and two children to flee, while two other sick kids were carried through the smoke by their father, Vincent Tobacco!

Whenever any of the other cork-tipped coons of the show could corner Comedian Bert Swor with a hypothetical question, Bert invariably squeezed out by running close to the fence this way:

"Yas, dat's alright, boss, you-all sutinly am keerect! Yit Ah reckon Ah'll leebe dishyar dee-ciz-shun tu Mistah Al Gee Fields an' da Bo'rda Di-rect-ors!"

Evidently, the board of directors have passed it on. For, when those officials of the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co. met in Albany the other day, they elected:

President, Edmund C. Dearstyne; vice-president, Frank S. Dearstyne; secretary, J. F. Dearstyne; treasurer, William W. Dearstyne; assistant treasurer, James A. Dearstyne. Those on the Board are E. C., F. S., J. F., and J. E. Dearstyne.

"Bold cigars are going very well indeed," remarked Gil Thompson, the Clinton Square retailer, Albany. "And Cincos, Havana Ribbons, Rocky Fords are also selling well in the six-cent line. It seems to me we're going to line up smokers on this odd-cent game after a few more boosts of all good nickel cigars."

To feature their cigar brands in an otherwise unoccupied neighborhood, the Bruce Macdonald Co., 110 State St., Albany, have taken over the stand privileges in the drug store of Frank G. Rice, Madison Ave. and Eagle St., opposite the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception. This is an excellent location for trade in this section, always considerably patronized by the prelates of the Catholic Bishopric.

"Small cigars are gradually disappearing from the local market," said A. J. McAvoy, of the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., Albany. "Such brands as Between the Acts, Hoffman House Magnums, Blue Moons, Admiration Minatures and so on are very scarce indeed, while the prices are shooting upward like rockets. Why, even the Minatures went from $12.50 to $17 this week. And they'll probably go higher!"

From South Norwalk, Conn., the Graham-Ernst Cigar Co. has approached the Capitol District, looking for distributors for their Seminola and Continental brands. Graham-Ernst were established way back in 1866, and they also operate a shop at Quakertown, Pa.

In the grand armee, U. S. of A., details are assigned daily for white-wing or police duty. These soldiers are sometimes men who have been penalized for slight violations of military regulations. And it's their job to "police" or clean camp by sweeping, shoveling, or even sniping paper, cigar and cigarette stubs.

Joe McElveney uster play in an army band. So he knows all about this here business-is-pickin'-up police. And Joe tells about a certain slacker in the outfit who was detailed by his top-sarge to cop the butts along the Company street.

Some of the other boys suddenly noticed that the slacker was actin' queerly. For he'd pick up a cig-snipe, look at it very carefully, then cast it down again with the remark, "That ain't it!"

After keeping up this stunt for quite a spell, repeating each time, as he threw the butt away, "That ain't it!" with a solemn shake of the head before proceeding for the next stub, the peculiar bug of the slacker was reported to the sergeant.

Then the sergeant called the captain's attention to the dope. And, ultimately, the slacker was placed under observation in the base hospital.

There the major-doctor at last decided the man surely was a harmless nut, so he recommended his discharge.

This came through the usual channels after the customary red-tape was wound and unwound, releasing the slacker from the army.

And the very last his comrades saw of the loony slob was on the rear platform of the car as the train pulled for home. There he stood, with the document of discharge in his hands, gazing intently at it, and murmuring to himself, "That's It!"

Talking about soldiers, how would you like to have the business of the New York State boys at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C.?

One of the Capitol District men, encamped there, says he has excellent authority from the quartermaster's department about the quantity of tobacco products used in the town and camp.

It amounts to approximately $72,000 monthly in cigars, cigarettes, tobaccos and pipes, just for one account!

"Yes, things are quiet," admitted M. A. Schufeldt, of the L. W. Killeen sales staff, Schenectady. "Yet I think, with prices all shot to pieces, shortage of supplies, and other little things like that to bother the cigar trade, we are doing our fair share of business on Bolds.

Just when the retail trade of Albany had the smokers in line to pay ten cents straight for all domestic seed and Havana goods, along comes the Ligget Drug chain with the former three-for-a-quarter foolishness to queer the whole plan!

And the Branche Drug Co., near neighbors on Pearl St., are meeting the incision by selling the Peter Schuyler cigars for similar figures.

These drug boys are extremely ill-advised, dealers say, to start something when retail prices were just at the turn of profit.

That's a reg'lar Odeon, that new building of the Municipal Gas Co., up there on State St., Albany. It gives this ancient Jonkers thorofare a mingled touch of both the 13th and the 20th centuries. For cost, see surplus, sinking-fund, undivided profits!

Without, it is Bourse-Built, made of stone familiar to Caesar as Trentino marble. To others, not Italio, it resembles rusty plaster, hook-wormed. Cost, proportionate.

And those flambeaux, now supporting The Flag and the Service Stars at either side of the entrance, what are they? Merely hand wrought bronze, everlastingly, patiently, wonderfully hammered by an artist-smithy living in the time of King John. Cost, trifling.

Then, opening immense Tiffany-bronze doors with the push of a pinkie, you're immediately standing within the auditorium of a Theatre Royale. Cost, pooh-ba!

While Ra, the Ormuzd of Egyptian light, is hiding in the diamond dome over the commercial counters. So you approach the bank-like tellér, "Pay Here." Cost, look at your blue-bill!

You've come, all het up for a pile a-talk about your January bill. You've rehearsed the subject thoroly. You simply won't stand for that statement on gas and electricity! What! ten per cent more than last month, not countin' th' Garfield holidays, lightless nights, reduced kilowatts!

But you meet a smile. It radiates from the pleasing face of a cheerful young feller. He tells you something! About "continuous meter service." Big bill this time, very small next time!

Anna Eva Fay couldn't do it better! You're in a trance! And you walk right over, where the other cigar men stand, waiting to—"Pay Here!"

"Oi soy, Pate," casually approached Mat Grady, "Mesilf an' Moike, here, be wit' yez on thot committay ter nootefy th' raytail seegar dailers ter be-wayer uv al non-nnion goods. But phwhat's de raison uv al' uv us gooin' ar-round? Me an' Moike hev da-cided ter ma-ake you charmon. An' ut's up ter you ter sa-ay th' fel-lies yersilf." Then Mat nudged Mike in the short ribs in solemn silence.

Peter Doetzer regarded his fellow committeemen in a stolid stare of rapt attention while Mat made the notification speech of Pete's proposed chairmanship of the strikers' sub-com on trade relationship.

For it was a time, some years ago, when the cigarmakers' union was endeavoring to compel the manufacturers to sell nothing but union made goods. And the retail trade was to be requested to co-operate.

So, after several minutes of deep deliberation, Pete nodded his head slowly and spoke up:

"Yah, dot sharemanchip I takes py mineselfer. Dose deelars vill I toldt aboudt vot I saidt. Leefe ut py me, poys!"

Then the following day, and for many days thereafter the Erin-Go-Bragh lads had shoved the undesirable job on the Dutchman's innocent shoulders, Pete went from cafe to store, especially cafe, asking each and every retailer to be so kind as to cast aside all cigars not endorsed by the union.

Well, the strike was settled after a time, and everyone was back on the yob except our old friend Peter. No one would have the man in his shop, notwithstanding cigarmakers were rather scarce at the time, and Pete was a pretty good hand workman. All the bosses objected to was Peter's prominent part in the boycott, his persistent soliciting of the trade not to handle and sell the cigars and brands produced by the association of factories.

It got so bad, after weeks of wandering around, searching for work, that friends intervened with Pete's former foreman.

"No, sir!" emphatically said he, "I wouldn't have the old nuisance in my shop. Don't talk Doetzer to me!"

So at last, one of the family acquaintances went directly to Peter's boss-in-chief, the manufacturer himself. He told the go-between that he couldn't possibly take Peter back because of his action in the strike. No, never!

But when the ambassador related the distress of the Doetzer children, of which there were four or five, the proprietor gave in, and issued instructions for Peter to go back to work.

Pete, of course, was very much obliged, and he swore on his oath never to interfere in such matters again.

What, never? Well, hardly ever! For it was only a year or two later that Peter was selected again for a fall-horse to picket a N. N. Pearl St. druggist, who sold a lot of stuff.

Inevitably, the result was not only Peter's permanent loss of a job, but the removal from Albany of the entire factory where Peter Doetzer worked.

It may be interesting to know that it was the late Wallace N. Horton who so kindly reinstated Peter in the shop, and that it was the G. W. Van Slyke & Horton factory which ultimately removed to Kingston, N. Y., because of these recurrent union troubles and the difficulty to secure suitable labor in this section.

And this was in the days while the Van S & H ten-cent brand sold at retail four for a quarter in the cut-price stores, not ten-cents straight, as usual just now! THE SMOKER.

Less Than a Warranty

"Dealer's Talk" and What It Amounts to in the Sale of Goods.

(Copyright 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

I was consulted recently in a way which had never fallen to my lot before. I regard it as a most unusual experience. The sales manager of a wholesale concern who not only put selling talks in the mouths of his men, but also does considerable selling himself, came to me and laid before me a problem which was substantially this: "I am an exuberant salesman. It is my way to enthuse over my goods, and when I am enthused I am apt to say more about my goods than I intend to. Only last week a customer pinned the house down to something I had said, which he contended amounted to a guarantee and which I had no right to give at all. I had to admit that I had said about that thing, and the house allowed his claim. I have been told that a man is allowed to brag up his goods, to a certain extent, and isn't held strictly down to every word, now I want to know how far I can safely go in my selling talks. Is there any rule which I can use and have my men use, so that what I say will be only ordinary selling talk and can't be regarded as a guarantee?"

I gave him the best advice I could on the subject, and the incident is responsible for this article on "Dealers' talk: What it amounts to in the sale of goods."

The inevitable conclusion after reading and digesting the law on this subject—there are innumerable cases—is that there is no rule which a business man can lay down for himself, and apply with certainty, but there are certain useful principles which he can keep in mind, and these should check him from going too far in his representations about his merchandise. Of course this applies to representations made in every way they can be made—by word of mouth, through advertising, in letters and in every other fashion.

The importance of the thing is this: if the seller in what he says about a thing he is selling, stays within the realm of "dealer's talk," he is not liable even if some of his statements are not borne out. But if he passes beyond "dealer's talk," his statements are warranties, and he will be strictly held to every one.

The cases make very little effort to define "dealer's talk." I give a working definition of my own: "Dealer's talk is something less than a warranty, and consists of an expression of opinion or judgment about the article, on a point as to which the seller has no special knowledge, and on which the buyer can be expected to have just as good an opinion and to use his own judgment."

For instance, take a dealer selling automobile tires. He is not an expert. He says of a tire he is selling: "That's as good as any tire on the market." The buyer takes the tire, which isn't satisfactory. The statement "that is as good as any tire," would be considered in my judgment, mere dealer's talk.

Note my statement in the above illustration that the dealer was not a tire expert. It would make a decided difference if he were an expert, for many cases hold that a statement made by a non-expert, which would be considered no more than dealer's talk, would be considered a warranty when made by a dealer having expert knowledge of the article he was selling.

From a couple of leading cases I assemble the following statement of the law governing the subject:—

> Mere commendation, praise or brag by a dealer, is not a warranty. Each seller has the right to extol the quality of his wares, and much latitude has generally been allowed, the language being regarded more as an invitation to purchase than as a warranty.
> It is to be conclusively presumed that the buyer knew or ought to have known enough not to rely upon dealer's talk or the praise of their goods ordinarily indulged in by sellers.

This last paragraph is rather a sad commentary upon the integrity of the average commercial transaction, but such is the well settled law.

There have been a great many cases in which these principles have been applied. Of course in practically all of them the issue was between a buyer who sought to enforce against his seller a statement (subsequently found to be untrue)which he claimed was a warranty, the seller taking the position that it was not a warranty, but only dealer's talk.

I mention a few of these cases here:—

A statement "these are the best goods made," is not a warranty, but merely dealer's talk.

"I think he is sound," spoken of a horse one is selling, is not a warranty if the seller is not an expert veterinarian.

"You'll find this line will readily sell," is not a warranty which the buyer can claim was violated when the line doesn't readily sell. It is only dealer's talk.

"This is a very good machine and will do your work," is not a warranty when no special work has been mentioned between buyer and seller, or the work the machine was to do was mentioned only in a general way.

But when a buyer orders a machine for a specific purpose and says so, and the seller tells him: "You may rely on having a first rate machine which will do the work in a satisfactory manner," that is a warranty, and if the machine doesn't do this particular work in a satisfactory manner, the buyer can sue.

Putting the expression "approved standard quality" on a label, or so representing the goods in other ways, is not a warranty.

The rule is different where a man is passing a check or a promissory note, and says "this is good." Value is the only quality negotiable paper has and if it hasn't that it hasn't anything. Therefore every such expression is considered a warranty. Opinions of value as to other merchandise are usually dealer's talk.

The cases all emphasize the great difficulty of drawing the line between dealer's talk and warranty, and each case has to stand on its own feet.

Lincoln Bros. never in their career equalled the business they are doing now. They are constantly shipping cases of cigars to fill Government orders. A. Jacques, one of their representatives, is now on his regular southern trip. The firm has a wonderful working organization behind it, skilled workers, and plenty of them in every department. If they could get goods to their regular customers as quickly as they wish they would be perfectly happy, but the embargoes prevent this.

Unloading Cargo At San Francisco, 1850

In 1849, Captain Charles Allen Thacher of the ship Pleiadies sailed from San Francisco across the Pacific to Manila to obtain a cargo of supplies. He returned in 1850 with provisions and some luxuries, among them Manila cigars. The voyage netted him a fortune.

Full cargoes of Manila cigars are now bringing fortunes to importers and dealers in the United States.

Freight Embargo Handicaps Philadelphia Cigar Manufacturers

Motor Trucks Used to Accelerate Deliveries—The Truth About a "Robbery"—The Schulte Chain Is Extending—Jeitles & Blumenthal Find Tin a Most Acceptable Container—Stamp Men Contribute to Smoke Fund—Dan Ostrow Makes Notable Improvements—Diaz-Corcoran Cigar Store Has Financial Difficulties—The B. & A. Cigar Co. Brings Out the "Original Thirteen."

PHILADELPHIA, February 12.—'Twas another drear and smokeless Monday in this sleepless town that makes twenty cigars every second, or sumpin' like that, according to our old friend Dr. E. J. Cattell, the city statistician, except on the Mondays set apart for reflection upon one's sins and the high cost of living. That is, the town makes all those cigars on all but the aforesaid Mondays. Cattell is statistician every day. But what we started out to reveal, announce and make public was that the joy of the cigar and tobacco making and selling populace was short lived. Yes, there was some joy. It started when the newspapers announced that this week was to see the last of the smokeless, drinkless and—almost as important—coal-less Mondays. But before the populace got a chance to go out and huzzah, whatever that is, and throw its hats into the air, along comes a traffic committee representing all the railroads that touch Philadelphia and announces that hereafter no freight may be shipped within a ten mile limit of city hall to any point within that limit.

Nearly every maker of cigars in and around Philadelphia has been using freight trains, once in a while, when he could get 'em, to ship to points included in the new territory. Some manufacturers who have been oversold on their books but couldn't get the stuff out through embargoes to distant points took advantage of the situation to ship in large lots to nearby distributors. But now if they wanna do anything like that they've got to use motor trucks, and pay the freight.

This rate comes high, but we learn that some large distributors of high grade goods in this territory have been paying it for some time in order to get goods behind the counter. Express shipments were a novelty a year ago, but now they're a funeral. One local dealer got held up ten days on a shipment from New York and then learned that the company couldn't find his shipment. So they've been taking to the truck lines and getting things in on time, as a general rule. Once in a while a truck slides into a ditch and turns its feet up into the air and its cargo into the mud, but such things will happen.

For that matter, any old thing is liable to happen in Philly. A few days since our eagle optic lighted upon an item in a newspaper list of robberies reading something like this viz., to wit.: "Bobrow Brothers, cigars, $25." Which was supposed to indicate that somebody had eased the makers of "Bold" out of smokes worth that amount. But upon inquiry we learned that 'twas not so, by a long shot. The true story is that a tired looking gent rambled in to the Bobrow plant a few days ago, coughs apologetic like and requests a drink of water. He got it. Then he stood around and registered satisfaction with his surroundings. So did the Bobrows. After a while somebody indicated that it was time to get back to work, and wouldn't the visitor kindly go away from there. But the visitor only smiled vapidly and stayed where he was. So after more coaxing the gent was eased into the street a la bounce, and he went away. In the meantime a key pounder got excited and notified the police. About six brawny cops who hadn't anything else to do managed to cover the two blocks from the police station in thirty minutes, more or less. Of course they had to hurry, but they did it. They examined the floor and the ceiling and the walls and asked many, many damphool questions, and after being greased with a smoke or two, also went away. And then they sent in a report to City Hall about the aforesaid robbery.

Speaking of burglars, cigar dealers here are in favor of a movement to ship 'em all up to Lancaster where they can make big money outa the farmers who got about $300 an acre for their crop. They might also get a few ducats out of the wealthy cigar makers of this and other towns who are now up around Lancaster scrambling for the ol' tabac.

But to get down to business, the Schulte string is to be extended in the near future in this city. It is also annonunced that the firm has about picked out a site from several available in Trenton and will open up there. Chester, Pa., also may be invaded, as well as Baltimore and Washington. The firm is now running two stores in this city and is finding business satisfying—all but the silent Mondays. An innovation for a cigar store that is worth noting was tried out as an experiment by the Schulte main store at 8th and Chestnut street within the last week. Colorature reproductions of famous paintings selling at 15 cents each—the reproductions, not the originals—were put on sale. Just to show what a hit it made, the store got a thousand likenesses of Lincoln and by the birthday of the Emancipator had sold all but two copies.

The Juan F. Portuondo Co. reports that its salesmen got all pepped up at the annual meeting around the first of the year, judging from the way they're sending in orders which the firm can't ship out because of freight embargoes.

Jeitles & Blumenthal, who have been experimenting with various kinds of paper containers for cigars, are still shipping the bulk of their product in tins. Smokers in the wild and woolly, where a large percentage of this firm's output goes, seem to like the tins bettern wood, paper or anything else.

A judgment of $2,589.94 against Channing Allen has been obtained by Sig C. Mayer.

John J. Corcoran, individually and as a member of the extinct cigar firm of A. Diaz and J. J. Corcoran, trading as the Diaz-Corcoran Cigar Store, has been adjudged a voluntary bankrupt. Liabilities, $1,405.70, assets, $295.

One of the largest contributions received in recent weeks by the North American tobacco fund for the soldiers overseas was a check for $84.75 from the Philadelphia Stamp Club. This amount was realized from an auction sale of rare old postage stamps, which shows that the fellows who have been bitten by the stamp bug are pretty good patriots.

Dan Ostrow, one of the distinguished vice-presidents of the new association here and prop. of the equally distinguished City Cigar Store, who is always confiding to us that business is rotten, has so much of it to handle that for the second time in two years he is beginning to blow in some of the surplus on alterations and improvements to the said City Cigar Store. The first time he ripped out the wood floor and put in an artistic concrete understanding. Now he's bulging out the rear to make more room for his stock.

The Sobo Cigar Co. also finding business on the increase. It has put on the market a new ten cent smoke "La Tentor" which is going exceedingly well.

A new five cent smoke, the "Original Thirteen" has been floated by the B. and A. Cigar Company. "Royal Poet" and "Bella," other brands of this firm, are heavily oversold throughout the territory to which the company caters. For some months now the office boy has had a cinch. He hasn't had to make a single trip to the front of the factory to take in the "help wanted" signs. Nearly all the office boys are saving labor in this way nowadays. In fact, some employers got rid of their boys weeks ago.

BAITING CORPORATIONS

"There is a glamor about the word corporation which inspires in the minds of many persons the idea that a corporation is merely a symbol for wealth and riches of all kinds," says American Industry. "To some it is suggestive of enormous salaries, tremendous profits, extra dividends and all that goes with the unlimited use of money. It is needless to say that this is not merely an incorrect, but an unfortunate idea, of most corporations. It is unfortunate because it begets antagonism which is based on nothing more tangible than a certain kind of envy. This envy distorts the attitude of individuals towards all corporations and it is the inspiration of many of the attacks which are made both in the newspapers and in legislative assemblies. If it were possible to present to the public in detail the exact situation of every so-called corporation there would be a tremendous change in the attitude of the public towards these bodies. A corporation today represents, in a way, the backbone of American industry and finance and it is not only the great corporations which have really large returns, but the small corporations which are struggling to keep their heads above water, which contribute to our prosperity. Therefore it is essential that the public should differentiate between the so-called trust,—only a few of which are in existence and most of which are necessary to the country—and the ordinary corporation which has to work as hard, to make ends meet and make a little profit, as the laborer in the machine shop, the farmer on his farm or the small shopkeeper or storekeeper. It is doubly unfortunate that this false impression makes for political attacks. Political antagonism to a corporation is very often based on the assumption that such antagonism is popular with the people. Therefore, if there can be removed from the minds of the people this false impression of corporations, the political value of antagonism to them will necessarily disappear."

WALDORF-ASTORIA SEGAR CO. NOT INCLUDED IN SALE.

The sale of The Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, which took place recently, did not include the Waldorf-Astoria Segar Co. The Geo. Boldt estate owns the Segar Co., and the sale will in no way affect the business. Everything will continue as usual, and R. Waldener will remain as manager. The same staff will be kept. Three of the firm's representatives are now on the road, C. B. Cameron in Chicago, J. C. Wolf in Pittsburg, and Geo. W. Grant in Richmond, Va. Though banquets are less frequent and the sales of imported cigars are lower, the company undeniably does a fine business.

Tooting for Chicago Not To Be Teutonic

And Hitting Some High Spots in the Cigar Trade

CHICAGO, February 8.—Bismarck Garden has passed. Or, better said, the resort is now called the Marigold Garden. Announcement of the change in name was made today by Karl Eitel, secretary of Eitel Bros., proprietors of the Garden and of the Bismarck Hotel, who said the change has been suggested frequently by patrons since the recent opening of the Marigold room. Bismarck Garden was established by Emil Eitel, Karl Eitel and Emil Demme in 1896.

Roman O. Dobler, of Park & Tilford, secured much business on his recent trip East. Roman says he is going to show a big increase in 1918, throughout his territory.

The new representative in the middle West for San Martin & Leon Co., of Tampa, is Frank Daiger, a cigar salesman well known in Chicago. He is now out on a trip.

Elliott G. Ahern has returned from a visit to New York. He is secretary of J. & B. Moos, one of Chicago's largest jobbing houses.

John W. Merriam is expected any day. He is sure to get good orders here as he has many customers in Chicago.

Howard Knowles, cigar manager of Van Noyes News Co. of Kansas City.

Ben Lesser of Havana Production Co., is here booking first orders of the year. Sidney Windmueller is also in town doing missionary work.

Space in the Tacoma Building, to be remodeled for a cigar store, has been leased to Buck & Raynor who occupy the corner as a drug store. A full line of Best & Russell's cigars which they now feature in connection with their drug trade will be handled in this exclusive sigar shop.

The sympathy of the trade is extended to Joseph Ostheimer, sales manager for Bernstein & Schey, because of the recent death of his mother at her home in Ohio.

Robert Brunton, head of the Falk Tobacco salesforce here, went to New York for a visit.

Ernest Heymen who represented the Falk Tobacco Co. in the Northwest for several years, has resigned. Ernie is well known in Chicago.

The ALAMELA brand of the G. J. Johnson Cigar Co. of Grand Rapids, Mich., is sold by several local dealers. This brand still is in the 5-cent class.

C. B. Perkins, of C. B. Perkins Co., of Boston, visited customers in this field, greeted the trade, grabbed off some good sized orders and left for "Somewhere in the U. S. A."

Howlett's Cigar Store, on the southwest corner of Clark and South Water streets, has a fine PALMA VILLA display. This brand now sells for 6 cents.

Phil Verplanck, of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co., was "drifting" around the loop. Looks well and says the outlook is good. The new Henry the Fourth Club house size is a very pleasant smoke and is bound to sell big. It costs the dealers $65 per 1,000.

The Berhoff on Adams street, has a pretty CONDAX display.

Matthew Berriman, of Berriman Brothers, makers of "Jose Vila" and "Valkyrie" cigars, came here to visit Chicago headquarters.

A notice has been sent to all dealers by the Ryan & Raphael Cigar Co., under date of Feb. 1, stating that on Feb. 11 the LUCIUS brand will go up in price. It is one of the biggest clear Havana sellers here. The new prices will be submitted by representatives.

Morris Lesser, who represents Antonio Roig & Langsdorf in the middle West, was looping the loop with salesmanager Leo Weiss, who will job the GIRARD brand in this market.

Sam Moscow, traveling with Max Ginsburg, the owner of the Sioux City Tobacco Co., Sioux City, Iowa, was in Chicago for a short stay. They do a wholesale cigar business and feature GATOS Key Westers and Bouquet de E. H. GATO brands.

CLEAR TITLE cigars now are selling for 6 cents. They are jobbed by Iwan Ries & Co.

The tobacco kit for "our boys in training camps" is now on sale. It contains 4 sacks of BULL DURHAM and 3 packages of LUCKY STRIKE cigarettes, which are done up in a neat container ready for mailing. The carton retails for 50 cents.

The first 5-cent stogie to appear on the market is the HIGH RANK, made by Leonard Wagner of Pittsburgh.

Moe Seigel has purchased the retail store of Ed. J. Brouillette at 201 West South Water street. This is one of the busiest corners in the produce district and has always been a paying store. Seigel will devote his personal attention to this store. He has just renewed his lease at 230 North State street for five years. Seigel is a hard working young man well schooled in the retail business and besides running a retail business does quite a little wholesaling. He has his eye on another location and is liable to surprise us any day by the news that he has closed for store number three.

Rates between Chicago and Maywood have been advanced from 10 cents to 15 cents on the Aurora, Elgin and Chicago Electric Railroad.

Pipes of all kinds are selling better. Most all the dealers report big increases in sales with the buying running to the better grades.

Sales of Montgomery, Ward & Co., the big mail order house, for the year 1917 aggregated $73,512,645, compared with $62,044,336 for 1916, an increase of $11,468,309, with net profits of $5,419,668, compared to $4,550,791 for 1916.

"ACTIVITY AFTER THE FREEZE"

Concerning tobacco markets in Kentucky and Tennessee, the Nashville Tennesseean reports as follows for the past week: "The air-cured tobacco markets resumed activity this week after the freeze, and at Gallatin, Hartsville, Franklin, Bowling Green and other such markets receipts were fairly good and offerings on the loose floors of fair proportion. The loose floor here had a sale Tuesday, the offerings being near 200,000 pounds, with all the large buying interests represented, and prices generally quite satisfactory. The order of the tobacco in all the markets is poor though prices were well maintained. In fact, prices on this air-cured tobacco are higher than for many years, and the farmers are rushing other crops to market. Receipts for the Nashville market are coming with a rush and another large sale will probably be had next week.

"The dark markets are not so active, Hopkinsville being the only one making much effort to sell. The market there showed poor quality, though at firm prices. Clarksville only had small offerings, and report no trading in the country. Springfield has had no sale yet, but it is announced from there that the loose floor season will open on Tuesday, February 12, with sales at all the houses. There is said to be no trading at the barn door of any consequence, and planters and buyers are still somewhat apart as to values. With the advent of better weather and more favorable seasons for handling, it is expected the movement of dark tobacco will be brisk, but prices are not so well settled, and the type of tobacco being largely exported and consequently subject, in a manner, to the uncertainties of war, it is no doubt with some distrust that the big interests put their money in it at the high prices expected by the farmers. It is said that only 2 per cent of the shipping tonnage is available for commodities other than food, munitions and other war uses, and this don't leave much room for shipping tobacco. However, it is expected to sell at prices above that of last season."

OPTIMO MAN USES SOAP

I. I. Hess, the Optimo factory representative, while on an automobile trip through Nevada recently, was stalled by tire trouble at a small town. He was shown to his room in the hotel by the landlady and being coated with a liberal supply of oil and dust his attention was naturally attracted to a little pound cake of soap on the wash basin. Eying the tiny cake, Hess said: "I suppose I can have some more soap?" "No," replied the lady, "under the new rules we are only allowed to put one cake in each room." "All right," said Hess, "put me down for three rooms; I have to wash my face in the morning."—San Francisco Grocer.

THE CHICAGO BUDGET

looked the town over. Fred is connected with three Penn factories and is doing well. Good luck, Freddie.

Al Korn appeared here in a swell new overcoat with a fine fur collar. Al stuck close to the La Salle Hotel, entertaining several of the boys.

Ben Strauss, who represents A. Santella & Co., was another notable visitor in Chicago. He was looking as fine as silk and reports business good.

A very attractive brass sign with a black background is now seen in many loop windows. It bears the ad of Romeo Garcia, the mild Havana cigar. While small in size it shows up very strong, and is declared to be one of the neatest signs distributed to the trade in many a day.

American Maid, mild Havana cigars, made in America, is what the nifty window strip sign reads that is up on the windows of Shoemaker & Co.'s store. American Maid is one of their leaders, and is repeating in great shape. Manager Harry Penny reports business good for this time of the year. Fred Oakes is about ready to depart on an extended trip. It is predicted, too, that he will get big orders.

The Brown Cigar Stores Co., Inc., operate a chain of three well equipped stores at 348, 518 and 755 North Clark St. The firm is composed of M. & H. Brown, two live cigar men who know how to merchandise cigars. In their cases is seen such well-known sellers as San Martin & Leon, El Into, Muratore, Americans, La Muna, Dulce, Perfecto Garcia, La Venga, Gonzales & Sanchez, Lucius, Ben Bay, El Roi Tan, Tom Palmer, Robert Burns, Tom Moore, San Alto, Argenta, and many others. They carry one of the largest assortments of high grade cigars found in Chicago. Their five-cent leader, Brown's Sensation, which is some seller. They will open store No. 4 during the summer at 18th St. and Michigan Ave., one of the best corners on Auto Row, having a 50-year lease on this corner. The Brown Candy Co., which they own, is also meeting with much success.

The Waukegan laundrymen announce their intention of raising prices 25 and 50 per cent. "Talk about going to the cleaners."

The bill-boards around town are showing very attractive posters featuring Helmar cigarettes.

The Independent Drug Co., store 47th and S. State Sts., was held up and $100 in currency and a quantity of cigars were stolen. Another dealer who had a visit from hold-up men was Alex. Nory, 228 E. 61st St. He lost $64 in cash.

United States Tobacco Imports and Exports

Trade Returns for the Month of November

WASHINGTON, February 5.—Returns for the month of November, last, show that the importations of tobacco and manufactures thereof increased notably as compared with returns for the corresponding month of 1916. For example, importations of leaf tobacco suitable for cigar wrappers amounted to 280,304 pounds at $469,126, as against 132,972 pounds at $132,392 in November of 1916; for the eleven months there was an increase from 5,769,653 pounds at $8,403,620, to a slightly reduced quantity of 5,386,631 pounds at a value of $7,080,991. In returns for the month the Netherlands were out of the market, Canada showed a decrease from 3,163 pounds to 644 pounds; Cuba an increase from 11,971 to 17,058 pounds and all other countries from 4 to 262,602 pounds.

Under the heading of all other leaf tobaccos there was an increase for the month from 5,139,940 pounds at $1,935,309 in 1916, to 6,473,915 pounds at $2,369,931 in November of last year. For the eleven months there was an increase from 41,041,050 pounds at $17,004,103 to 43,303,485 pounds at $21,480,489 as between 1916 and 1917. Receipts from Greece during the month amounted to 1,035,486 pounds at $515,303, compared with 2,333,029 pounds at $758,764 for the corresponding month in 1916. Twenty-four pounds were received from the United Kingdom valued at $11; 183,457 pounds at $49,334 were received from Mexico; the quantity received from Cuba showed a slight reduction from 1,600,107 to 1,510,033 pounds with an increase in value from $1,036,492 to $1,186,249 as between the corresponding months; while the importations from all other countries showed an increase from 1,205,804 pounds at $140,053 to 3,744,915 pounds at $619,034.

Under the heading of manufactured tobaccos the returns showed a total value of $930,344, as against $691,602 for November, 1916; for the 11 months of 1916, the imports were valued at $4,972,755, and for the 11 months of last year at $6,724,651. These importations for the month consisted of 372,365 pounds of cigars and cheroots from the Philippines at $443,833, as against 206,913 pounds at $255,855 in November, 1916; 430 pounds of cigarettes at $550, as against 1,720 pounds at $1,423 from the same source in 1916. The importations of cigars and cheroots from all other sources show an increase from 65,908 pounds at $425,313, to 70,083 pounds at $474,862; while those of cigarettes show a decrease from 752 pounds at $2,796 to 82 pounds at $452. The importations of all other manufactured tobaccos show an increase in value from $6,215 to $10,647.

The exports still continue to show spotty and unsatisfactory conditions. For instance, while there has been a marked increase in the value of the exports of unmanufactured leaf from $3,489,108 to $5,675,591, it was for a quantity decreased from 28,663,733 to 25,971,486 pounds. For the 11 months, however, there is a decrease in both quantity and value; in 1916 the returns showed exportation of 456,117,585 pounds at $59,310,003; for 1917 there was a reduction to 225,243,634 pounds at $39,940,331. The largest exportations during the month were those to France which amounted to 5,590,910 pounds at $757,371, as against 8,478,247 pounds at $747,107 in November, 1916. The second market of importance was that of the United Kingdom to which we shipped a total of 5,542,009 pounds at $1,787,414, a marked increase over the 4,212,402 pounds at $803,321 shipped to them in November of 1916. Countries which dropped out of the market during last November and which were customers in November of 1916, included Denmark, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Hongkong. Those showing increased importations other than those already referred to included:

Italy with an increase from 1,005,190 to 2,002,030 pounds, and in value from $111,256 to $405,906; Portugal from 281,188 pounds at $46,567, to 1,750,047 pounds at $263,331; Spain with an increase from 831,415 pounds at $55,121, to 4,969,328 pounds at $664,902; China from 487,218 pounds at $66,882, to 1,700,539 pounds at $575,671, and Australia from 126,208 pounds at $18,885, to 2,696,457 pounds at $773,258. The countries showing the most marked decreases included Canada, Mexico, Argentina, Japan, British and French West Africa.

Our exportations of stems and trimmings increased from 34,574 pounds at $1,663, to 253,872 pounds at $18,854 for the month, but with a most remarkable decrease for the 11 months from 6,355,886 pounds at $199,050 in 1916, to 475,780 pounds at $32,740 in the corresponding 11 months of 1917.

The total quantity of cigarettes exported during the month of November, last, was 278,500,000 at $573,831, as compared with 404,442,000 at $713,831 in the corresponding month of 1916. The only country showing increased importations is Panama, an increase from 1,666,000 at $6,389, to 12,150,000 at $39,074. The exports to China fell from 199,467,000 at $380,372 in November, 1916, to 110,460,000 at $222,636 in November, last, and the Straits Settlements from 157,480,000 at $228,812, to 44,500,000 at $62,600, and Siam from 24,500,000 at $46,960, to 13,750,000 at $28,114.

The exports of cigars and cheroots amounted to 321,000 at $4,896, as against 153,000 at $3,444 in November of 1916, for the 11 months there was an increase from 1,668,000 at $34,111 in 1916, to 2,277,000 at $50,941. The exports of plug during the month were 368,746 pounds at $114,477, as against 269,037 at $81,036 in November of last year; smoking tobacco increased from 95,327 pounds at $51,954, to 215,444 pounds at $89,832 as between the month of November for 1916 and 1917. In all other manufactured tobaccos there was a decrease from $51,861 to $15,522, and for the 11 months from $457,496 to $332,882. From the foregoing figures it is seen that the exports of manufactured tobaccos reached a total value of $798,558 for the month and $13,468,736 for the 11 months of 1917, as compared with returns of $902,126 and $9,298,814 for the month and 11 months of 1916, respectively.

MAKING IMPROVEMENTS

Activity of W. H. Strauss & Co., Inc., Big Tobacco Jobbers at Johnstown, Pa.

Extensive improvements to the four-story building of W. H. Strauss & Co., Inc., are about completed, and the reorganized tobacco firm, capitalized at $100,000, has received its charter, says the Johnstown, Pa., Tribune.

"The Strauss building, on Washington St., between Franklin and Clinton Sts., has been remodeled on the interior. A stairway and hall in the front of the first floor have been torn out and partitions from floor to ceiling erected to make a larger office.

"In the front of the second floor a room is being constructed and will be used for displaying pipes of various grades and makes. The intention is to carry a line of pipes valued at about $5,000, although the room will be of sufficient size to display $10,000 worth. The pipe room will be dustproof, with adjustabl shelves and a large display table in the cente of the room.

"A space in the rear of the first floor wil be used as a storage for the company's nev automobile trucks, one of which has been re ceived, the other being on the way.

"Strauss & Co., Inc., will use all four floor of the building. The first will contain the en larged offices and a stockroom, with commo dious shelves on each side of the building shelves being reached by means of a ladder or a track. The second floor will be a stockroom for everything in the tobacco line, with a pipe room in the front of the building. The third floor will contain everything rolled to smoke such as cigarettes, cigars and tobies. The fourth will be used for storage purposes.

"Like everything else, tobacco is being held up along with other freight in the railroad congestion, but officials of Strauss & Co. expect that when this congestion opens up they will receive the biggest consignment of tobacco ever brought to the city. The building is being made ready for the reception of this stock.

"Strauss & Co. will expand considerably, salesmen covering a wide territory. The retail business has been discontinued and the firm will do a wholesale business exclusively. J. F. Kauffman, for more than 15 years manager of the Reid Tobacco Co., at Altoona, has assumed the management of Strauss & Co., and four of his best salesmen connected with the Altoona establishment have followed him to this city.

"C. F. MacKinney, for 11 years with the Altoona firm, who resigned there before Mr. Kauffman in order to accept a position with the Toledo Sales Co., has decided to come to Johnstown, and will cover the territory between Blairsville and Connellsville for Strauss & Co.

"G. N. Brown, also with the Altoona firm for 11 years as Altoona salesman, joined Strauss & Co., recently, and will continue to cover the Altoona territory for the Johnstown firm.

"J. J. Martin has been assigned to the Johnstown field of W. H. Strauss & Co.

"John Van Pelt, a nephew of Col. J. L. Spangler, will look after Strauss & Co. in Cambria and Somerset counties.

"Attorney Harry Doerr, of this city, is retained as solicitor for the reorganized tobacco firm.

"Manager Kauffman says he has fallen in line with other progressive business firms of the city in the matter of credit and that like all other jobbers and manufacturers, credits will be limited to 30 days. The time for long-time credits has passed."

Smoke Week for the Soldiers

Since "next week," is to be Smoke Week for the boys in France, you should talk at least one of your friends into contributing something towards the "Our Boys in France Smoke Fund." To date the fund has collected $155,000 and has made thousands of soldiers happy and contented. But if the men who are defending you and your liberty are to be kept in a good frame of mind and keyed up to fighting pitch the tobacco and cigarettes will have to fly over there faster. And you know what would happen to any of the Allies if the ammunition factories shut down for any length of time. Well, the cigarette is just as essential to the man who fires the gun as the powder is to the gun that picks off a sniping Boche. So, when you meet a smoker talk cigarettes for the boys "Over There," and after a while the country will be flooded by a smoke wave—every one will be thinking of smokes, and when that happens the soldiers won't have to worry.

EL ROI-TAN

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

Don't Try to Look Too Far Into the Future

Judell's Advice to Cigar Men "When Business Is Good"—San Francisco Takes More Kindly to Six and Seven Cent Prices—An Experiment in Modesto—Chinese Prefer the Gato Brands for New Year Gifts—A Bigger Demand for Briar Pipes.

San Francisco, February 6.—The retail dealers are recognizing present conditions of trade—higher prices, wholesale and retail—with a greater degree of satisfaction, as they see that the six-cent cigar is bringing them in a greater percentage of profit than the old five-center did. They are pushing it for all they are worth among their customers who are not too refractory, and are falling back on the five-cent Manilas for those who refuse to pay more. By these means the retailers are finding that their profits are not cut off, but increased. The distributors say that, while there is a readjustment in the demand for certain brands, business as a whole is steadying down to normal conditions. There is a shortage of certain brands due to the freight conditions, and some distributors are suffering for lack of goods. But these are the exception, for nearly all handle a number of brands, and when one fails to come through they push the others. California has had a remarkably dry season this winter, but good rains the past few days has had its effect on increased orders from the interior. It now looks as if the farmers are going to have an average year with their crops, which at the high prices they will receive will make the interior prosperous. This prospect showed itself almost immediately in the orders sent in by the traveling representatives of the local distributors.

H. L. Judell, in a philosophical moment, in discussing the situation in the tobacco trade of this State, remarked: "Business is good. It is better not to look too far into the future. Let us take the situation as it is now and make the most of it."

The retail dealers of Modesto in this State have gone to extremes. At a recent meeting they pledged themselves to totally abolish the five-cent price for cigars. Goods which are sold for $37.50, such as the Little Tom and William Penn, and Manila cigars which sell for the same price, will be retailed in that town for six cents alongside of the goods which cost $42.50. It is possible that they are laying up trouble for themselves, but other dealers will watch the experiment with interest.

Campbell & Atwood, well known retailers of Stockton, have formed a new firm under the name of the Stockton Tobacco Co., and will go into the jobbing business in that section of the State.

Edmund Kelly, son of the senior member of Horace Y. Kelly & Co., New York, was a San Francisco visitor this week. He is accompanied by M. Piez, formerly a manufacturer of cigars at Tampa, Fla. Horace R., of Kelly & Co., are large importers of Manila cigars, and the two San Francisco visitors are on their way to Manila where they will make a study of the situation.

Oscar Banghart, vice-president of the T. J. Dunn Co., and sales manager of all the Dunn interests, is on the Coast on his semi-annual visit. At present he is in Los Angeles, but is expected to arrive in San Francisco on the 13th inst.

Mr. Sylvester, who represents the Belmont cigar in Los Angeles and adjacent territory, has had his jurisdiction extended to include all the Bay region, and he will become a frequent visitor to this city.

The Philip Morris and the Unis cigarettes have been reduced in price, the former to $20, and the latter to $12. It is said that this action was taken to stimulate sales in these brands, which had fallen off since the price was advanced.

Sam Dannenbaum, salesman for S. Bachman & Co., distributor of the Gato cigar, says that his sales are enormous this year among the Chinese. The Gato cigar is very popular among the Celestials for gifts to their American friends at Chinese New Year's, which arrives next week. They enjoy smoking the cigar themselves, but they will have no other to give to Americans. At least that is what Sam says, and he is backed up in the statement by Sam Israel, who says Dannenbaum sells more cigars to the Chinese than any other salesman in the city.

A. B. Strauss, of Sam I. Davis & Co., recently returned from a very successful trip through the San Joaquin valley. He was as far south as Bakersfield and Fresno, and covered the points to the north of those places. Mr. Strauss expresses the opinion that clear Havana cigars are showing an increased sale in that territory.

Isador Mendelson, California representative of the Manhattan Briar Pipe Co., of Brooklyn, says that he will shortly leave for his initial 1918 trip. Mr. Mendelson is quite enthusiastic over the encouraging prospects of the pipe business. He believes that the American consumer of tobacco is becoming more Europeanized in the greater use of the pipe, especially, he says, of the higher grade lines manufactured by the Manhattan Briar Pipe Co.

TAMPA NEW YORK HABANA

BY INDEPENDENT ACTION

Practically All Tampa Cigar Manufacturers Have Advanced Prices—Hopes for Another Record Year.

TAMPA, February 9.—Practically every large manufacturer in the city is now said to have made necessary price increases effective, acting independently on the question, and the increases have brought no complaint from the trade. Therefore, it is certain that the factories will not only close the year with another record for business volume, but that deserved profits will accrue.

Moises Bustillo, who was among the first to announce increases, states that he has heard no complaints, the trade receiving the announcement in a most satisfactory manner, realizing the necessity of action. Other manufacturers make similar reports.

Jose Escalente, of the Jose Escalente & Co. factory, who has been in Cuba the past three weeks, is expected to return tomorrow. Mr. Escalente has been studying crop conditions in the Island.

John Bain, Jr., owner and editor of Tobacco Leaf, spent the week in Tampa.

George Leghorn, president of the Morgan Cigar Co., after spending some time at the local factory readjusting prices, has returned to Seattle.

A. L. Cuesta, Sr., head of the Cuesta-Rey factory, has gone to Cuba with his family. Mr. and Mrs. Cuesta will visit their son Carl for a time, and Mr. Cuesta will investigate conditions affecting the coming crop.

Jerome Regensburg, of E. Regensburg Sons Co., who has been in New York since the Christmas holidays, is expected to return to the factory next week.

George Leon, of the San Martin & Leon Co., who has moved to Tampa to take personal charge of the company's factory, is now comfortably settled with his family. He will be assisted in the management of the factory by his brother.

The Board of Trade of Tampa, assisted by trade bodies throughout the section,is endeavoring to induce Secretary of the Treasury W. G. McAdoo, as director of the railroads under the present scheme of things, to arrange for the rerouting of all freights to and from Jacksonville, making unnecessary the passage of freights through the northeastern section of the state. Compliance with the requests of these bodies will make the haul much shorter.

The sale of $875,000 of bonds, issued for the purpose of building county-connecting and other hard-surfaced roads in Hillsborough county, having been stopped by injunction on a legal technicality, the county commissioners are again advertising the bonds for sale. They expect to dispose of them March 11 at a price above 98.

a trip through the Sacramento valley with E. Wertheimer. They are sending in good orders for the Prince Hamlet, Havana Ribbon and Philadelphia Hand Made.

J. Dinubilo, who is a sub-distributor, with headquarters at Stockton, visited San Francisco this week, and included a good supply of Fighting Bobs in the order he left here.

Arthur Meyer, Coast representative for the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co., returned this week from a trip to the Northwest. He says they are all smoking Humboldts now.

M. A. Funk, sales manager of the "44" Cigar Co., left here this week for Portland, after spending a few days visiting Glaser Bros., distributors for the cigar in this territory. While here Mr. Funk opened through Theo. H. Davis & Co., of Honolulu, a new field for the "44," and the new distributors placed a substantial order with him.

WISCONSIN NOTES

EDGERTON, Wis., February 8.—The greater portion of the week has been such a succession of storms, snow blockades and zero temperatures, that very little has been accomplished in the movement of the tobacco crop. But better weather conditions now prevail and receiving can proceed. Up to the present date scarcely one-quarter of the crop has been delivered in the southern growing sections, with probably better than half in the up-State districts. The railroads have experienced their worst tie-up of the season during the week, and movements from receiving points have been entirely out of the question, so it is hardly worth while to set delivery dates. Enough stock has been on hand to keep the few packing houses in operation, where they were forehanded enough to have a supply of fuel on hand. The delays in warehouse handling may not prove so great a misfortune as a good share of the crop is yet hanging in the sheds awaiting casing weather. The usual January thaw failed us this year.

The embargo on shipments to eastern points out of storage is still in force..—Edgerton Reporter.

Reports from the Philippines say that the Cagayan Valley tobacco crop, which has been harvested, was large.

Loading Up the Dealer

Loading up a dealer and then leaving him to shift for himself is a simple trick, and about the best method to curtail the consumption of cigars and prevent smokers from willingly paying higher prices for goods. Too many salesmen shoot into a retail store, pass out a few bromides to get the dealer smiling, then stick him with a bill of goods and race off to the next victim. The dealer may sell the goods and he may not; if he does, he pockets the money and forgets, and if he doesn't, he blames it on the poor quality.

And who is to blame? The dealer in order to secure the maximum number of sales must be a window dresser, a born or trained salesman, a psychologist, and a good mixer, but in many cases he is none of these. A man in a factory or office will hear of a friend who is making plenty of money in the retail cigar line. He becomes envious of his friend's success, rents a store, stocks up with goods of which he knows absolutely nothing, and then sits back to wait for the gold to flow in.

This very thing happened to two men who opened a cigar store in Harlem. After they had failed, another man came along, rented the store, put pep into his place, made it attractive, and studied the likes and dislikes of every customer, as well as eventually finding out what each one earned. To the man who drew a fairly good salary and had been in the habit of smoking a cheap brand, he showed the additional benefits to be derived from a higher priced cigar, and by appealing to common sense in some cases, and vanity in other, he gradually induced 90 per cent of this type to contract the habit of smoking a better grade.

The stereotyped argument that you cannot induce smokers to jump their prices on smokes is puerile. The man in the street will do it just as quickly as he will pay the increased price for any other form of a luxury or a necessity, provided you can offer good reasons why he should. And remember, to-tobacco is a necessity to the inveterate smoker.

A big corporation in another line sends men all over the country to interview dealers and see how they are getting along. These representatives have heart-to-heart chats with dealers, making a complete analysis of trade possibilities in the vicinity, the type of customers there, financial and social conditions, transit facilities, and the dealers' methods and manner of mixing. In a way they become efficiency experts, and without trying to be preachy they attempt to show dealers where they are wrong, suggest remedies, and offer suggestions for general improvement.

While this plan is not practical for the average cigar manufacturer, it can easily be applied by every salesman for his own particular benefit. Help the dealer to help himself, and he will be helping you to sell more goods. Brown, the salesman, by cooperating with the dealers will be of some service to Smith from another house, and vice versa. It is up to the dealer. He can win trade or drive it away, consciously or unconsciously, and both are just as costly. And it is up to the salesman to educate the inexperienced dealer in the art of selling to a customer.

At no time in history has this country bee prosperous as at present, this condition ap ing in practically every state in the union. Desirability of a Free Port for New York

The project to establish a Free Zone in the Port of New York, like the great Free Ports which have done so much to stimulate the commerce of other countries, continues to arouse interest concerning what may be accomplished. The Daily Mail says:

"The New York Chamber of Commerce has entered into the lists of those who favor the establishment of a Free Port here in New York, and in such other seaports of the country as require it. It is to the credit of The Merchants' Association that, four years ago, it sent an expert abroad, investigated the subject of free ports and recommended one for the United States. That report of The Merchants' Association has been the basis for the discussion of free ports ever since.

"A free port is an area which the United States Customs Department considers to be outside the limits of the United States. Within the free port area would be piers, slips, warehouses, shipyards, other industries that found it advantageous to locate there, and a net of railroads and highways connecting these units with each other and with the interior of the country. Ships docking within the free port would discharge without any customs surveillance whatever. That means that the process of unloading would be greatly hastened.

"Goods landed in the free port could be reexported without the payment of any customs duty, or, if the conditions of the market so dictated, they could be sent into the interior and pay duty when they crossed the customs lines surrrounding the free port area. Goods stored within the free port could be branded, mixed, manufactured, without the deadening red tape which now surrounds manufacturers or merchants when they store goods in bonded warehouses or when they attempt to collect from the government, in the form of drawbacks, the customs duty paid on imported raw materials which they are exporting in the form of finished products. Within the free port industries manufacturing imported raw materials into products for foreign sale would be ideally located.

"New York should be the world's great consignment market for raw materials. For example, we use 65 per cent of the world's raw rubber, yet we buy a large part of it in European markets. A free port, with its facilities for customs-free holding of raw materials, and for their easy re-exportation, would help develop our reconsignment market.

"All these advantages are recalled in the resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce. The Federal Trade Commission has collected a large body of data on the subject of free ports. We have a War Board of the Port of New York embodying, in Irving T. Bush and Julius Cohen, the best brains and experience that the country could bring to bear upon this particular problem. We suggest a joint committee of the War Board, The Merchants' Association, the Chamber of Commerce and the Federal Trade Commission, to devise a specific plan for a free port at New York, and to see that this plan is embodied in a bill before Congress this next session."

Melville Tannenholz, of Tannenholz Bros., started back to Camp Gordon, Wednesday, having had a most pleasant time while on furlough in New York.

THE PRESIDENT'S GREETING

In answer to the citizen of Memphis who writes, asking: "How did the President greet the drafted men?" it may be said that on Sept. 4, 1917, President Wilson sent the following message:

"To the Soldiers of the National Army:

"You are undertaking a great duty. The heart of the whole country is with you. Everything that you do will be watched with the deepest interest and with the deepest solicitude not only by those who are near and dear to you, but by the whole nation besides. For this great war draws us all together, makes us all comrades and brothers, as all true Americans felt themselves to be when we first made good our national independence. The eyes of all the world will be upon you, because you are in some special sense the soldiers of freedom.

"Let it be your pride, therefore, to show all men everywhere not only what good soldiers you are, but also what good men you are, keeping yourselves fit and straight in everything and pure and clean through and through. Let us set for ourselves a standard so high that it will be a glory to live up to it and then let us live up to it and add a new laurel to the crown of America.

"My affectionate confidence goes with you in every battle and every test. God keep and guide you!

"WOODROW WILSON."

CHAOS IN THE LABOR MARKET.

ALBANY, N. Y., February 7.—That the present chaos in the labor market is due not to so-called labor shortage but to the lack of an adequate system for distributing the available labor supply to meet the need of rapid and sustained production of war materials, is the declaration made in the third special bulletin on "Labor Laws in War Time," just issued by the American Association for Labor Legislation.

"In some industries there is a dearth of labor; in others an over-supply," the bulletin states. "The war work of the Government is being seriously hampered because a comprehensive system of labor distribution has been lacking in this country."

President Wilson's reorganization of all labor-placing activities of the Government into a single bureau under the Secretary of Labor is termed "far-reaching emergency action which points the way to the legislation that is necessary to put such service on an adequate permanent basis," and the passage of the Robinson-Keating bill, now before Congress, is urged to extend and unify all labor exchange work of the Government and provide "the machinery and funds not only to mobilize our labor population for war strength, but also to make possible the reabsorption of the fighting men back into industry with intelligent vocational guidance and without confusion, as well as insuring the continued stabilization of the labor supply to meet the growing industrial requirements of the future."

In such a unified Federal employment service, according to the Association, lies also the necessary first step in solving the ever-recurring problem of unemployment.

WANTED—SEVEN BILLION DOLLARS.

Appropriation bills begin to make their appearance in the House early in January. Since the opening of the session the House Committee on Appropriations through various subcommittees has been engaged in consideration of the estimates submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury early in December. For the year ending June 30, 1919, it is estimated that the Government will be called upon to disburse over $12,000,000,000. The largest appropriations, of course, will be for the military and naval establishments, although the estimates for the latter indicate a slight reduction as compared with the amounts provided for the year ending June 30, 1918.

Thus, for the year ending June 30, 1919, naval estimates now in hand call for slightly more than one billion dollars, of which $833,000,000 is for the naval establishment proper, and $212,000,000 to meet the requirements of the building programme. For the military establishment, increased appropriations in all branches are indicated, but mainly in connection with the army—its equipment, and for heavy artillery. For these purposes there was appropriated for expenditures until June 30, 1918, the sums of $5,234,000,000 and $2,177,542,000, respectively. For the year ending June 30, 1919, it is estimated that $6,609,000,000 and $3,332,000,000 will be required. The needs of the Shipping Board, too, will amount to nearly $900,000,000. These amounts may be still further increased by deficiency appropriations, some of which are already being considered by the committes of the House.

WHEN THE ALCEDO WAS ATTACKED.

(From the New York Sun.)

What happened to the crew of the United States patrol boat Alcedo when she was recently torpedoed in European waters is graphically though tersely described in a letter received by Dennis Coleman, head porter of the Waldorf-Astoria, from his son Dan, former assistant head porter at the hotel. Dan's letter was mailed in Paris, where he was on leave.

"DEAR POP: We left our base Sunday night at 4 P. M., and it was 1:45 A. M. when Fritz struck that awful blow that sent us to the bottom. I was on watch and all of a sudden general quarters was sounded. We didn't have time to take our breach covers off. Those who were lost, twenty-one in all, did not have time to leave their bunks.

"After cutting the forward raft loose I left the ship when the main deck was all awash. I saw the suction so great that I had to swim for all I was worth so as not to be pulled under.

"I made for a raft that an officer and five men were on. He asked some one to get off. So I said good-by and found some wreckage which I clung to. I was in the water two hours before they picked me up. I being the last one. We were finally picked up at 6 P. M. by a French torpedo boat after being sixteen hours in open boats.

"They all can talk about bravery, but the boys of the Alcedo have to get credit. John Doyle, our chief boatswain's mate, cut the whale boat loose, which saved nearly all of us. He is a product of the West Side. Collier stopped the engines and closed the safety valve, which alone kept the ship from going down much quicker. The boys won't forget what Doyle did.

"I was laid up in the hospital with general injuries, but am all right now. Tell all the boys I was asking for them and tell them it's better than the army any day. Give love to mother, Frank and babe and the girls. I remain your loving son. DAN.

Cuban Tobacco Growers Pray for Good Weather

Timely Showers Would Be of Great Value to the Vuelta Abajo—Reports from Partido and Remedios—Cigar Shipments Deferred—The Havana Leaf Market Becomes Rather Quiet—Notable Visitors at the Factories.

HAVANA, February 8.—Crop news from the Vuelta Abajo has not improved, as the drought has been unbroken in nearly all tobacco growing districts, and if it doesn't rain soon, we shall have to rely principally upon the limited number of larger plantations, which have irrigation systems. In the Semi Vuelta region, it rained sightly, so the chances of getting a better crop have improved. In several parts of the Partido section it has rained during the past week, and while showers benefit the leaf grown in the open fields, they may cause, however, spots on the wrappers grown under cheesecloth. The Remedios crop, if rains do not come this month, may be curtailed in quantity. But there is plenty of time yet for a change for the better, so nobody need worry at present. In any event there should be enough to go around, and something left over eventually.

Exports of cigars, by the S. S. Morro Castle, totaled 266 cases, containing 1,367,580 cigars, which were consigned to the following countries, viz:—To Great Britain 515,900, to United States 514,850, to the Argentine Republic 106,-30, to British Africa 98,500, to New Zealand 3,500, and to Canada 38,250 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco, from the port of Havana, for the week ending January 26, 1918, totaled 3,750 bales, and which were distributed to the following countries, viz:—To all ports of the United States 3,658, and to Canada 92 bales.

The leaf firm of Jorge & P. Castañeda has been dissolved, Ignacio P. Castañeda is the liquidator of the assets, and pays all the outstanding bills. He has re-established himself under the style of Ignacio P. Castañeda & Co., at 110 Dragones Str., as grower of leaf tobacco, packer and leaf dealer. His son, Salvador P. Castañeda has an interest in the firm and is authorized to sign by power of attorney. Severiano Jorge also has re-established himself, under the style of Severiano Jorge & Co., at 2 Egido Str., the full partners being: Severiano Jorge, Bernardo Jorge and Gerardo Caracena, and the industrial partners, Juan Jorge and Felipe Jorge. This firm will pack tobacco and be dealers in leaf tobacco, sugar and starch.

The sale of Leslie Pantin to the Portuguese Government, consisted of 782 bales, and which were shipped last week by the S. S. Mexico.

The Cuban Land & Leaf Tobacco Co. has purchased 600 bales of first and second capaduras of Remedios, being the last large, and good lot, in our market.

Leslie Pantin, Jr., the Vice-Consul of Portugal, and the only son of Leslie Pantin, the Consul-General of Portugal, is engaged to a beautiful and wealthy Cuban young lady, Miss Ondina de Armas, and friends have congratulated both parties upon this perfect match. The wedding bells may not ring, however, until perhaps next summer or fall.

Romeo y Julieta purchases now total 1,500 bales. The factory shipped abroad last month 1,230,000 cigars, and sold 600,000 cigars and 15,000,000 cigarettes in the city of Havana, and in the interior of Cuba. Such figures do not require any comment, as they speak for themselves.

Partagas received the usual visit at this time of the year of their energetic representative for the United States and Canada, Robert E. Lane, who has materially increased the sale of Partagas cigars in his territory. Partagas is working strong.

Thomas F. Healy, the representative of Allones, Ltd., arrived here last week, in order to prepare for the coming campaign on Ramon Allones in the United States and Canada.

Nelson Wasserman, son of B. Wasserman, arrived here yesterday to visit our manufacturers. His father intends to come here about February 20.

Punch, for Larrañaga, Hoyo de Monterrey, Belinda, and Calixto Lopez & Co., are all working strong upon good orders. Joe Diaz, the president of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Company, is expected to arrive here any day.

Owing to the scarcity of tonnage for Europe, the Ward Line was not willing to accept any freight here for that destination. Furthermore we have no steamer for New York direct to-morrow, as the S. S. Morro Castle is making some repairs in New York, and for this reason did not come here this week. The S. S. Monterrey, which arrived here on Wednesday, was scheduled to leave for Mexico, on her customary voyage, and as the Ward Line had no other steamer provided for to take the place of the Morro Castle, shippers here have to be content to wait until next week.

The leaf market was rather dull during the past week, as far as the demand for the United States is concerned, as we have had no new arrivals of leaf buyers, although the inquiry on the part of local cigar and cigarette manufacturers has continued, and some commission merchants have received orders from their customers.

Preserving the Original Goodness of Tobacco

YOUR product leaves your factory clean and fresh. It must reach the ultimate consumer in precisely the same condition. That is the mission of Diamond-F Protective Papers.

Perhaps Diamond-F Glassine is the paper best suited to certain of your products. Maybe Diamond-F Greaseproof (Imitation Parchment) would serve the purpose better. For every packing purpose, there's a Diamond-F Protective Paper that exactly meets the requirements.

Ask your jobber to show you the Diamond-F line, which includes, in addition to the two above-mentioned papers, Diamond-F Vegetable Parchment and Diamond-F Parchmoid. These Protective wrapping and packing papers preserve the original goodness of Tobacco. They are used by leading industries all over the United States.

They are made with pure spring-water under clean, sanitary conditions by paper experts. Ask your jobber about Diamond-F Protective Papers. If he cannot supply you, write us direct.

New York's Share Was Not So Large As Formerly

The Foreign Trade of the United States in 1917

New York's share in the import trade of the country in 1917 was the lowest in many years and her share of the exports was less than in any year since the beginning of the war. A compilation by The National City Bank of New York shows that but approximately 46 per cent. of the imports entering the country in the calendar year 1917 passed through the Port of New York, against 52 per cent. in 1916, 55 per cent. in 1915, 57 per cent. in 1913, 59 per cent. in 1910 and 63 per cent. in 1900. On the export side the share which passed through the Port of New York in 1917 was but about 48 per cent., against 51 per cent. in 1916 and nearly 51 per cent. in 1915.

This reduction in New York's share of the trade of the country is, so far as relates to imports, a part of a general condition which has characterized world trade since the beginning of the war. With the Central Powers cut off entirely from over-sea trade, the Allied countries conserving their supplies for home use, and the neutral countries of Europe busy in meeting the demands of their neighbors at war, the quantity of merchandise which Europe has been able to offer to the United States has been greatly reduced. The value of merchandise from Europe entering the United States in 1917, even at the greatly advanced prices, amounts to less than $600,000,000, against $900,000,000 in 1912. On the other hand imports from other parts of the world increased from $900,000,000 in 1912, to approximately $2,400,000,000 in 1917. Imports from Europe fell off more than $300,000,000 in the period 1912 to 1917, while those from other parts of the world increased about $1,500,000,000 in the same period.

As a natural consequence of this change in the currents of trade, especially the great reduction in merchandise from Europe, the share of the imports entering by our Atlantic Coast ports in 1917 was but about 69 per cent. of the total merchandise imported, against 74 per cent. in 1913, and 77 per cent. in 1910. On the other hand imports entering by the other ports, especially the Pacific Coast and Northern Border greatly increased. The value of imports entering through the Pacific Coast and Northern Border ports has more than doubled since 1913, while that entering by the Atlantic ports increased but about 50 per cent. The share of the total imports which entered by the Pacific Coast and Northern Border ports has more than doubled since 1913, while that entering by the Atlantic ports increased but about 50 per cent. The share of the total imports which entered by the Pacific Coast and Northern Border ports increased from 17 per cent. in 1913 to 23 per cent. in 1917, while that entering by the Atlantic ports fell from practically 74 per cent. in 1913 to 69 per cent. in 1917. Oriental trade now prefers the Pacific route.

On the export side conditions are reversed as to the relative port activities. The cause which resulted in a reduced flow of merchandise from Europe to the United States, t war created a large movement of merchandi from the United States to Europe and as result the share of the Atlantic ports in t export trade has been larger than norm The share of the total exports of the count which passed out of the Atlantic ports 1917 was 70 per cent., against 56 per cent. 1913 and 54 per cent. in 1912. With the fal off in the exports of cotton the share of t Gulf ports in the exportation fell from abo 22 per cent. in 1913 to approximately 11 p cent. in 1917, and the share of the Pacific ar Northern Border ports in the total exports the country fell from about 22 per cent. 1913 to approximately 18 per cent. in 191 Exports from the Atlantic ports in 1917 e ceeded those of 1913 by nearly $3,000,000,00 while all other ports of the country show a increase of but about $750,000,000 in the sam period.

In the case of New York alone, howeve the export figures do not show as large a per centage of gain as certain other of the Atlan tic ports, due probably to the physical inabil ity of a single port, however well equippe to handle the enormous quantities of mer chandise offered for exportation, especially t Europe and the other sections of the worl specially accessible from the Atlantic front age. The total exports of the Port of Ne York in 1917 were $2,937,000,000, against $2, 791,000,000 in 1916, a gain of but about 5 pe cent. in the year 1917, while the figures of th port of Philadelphia for the nine months, fo which statistics are available, show a gain o more than 50 per cent. over 1916, those o Baltimore 30 per cent., Boston 75 per cent. those of the Atlantic ports as a whole abou 15 per cent., and those of the Northern Borde ports about 36 per cent. increase in the singl year 1917.

Percentage of Murders

Many murder cases, sensational or obscure, end in acquittals. And the fact that the 7,450 killings reported in the United States in 1916 led to but 107 legal executions seems to the Montgomery Advertiser to have a direct bearing on the increasing murder-rate in this country. "The State permits the individual to kill with comparative immunity; practically the individual does not permit his State to kill in return." In his review of homicide figures in The Spectator, Frederick L. Hoffman points out that in the thirty-one large American cities which have been under an examination for a number of years the average murder-rate for 1916 was 9.2 per 100,000 of population against an average rate of 8.4 for the preceding five years. During the period 1911-1915 the male homicide-rate for the whole country was 10.7 as against a female homicide-rate of 2.9. Eleven out of every seventeen male murderers used firearms, as did half of the murderesses. "These figures," says Mr. Hoffman, "indicate the practical value of more effective restrictions upon the use and possession of firearms and the urgency of more drastic methods of police supervision and control." The St. Louis Republic agrees with Mr. Hoffman on this point, declaring that "the revolver-carrying habit is something that will be taken up nationally in time, and as revolvers are brought under control, the homicide-rate will decrease." The Alabama editor already quoted calls attention to the commonly acknowledged fact that while woman kills less frequently than man, "when she does kill she goes free more readily than man does." No wonder, it is remarked, that Abe Martin's Mrs. Lafe Bud said there were a lot of things she wouldn't put up with, "if she was purty enough to get acquitted."

Even from the economic viewpoint it seems "certainly lamentable at a time when every adult life has a decidedly enhanced value there should be such a needless sacrifice of human life, which may be conservatively estimated at annually not less than 7,500 deaths for the continental United States." "Yes," comments the Lincoln Nebraska State Journal, "these statistics are a discredit to the United States as they would be to any civilized nation. People, schools, churches—above all, the courts—should look to themselves for cause and cure."

Hoffman's table showing the number of homicides in thirty-one American cities, with their rate per 100,000 population is as follows:

Cities	Homicides	Rate
Memphis, Tenn.	134	89.9
Atlanta, Ga.	59	31.0

A certain merchant wants his employees to tell him when there's anything wrong with the business. "The right things," said he, "will take care of themselves. You're afraid you'll be called a kicker if you find fault too often. But pointing out defects isn't finding fault. Standing still and letting wrong right itself is stupid. Who knows the most about the little weak spots in the business? It isn't the man that's obliged to spend four-fifths of his business hours in the office. No, sir, it's the men that have to sell the goods."

Shortage of structural steel, caused by the war, necessarily delays the completion of great hotels being erected in New York City. The gigantic 2,000-room Commodore Hotel, now being built by John McE. Bowman, president of the Biltmore, Manhattan and the Ansonia hotels, was to be continued last year, but the steel shortage delayed construction. The government needed the steel, so there was no alternative.

Timely discovery by Isaac Gottlieb of fire in the rear of his wholesale tobacco store at 123 Water street, Newburgh, N. Y., Wednesday evening about 7:15 o'clock, resulted in the curbing of the flames before they could spread to the other floors of the building. The fire was kept within a small area in the store and but little penetrated to the living apartments above. Mr. Gottlieb in speaking of the damage done by the fire and water, said the greater part of his stock, which he valued at from $30,000 to $40,000, was ruined. He carried some insurance.

Col. Charles A. Judkins, who had managed the Mt. Kineo House, the famous resort on Moosehead Lake, in Maine, for twenty-five years, recently resigned. In token of the esteem in which he is held by the guests that he entertained during his long tenure at the hotel he was honored by a gathering at the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, and was presented with a $1,000 Liberty Bond. Adjutant General L. W. Stotesbury of New York, made the presentation speech. Nearly 100 people, who had been going to the Mt. Kineo House for the past ten to twenty years, contributed to the fund for buying the bond.

Frank Trebuzio, a fruit, candy and cigar dealer, in Batavia, Ill., refused to close his store on "Garfield Monday." Fuel Administrator Hollister of Aurora found Trebuzio doing business as usual. Mr. Hollister, thinking perhaps that Trebuzio did not understand, gave him a friendly talk as to the patriotic features of the situation. Trebuzio refused to comply and Mr. Hollister notified Deputy U. S. Marshal Thomas Smith of Aurora. Marshal Smith on Tuesday, laid the case before Minton G. Clabaugh, department of justice agent in Chicago and an investigation was at once ordered. Trebuzio may have to go before Attorney Clabaugh and explain his attitude.

Dealers and jobbers who don't get their goods on the dot should not be too hasty in sending in complaints, since in nine times out of ten, manufacturers are not to blame for delays. Freight congestion and frequent embargoes are the cause. The other day a large manufacturer who was anxious to ship some goods telephoned to an express company to have a wagon call. The express man told him that he would do well to hire a truck and bring his own goods to the office, adding that a wagon would not be likely to call for several days. The manufacturer hired a truck, and no sooner had his goods been delivered and a receipt given for them than an express official called out: "Hey, boys, no more goods until next week."

Remarkably successful results were obtained by the salesmen of the American Tobacco Co. in Wisconsin in their week-long drive for the war savings stamps. O. W. Peasley, the Wisconsin representative of the company, has sent to State Chairman J. H. Puclicher a statement of the work accomplished in the South Wisconsin division, covering the campaign conducted in Milwaukee by five salesmen and one supervisor, and one salesman assisting the Kenosha county committee. The salesmen disposed of 417 of the $5 war savings stamps and 20,260 of the 25-cent stamps. They installed 157 agencies.

Trade News from Near and Far

Leaf tobacco, valued at $4,301,591 entered the port of New York, during December, 1917.

The City National Cigar Store at 11 South 16th street, Omaha, suffered a slight loss from fire recently.

The cost of running New York City during the coming year will be $20,043,321 a month and $4,616,217 a week.

In Philadelphia, says the North American, "energetic efforts are being made to educate the public to appreciation of Manila cigars."

E. C. Hull, Western sales manager of the General Cigar Co., was expected to arrive in San Francisco early in February to work up a bigger sales campaign for Tom Moore and Tom Keene cigars.

M. Matthews, manager of the Oakland branch of Glaser Brothers, San Francisco, has resigned, being succeeded by Robert Pierce, previously in charge of the San Jose business of Glaser Brothers.

The editor of the Western Trade Review suggests that war conditions offer a golden opportunity to the price cutter. He is given a chance to reform. He will experience no difficulty now in getting full prices—if he wants to. "Try it six months," the Nebraska journal admonishes.

There were 109,070 crates of citrus fruits, valued at $196,326, invoiced at the American Consular agency at Santa Fe, Isle of Pines, Cuba, for the United States during 1917. Among the other items with their value were: Pineapples, $3,372; peppers, $52,032; eggplants, $6,068, and tomatoes, $863.

Henry L. Plate, for the past 17 years connected with the lithographic industry, is now associated with the Pasbach-Voice Lithographing Co., Inc., as metropolitan sales representative. Mr. Plate requires no further introduction, and he, together with the Pasbach-Voice Lithographing Co., Inc., which through workmanship, service and price has made rapid strides forward, will be fully capable of taking care of all lithographic requirements of the cigar and allied trades.

Farm Agent Bucher, returning from a tour of Lancaster County, Pa., said that leaf tobacco dealers have passed through the worst period for business of their history. Drifted roads and zero temperatures have made stripping and delivery impossible, and the unexpected thaw several days ago caused the frozen stalks to melt and flood the tobacco cellars. He predicted that stripping, which should almost be completed, will continue late in to spring. A very small part of the new crop has been delivered.

John R. Quinn, a cigar manufacturer, of Albany, N. Y., has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $2,612 and assets of $1,325, consisting of cash, $3; stock, $141; fixtures, $75, and accounts, $1,016. The Albany credi ors include Joseph I. Wiley, $60; Times-Unio $53; I. M. Strasser, $218; William E. O'Neil $38; Edward J. Flood, $131; National Con mercial Bank, note, $192; Albany Chamber c Commerce, $60; M. S. Quinn, $500 and Phili R. Rechter, $102.

Three unlicensed retail grocers of Pittsburgl M. Shapiro, B. Block and Sam Geiman, hav had their supplies of licensed food commoditie cut off by order of the United States Food Ad ministrator because of making unjust and un reasonable charges in handling and dealing i necessaries. This order has been sent to al persons in Pennsylvania, Virginia and Ohi holding licenses under the Food Control Act forbidding them "in anywise to deal with, bu from, sell to or make any sale or agreement for the sale of any licensed commodity directl or indirectly to" the parties concerned.

Last month the King Cole Cigar Co. sol forty per cent. more cigars than it did in Jan uary, 1917, and still had unfilled orders fo 45,000 cigars. John Moriarity, the manager says that at present he is oversold to th number of 70,000 cigars. A week ago Mr Moriarity placed a rush order with the fac tory at Tampa for 260,000 cigars. Owing t the new law which goes into effect in March he has ordered enough tin to take care o 2,000,000 cigars. For the first eight days o February the sales equalled the total for al of February in 1917. This year Mr. Moriarity expects to sell at least five million cigars.

Concrete Ship Building

is known that concrete, made from "Port- an" cement, is now being used in the construc- io of vessels in more than a dozen leading ountries of the world and that the United Stes is the world's largest producer of the nerials used in this new form of ship build- ng The type of vessels now being constructed fro concrete range from the barge and float- ng dock up to the ocean steamer of several housand tons capacity.

oncrete made from Portland or other hy- lr ulic cement, reinforced with steel, is the chief nerial of these vessels. The keel and ribs of h vessel are of steel, and quantities of wire nh are also used in retaining and reinforcing h concrete which fills the spaces between the tel ribs. This combination of concrete and tel has given to this type of work, the title of "ro concrete" and "reinforced concrete," but noth the chief requirements of the new type of vessel, concrete and steel, the United States a exceeds any other country in its ordinary er-to-year production. "Portland" cement, v ch gets its name from its resemblance in ap- pearance to Portland stone, is produced in far greater quantities in the United States than any ther country of the world and in fact probably exceeds that of all other countries combined. Dr own output of Portland cement in 1917 vas the largest in the history of our produc- ion, amounting to 93,550,000 barrels, while that of the other principal cement producing coun- rs in the latest available year was, Germany, 000,000 barrels; England, 17,000,000 barrels, nd France, 8,000,000 barrels. Our own pro- lction has grown with great rapidity from 000 barrels in 1880, to 335,000 in 1890; 8,482,000 in 1900, 68,205,000 in 1910, and 93,- 540,000 in 1917, the high record year of production, while the value has grown from $126,- 000 in 1880, to $101,000,000 in 1917. In the iron and steel required for use in conjunction with the cement in ship building, we are also by far the world's largest producer, our total output of pig iron, the basis of all iron and steel products, being more than the combined production of any other three countries in the world.

Portland cement, which is scientifically described as "an artificial mixture, based on chemical analysis, of limestone and clay, or marl and chalk, or shale and limestone," burned to incipient vitrifaction and the clinkers finely ground, hardens when exposed to water and is thus often designated "hydraulic cement," though the smaller quantities designated as "natural" and "puzzolanic" cement are also properly included in the term "hydraulic." The "natural" cement, made solely from certain classes of limestone, and the "puzzolanic" composed of blast furnace slag and lime, show a marked fall- off in production in the United States in recent years, while the "Portland" shows a rapid increase, and now forms over 95 per cent. of the output of hydraulic cement in the United States, its value amounting in 1917 to $101,000,000, and that of the "natural" and "puzzolanic" less than $1,000,000. The census of 1914 shows the capital invested in cement manufacture, $243,485,- 000.

The countries which have already utilized concrete for vessel construction in some form include Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Argentina, Brazil, Panama, Australia, Canada and the United States, the construction in the United States of vessels of this type occurring chiefly at New York, Baltimore and San Francisco. Cement production in the United States is widely distributed, occurring in no less than twenty-eight states, while its general use for docks, piers, reservoirs, irrigation work, tunnels, bridges and pavements, is even more widely distributed, and its use rapidly increasing. The production in the United States is almost exclusively for domestic use, the exports having amounted in value to but $5,822,000 in 1913, the high record year, and $4,112,000 in 1917.

Dave Echemendia, who formerly represented the Castaneda factory, is in New York City. He is now connected with a big automobile house and travels through South America.

"There are scarcely two towns in Minnesota where the same prices prevail," was the remark made by a representative of one of the big tobacco companies. He referred to manufactured tobaccos and cigarettes. He cited the fact that in the iron range towns seven cents is charged for Bull Durham smoking tobacco.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, testifying before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee Monday a week ago on the railroad bill, said the Monday holidays established by Dr. Garfield probably would not be necessary beyond the middle of February.

RELATING TO PROHIBITION.

A month or so ago the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision that definitely lays to rest the contention that a State law cannot be enforced which deprives a citizen of the right to keep a bottle of booze on the pantry shelf for personal use.

A citizen may be deprived of just that right. Justice McReynolds, in voicing the decision used these words: "A State has power absolutely to prohibit manufacture, gift, purchase, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within its borders without violating the Constitution."

This is "bone dryness" from which the last wee drop of hope has been hydraulicked. For how is it possible for a man to get a bottle of his favorite blend (or straight; see page 16247, U. S. P., ninth revision) unless it is either manufactured within the borders of his particular commonwealth or transported from so less arid district outside? How can get it if he may neither purchase it accept it as a gift?

Others besides Mrs. Hubbard may f the cupboard bare.

Of course, all State laws prescrib dryness are not alike. Some are v dusty, some are less so. Nor are all forcing officers alike. Some are ri and some are politicians. But it is n established that the State has the c stitutional privilege of closing do hard if it wants to, and it is the ri that is under discussion, not goo natured sheriffs or near-sighted distr attorneys.

Of course, nothing that has been s applies to the druggist very much. is permitted to carry a small stock medicinal purposes only—provided first negotiates a separate peace with t government and gives bond to amount approximating three times t difference between the plan of salvati and the square of the hypotenuse.—B letin of Pharmacy.

PILADELPHIA FOOD PROFITEERS.

hree gentlemen named Zuckerman, Kz and Schnitzler, the last an employe o!a Philadelphia retail grocery house a: the other two gentlemen of fortune, a'anged a scheme last October by which thy were to buy several hundred cases o peas and put them by for a raise. Te purchase was made and the peas s'red in an old shack on Bainbridge s'eet, Philadelphia. They could have s'd at a profit many times, but like oers of their ilk, they wanted the last cit, and so it happened that the Food Administrator found out about it and szed the stock. The peas were bought om the Sears & Nichols Canning Co., Ohio, and they have now been sold r the benefit of the Red Cross.

The three worthies who were in on iis deal violated the food regulations three ways: they did or were pre-ring to do a wholesale grocery busi-ss without a license, they hoarded a od product and they profiteered. In ite of that, the Food Administration cided to pay them back their invest-ent and their expenses. The only enalty inflicted on them was the loss f their expected profit.—Modern Mer-hant.

U. S. AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS.

The following unofficial estimates of he value of our exported agricultural roducts, most of which went to Eu-ope, to the nations at war with Ger-nany, during the years of 1916 and 917, show what effect obedience by his Nation to Germany's demand in ier War-Zone decree would have had n the American farmer. The figures are for the 10 months of 1917 ending with October and for the full year of 1916:

Exports.	1917.	1916.
Cotton	$563,783,000	$502,617,000
Wheat flour	99,025,000	70,839,000
Wheat	224,444,000	172,516,000
Barley	21,156,000	18,032,000
Corn	65,115,000	41,663,000
Horses	30,225,000	52,570,000
Wool manufactures	14,150,000	34,627,000
Mules	12,972,000	22,130,000
	$1,030,870,000	$9,141,994,000

These figures do not include the lesser agricultural exports, nor all in manufactured form.

The effect on the price and value of the more than a billion dollars' worth of agricultural products of the United States which found a market in Europe in the first 10 months of 1917, had the United States tamely submitted to Germany's insolent demand, which would have denied them access to these markets, can easily be imagined. For lack of a market much of these products would have rotted on the farms or in warehouses or been used in unprofitable ways.

The crimes of Germany against the lives of American citizens and insult to our Nation's honor fully justified—in fact, made imperative—America's entry into the war. These figures only show a portion of the tremendous material loss which would have followed America's tame submission to the war-zone decree. Our whole exports to the European nations at war with Germany amounts to three and a half billion dollars a year.

Uncle Sam seems able to hold up his end, whatever happens.

Cuba on the Films

Cuba is to be photographed as never before. Through arrangements just completed between Edward M. Newman, the widely known travel lecturer, and the Cuban Government, through the Republic of Cuba News Bureau, Mr. Newman and Director J. V. Knight, of the Bureau, with a staff of photographers and assistants, will shortly sail for Havana on a month's intensive photographic survey of the whole island.

Upward of 100 reels of film will be photographed, as well as a comprehensive file of all matters relating to Cuban contemporary life, as well as the scenes on the island of historical value. These will be embodied into a permanent record by the News Bureau, and placed at the disposal of newspapers and news pictorial syndicates free of charge.

Mr. Newman's prominence in this field induced the Cuban Government to make extraordinary arrangements for the project, which is an unusual one for Latin-America.

As the chief of his staff for the Cuban enterprise, Mr. Newman has appointed H. L. Keepers, of London, who has had many years' experience as a photographer in all parts of the world.

Our Foreign Trade

WASHINGTON, January 28.—The country's foreign trade amounted to over $9,000,000,000 in 1917, exports reaching a total of $6,226,000,000, while imports amounted to $2,952,000,000, according to a statement issued to-day by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. This is a gain of nearly $1,300,000,000 over 1916, when the total trade amounted to $7,874,000,000.

December exports amounted to $589,000,000, an increase of no less than $100,000,000 over November. The imports for December amounted to $228,000,000, an increase of $7,000,000 over November.

Free imports formed 76 per cent of the total in December and 72 per cent of the total for the calendar year.

The excess of exports over imports has nearly doubled in the last two years, amounting to $3,274,000,000 in 1917, against $3,091,000,000 in 1916 and $1,776,000,000 in 1915.

The imports of gold during December amounted to $2,500,000, as compared with $159,000,000 in December, 1916. For the year the gold imports amounted to $538,000,000, against $686,000,000 in 1916. The exports of gold amounted to $4,500,000 in December, 1917, against $28,000,000 in December, 1916. For the year the gold exports amounted to $372,000,000, as compared with $156,000,000 in 1916.

Silver imports amounted to $6,000,000 in December, as compared with $3,500,000 for the corresponding month in 1916, and to $53,000,000 for the year, against $32,000,000 in 1916. Exports of silver were valued at $10,000,000 in December, 1917, and $9,000,000 in December, 1916. For the year the silver exports amounted to $84,000,000 against $71,000,000 for 1916.

SMELLS

My Daddy smells like tobacco and books,
Mother, like lavender and listerine;
Uncle John carries a whiff of cigars,
Nannie smells starchy and soapy and clean.

Shandy, my dog, has a smell of his own
(When he's been out in the rain he smells most);
But Katie, the cook, is more splendid than all—
She smells exactly like hot buttered toast!

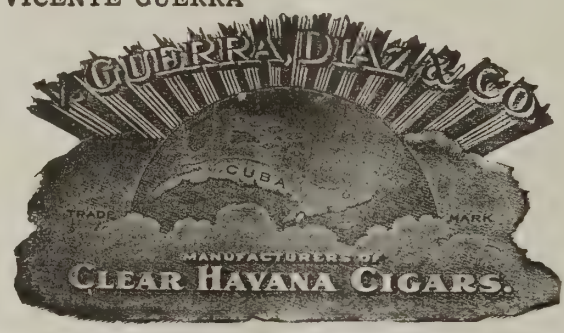
A LESSON FOR REFORMERS.

Out in Kansas, where every other man is a reformer, and where every third man founds a separate political party at least once in a lifetime, the Legislature passed a law forbidding newspapers to advertise cigarettes. Cigarettes are not a poison. They are smoked by thousands of men who have made and are making their mark in business, in politics and in war. The manufacturer of cigarettes is recognized by the States and by the National Government as legitimate but a few persons in the State of Kansas who do not care for nicotine, and who believe they have a vocation to supervise the morals and manners of their neighbors, forced a bill through the legislative body forbidding the publication of advertisements commending cigarettes.

Of course, it was necessary to go at their work by indirection—but indirection is the most pleasing of indoor sports to the average "reformer." The statute was made to read that newspapers carrying such advertisements should not circulate within the State. It was not the first time Kansas had manifested a willingness to assume functions properly belonging to the Federal Government. It was Kansas, some of us recall, that passed a law to insure the integrity of silver at 16 to 1 after the country at large had rejected that heresy. Now she undertook to nullify that section of the Constitution which gives Congress exclusive jurisdiction over postoffices and postroads. And Kansas might have made good but for the intervention of a Missouri editor and a Missouri publisher. Kansas seems to be willing to accept what is handed to her without demur. But the Kansas City Post is published in Missouri, while circulating largely in Kansas. The editor of the Post fought the measure as illegal and won his fight.—New York Telegraph.

THE GREAT AMERICAN R. R. SYSTEM.

Government operation of railroads is now an accomplished fact. On December 26, the President by proclamation announced that, effective Decemb[er] the government would take ove[r] assume control of the operation [of] railroads of the United States. A[u]ity to take this step was provided [in] Army Appropriation Act of Augu[st] 1916.



On January 4, 1917, the Preside[nt] peared before Congress to inform th[e] body of his action and to ask th[at] necessary legislation be enacted to[o] vide for the operation of the rail[roads] by the government. Bills were at[once] introduced by the chairmen of the S[enate] and House Committees on Inte[rstate] Commerce and on January 7 the C[hair]man of the House Committee set [hear]ings on the House bill for January [28].

The measure now before Con[gress] provides (1) for compensation to [the] roads for the use of their properti[es] the government on the basis of a "[fair] dard return" according to the av[erage] net operating income for the three [years] period ending June 30, 1917, (2) [for] maintenance of properties through a [reserve] ance under the head of operating [ex]penses or through a special reserve [fund] with reciprocal allowance to the ca[rriers] or the government of a fair return [on] sums advanced for additions or impr[ove]ments to railroad properties, (3) [for] control by the President of the [issue] securities necessary to meet maturin[g] obligations, necessary financing inci[dent] to reorganizations and other neces[sary] expenditures, (4) for the paymen[t of] dividends at not to exceed the rate w[hich] obtained during the three-year pe[riod] and for the payment of dividends [in] order of the President in cases whe[re] regular dividend has not been paid [or] earned during that period, (5) for [an] appropriation of $500,000,000 for the [pur]poses of the bill. Eisenlohr Succeeds Wertheim

Wise Becomes Chairman of the Executive Committee—Hummell Elected Vice President—Hollingsworth Made a Director—Retiring President Presents His Report—"Firm in His Determination to Engage Only in Patriotic and Philanthropic Work"—Annual Directors' Meeting of the T. M. A.—A Luncheon At Haan's—Dushkind's Presentation Speech—A Happy Reply.

The annual meeting of he Board of Directors of the Tobacco Merchants Association of the U. S., was held on February 19, at the office of the Association, 5 Beekman street, New York.

The well attended meeting was called to order promptly at 11 A. M. After the usual preliminaries President Jacob Wertheim submitted his annual report showing the activities of the Association. The report was received with a great deal of enthusiasm.

Mr. Wertheim then announced his decision to retire from office. The directors present endeavored to persuade him to continue to preside over the Association, but his determination to devote all of his time to patriotic and philanthropic work was unshakable.

To succeed Mr. Wertheim as president, Charles J. Eisenlohr, head of Otto Eisenlohr & Bros., Inc., of Philadelphia, was unanimously elected. Mr. Eisenlohr was not at the meeting as he is on a vacation in Florida.

Edward Wise, President of the United Cigar Stores Co., was elected Chairman of the Executive Committee, a new office, and George H. Hummell, a Vice-President of the P. Lorillard Co., was elected a Vice-President of the T. M. A. vice Mr. Wise. William Hollingsworth of New York was elected a member of the Board of Directors to fill an existing vacancy.

The question of the T. M. A. convention was then taken up, and after due discussion it was decided again to postpone it. It was the opinion of the entire Board that this is hardly the time to hold conventions, and that instead of spending energy, and time traveling to distant points to hold National conventions and banquets, Americans had better devote themselves actively to the work useful in the prosecution of the war. It was pointed out that traveling under present conditions could hardly be considered a joy, and since the Government is constantly appealing to the public to economize in traveling, it was well to refrain from making any trips unless absolutely necessary.

The meeting was adjourned at 12:30 and the entire board proceeded in a body to the Red Room of Haan's Restaurant, where an elaborate luncheon was served. Then, speaking most earnestly, Secretary Dushkind said:

"About two and a half years ago I called together in this very restaurant about a dozen men, who were interested in the tobacco industry, for the purpose of laying before them what I myself considered but a Utopian idea to form a national tobacco men's organization that should embrace every branch, every faction, every element of the industry, from the tobacco grower to the man behind the counter.

"And to-day, as a result of that little gathering, held in this very place two and one-half years ago, we are assembled here as representatives of the Tobacco Merchants' Association, the greatest and strongest organization of tobacco men in the United States, an organization ranking high among the great national commercial institutions in the country.

"On and about the cornerstone laid here on the occasion of our first gathering, there has since been erected a magnificent structure that is now the pride of the tobacco trade, standing forth as the accredited representative organization of our industry; an organization whose power and whose influence is now well recognized throughout the land; an organization that not only has to its credit the splendid achievements that you are all so well familiar with but that has forever obliterated the lines that had for so many years divided the industry into opposing elements, and cleared up the atmosphere of suspicion and antagonism and personal hostility that existed in our industry and has created in its stead an atmosphere of generosity, of accommodation and of mutual understanding.

"As secretary of the association it has, of course, been my lot to attend to the active management of the organization and to direct its activities and carry out its policies. But the infinitely more important part that had to be performed in connection with the association was not the active management of its affairs or the operation of its organized machinery or the utilization of its concentrated powers, but the very creation and the upbuilding of the association itself. For without the existence of the association even the most pressing needs for organized activity would have necessarily remained dormant and without the power and the influence of a strong organization even the most urgent necessities for united action would have necessarily remained unattended.

"For the glorious success in the formation and in the upbuilding of this association that made it possible for us to do the things that we have done and to attain the achievements that we have attained the full measure of credit is due to no other person that the man who has presided over the association from its very inception, Mr. Jacob Wertheim.

"To form a national organization of tobacco men in this country was indeed a most difficult task. Remembering as we do the disorganized condition of the industry and the spirit of bitterness, antagonism and personal hostility and the feeling of fear, suspicion and apprehension that have for many years pervaded the industry from one end of the land to the other, we must realize that to bring about industrial peace in the tobacco trade and to link together the various factions and different elements of our industry within the common bonds of one organization required the leadership of a man who enjoyed the confidence and could command the respect of all, a man who was absolutely and truly independent, affiliated with no faction and connected with no class, who has had no axes to grind and who could keep severely apart from all movements arising out of factional antagonism or inspired by selfish motives. It was our good fortune to find such man at the very birth of the T. M. A. in the person of Mr. Jacob Wertheim.

"In accepting the stewardship of this organization and in steering it through the dangerous period that all new organizations must pass from the time they emerge from their cradles until they grow into manhood, after he had retired from active business life to devote his time and his energy to philanthropic and charitable activities, Mr. Wetrheim has made a sacrifice and has rendered a public service for which this association and the entire tobacco industry owe him a debt of everlasting gratitude.

"It is only proper, therefore, that we should upon this occasion of his retirement show our appreciation and express our gratefulness for the magnificent service that Mr. Wertheim has rendered in some suitable and lasting fashion.

"To perform that function on behalf of the association, I am fortunate enough to have been assigned the honor of presenting Mr. Wertheim a set of resolutions unanimously adopted by our board on behalf of the Tobacco Merchants' Association, and I ask you, Mr. Wertheim, to accept these resolutions as a token of our high esteem and of our genuine appreciation of the great services that you have rendered us and as a manifestation of our sincerest wishes that you may continue to enjoy your career of public usefulness and public benefaction for many years to come."

Replying to Secretary Dushkind's speech, Mr. Wertheim protested, deprecatingly, in a humorous way, that there seemed to be a disposition to overvalue whatever service he had performed as president of T. M. A. But he appreciated the compliment paid and gratefully indeed would render thanks for the beautiful testimonial.

He was glad that the T. M. A. had developed and prospered during his administration; he felt that every officer and member of the association could look back with pride on the work that had been done, because the things accomplished at least helped to assure benefits to the entire trade now for the future.

"But the chief thought of the T. M. A. just now should be 'How best can we help to win the war?'

"In company with every other trade, civic or social organization in the United States, the T. M. A. constantly should have uppermost a patriotic desire to be of real service.

"This is no time for overconfidence. Now is the psychological moment for every American to do his utmost to aid the country to secure victory.

"Realize what this war means.

"See the consequences of inaction, neglect and delay.

"Seize each opportunity to help, financially and in every other way; not half-heartedly, but to the limit of your ability.

Buy Liberty Bonds, buy War Savings Stamps, buy Thrift Stamps, buy and keep on buying, prove your loyalty, make sacrifices, set an example, teach and encourage others to buy.

"Don't hesitate, don't falter, don't whine about losses, just think what wreckage there will be if the United States don't win in this war.

Mr. Wertheim's patriotic exhortation being tumultuously applauded, O. J. Gude was introduced as the next speaker. Felicitously, he described the appreciated services of the retiring president of the T. M. A.; he spoke of the "land of opportunity," of the land to which we all owe undivided allegiance, and he urged how necessary it was for every American, even the least fortunate, to do his bit toward winning the war.

Acclaiming Mr. Wertheim as a great leader, expressing a desire to be associated in patriotic work, Asa Lemlein, the treasurer of the T. M. A., feelingly referred to a long acquaintance with Mr. Wertheim, dating back to the time he entered the tobacco trade.

"I was a boy then," said Mr. Lemlein, "and though that was long years ago, I am youthful yet in willingness to labor for a good cause."

So soon as the cheering ceased, the meeting adjourned.

Directors of the T. M. A. present at the luncheon were: Charles B. Perkins, president Charles B. Perkins Company, Boston, Mass.; Joseph Simon, president Bennett, Sloan & Co., New York; Arthur M. Eisig, 1st vice-president Metropolitan Tobacco Company, New York; George H. Hummel, vice-president P. Lorillard Company, New York; S. P. Coe, vice-president Acker, Merrall & Condit Company, New York; Julius Lichtenstein, president American Sumatra Tobacco Company, New York; Asa Lemlein, manager E. H. Gato Cigar Company, Key West and New York; Edward Wise, president United Cigar Stores Company, New York; W. H. Winstead, president W. H. Winstead, Inc., Baltimore, Md.; G. P. Waidely, president Union American Cigar Company, Pittsburgh, Pa.; John N. Bagley, president John J. Bagley & Co., Detroit, Mich.; Alfred S. Rossin, of S. Rossin & Sons, New York; A. Bijur, of E. Rosenwald & Bro., New York; Theodore Werner, president T. J. Dunn & Co., New York; M. J. McDonnell, of Yahn & McDonnell, Philadelphia, Pa.; Jacob Wertheim, president; Charles Dushkind, secretary; Amos J. Mace, president International Planters Corp., New York, and Wm. A. Hollingsworth, New York.

President Wertheim's Report

To the Board of Directors of the Tobacco Merchants' Association of the United States:

Gentlemen: Since our last convention, we have passed through a period of far-reaching events, often of dark and sinister aspect, and without parallel in the long history of the tobacco trade in America. We of the tobacco trade have had frequent occasion during the year just ended to give thanks for our foresight in building the Tobacco Merchants' Association of the United States, the first and only national tobacco trade organization in the country, and for our good fortune in having this powerful institution at our service in the present crisis.

With due conservation, not soaring into future possibilities, but speaking solely from the record of the more important accomplishments that I shall hereinafter refer to, I may modestly present to you the Tobacco Merchants' Association as a real national institution, which stands forth as a powerful and accredited representative body of one of the first industries in the land. The tobacco trade is numerically, financially and economically among the greatest industries in the country; it deserves the finest organized representation that can possibly be created for it, and I venture to say that in the Tobacco Merchants' Association of the United States, now known throughout the country as the T. M. A., the tobacco industry has a representation worthy of its magnitude and its importance among American industries.

Before discussing in detail the more notable achievements of our association during the short period of its existence, with your permission, I will summarize some of these accomplishments in terms of their known results:

1. It has changed the atmosphere in the tobacco industry from that of suspicion, antagonism and personal hostility to that of friendly intercourse and mutual co-operation.

2. It has successfully opposed and frustrated all efforts to enact hostile legislation, both federal as well as local, among which may be mentioned:

(a) The passage of the Revenue Act of September, 1916, without imposing any additional taxes on tobacco products as originally contemplated.

(b) The enactment of the Preparedness Revenue law of March, 1917, without the threatened increase in taxes.

(c) The adoption of the tax rates advocated by the T. M. A., instead of the flat increase of 100 per cent, as recommended by the Treasury Department in connection with the War Revenue bill, the difference being about $40,000,000 per annum.

(d) The reduction of the proposed war tax upon the so-called nickel cigars from $3 to $1 per thousand, and the retention of the old tax on stogies and package goods in the same War Revenue bill.

(e) The elimination from the Chamberlain bill of the provision prohibiting the sale of tobacco products at military camps, etc. The serious consequences of such law need hardly be dwelt upon. The prohibition clause found its way into the Military bill and was passed by the Senate almost on the last day of the session. But our opposition to that measure was so strenuous and our arguments so convincing that Senator Chamberlain withdrew that clause at the following session of the Congress.

(f) The defeat of anti-tobacco legislation in a number of States.

3. It has secured a modification of the President's embargo upon the importation of leaf tobacco into the United States, permitting importation of tobacco, except from the Dutch East Indies, under a general license, instead of under individual licenses, procurable only at great cost of time and effort.

4. It has succeeded in removing the restrictions upon the supply of sugar needed in the manufacture of tobaccos.

5. It procured the prompt exemption of cigar, cigarette and tobacco factories from the Fuel Administration order by permitting the operation of factories to work up leaf tobacco already in process.

6. It conducted a gigantic national campaign of propaganda, which resulted in the readjustment of retail prices upon tobacco products all over the country in accordance with the new conditions brought on by the war.

7. To counteract anti-tobacco propaganda:

(a) It made an extensive investigation and campaign to remove the fake tobacco cure menace.

(b) It distributed thousands of pamphlets that it has had printed, demonstrating the harmlessness the use of tobacco products.

(c) It persuaded the Industrial Commission the State of New York to promulgate rules a regulations permitting smoking in factories, whe as previously it was a misdemeanor even to samp a cigar or a cigarette in a factory.

8. It succeeded in effecting a change in the ruli of the Internal Revenue Department holding th 3 for 10c. cigars must be taxed under the $4 rate, that such cigars if packed in bundles are now tax ble under the $3 rate.

9. It prevailed upon railroad companies to pern the use of fibre-board boxes for shipments, and secured other modifications of traffic rules, savi the industry untold amounts of money.

10. It minimized box-stuffing and other fraudule practices, and it has made great progress in stan ardizing the registration of trade-marks and checking infringements and simulations of branc

INDIVIDUAL SERVICE FOR MEMBERS.

The activities of the T. M. A. are by n means limited to the promotion of the gener welfare of the industry as a whole, for th association is, indeed, well equipped to rend our members such individual services as may b reasonably expected from a live commerci institution.

Thus, our Trade Mark Bureau, our Inform tion Bureau and our Traffic Bureau are ke very busy serving our members; furnishing i formation, investigating and registering trac marks, selecting shipping routes, advising a to traffic difficulties, solving technical transpo tation problems, adjusting claims against rai road companies, looking after Internal Revent or custom house matters, and attending to a such matters as properly come within th functions of a trade organization.

Moreover, we make no exceptions in servin our members, whether they be members payin only $10 a year or those contributing $1,000 year or more; both are treated on an equa basis—all are served alike.

INFORMATION BUREAU.

We are particularly proud of the service rendered by our Information Bureau, whic is being constantly called upon not only b tradesmen of our industry, but by public off cials, colleges, authors and writers from a parts of the country, and not infrequently b official representives of foreign governments.

And it is indeed a source of gratification t note from the steady stream of inquiries w are receiving from all sources, that there is a awakening realization of the incalculable valu of our Information Bureau and a due apprecia tion of the reliable and up-to-the-minute dat concerning legislation, taxation, revenue rul ings, trade marks, exports and imports, freigh and transportation, and the many other inter esting matters which it is furnishing promptl and cheerfully.

And in this connection, it may be stated tha our tobacco library, which embraces a mos elaborate collection of books and publications both ancient and new, has already receive favorable comment of the public press.

TRAFFIC BUREAU.

Special attention is called to our Traffi Bureau which cheerfully furnishes our mem bers, at all times, with such advice and in formation as they may require in regard to the many questions that frequently arise in shipping departments, the solution of which requires not only expert knowledge and technical training but a readily available library of tariffs, railway guides and other traffic publications for reference and consultation.

The Traffic Bureau also makes a special feature of handling, adjusting and collecting, for our members, claims against carriers, arising out of transportation matters, which it is needless to say require practical experience and technical knowledge.

WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Je "Get Together Luncheon" of the New York Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade—Harris the Principal Speaker.

The "Get Together Luncheon" given by the lew York Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade, at Jaan's Restaurant, Saturday, was a decided ccess. About 70 men, prominently identi-d with the leaf tobacco trade, were present id unusual interest was manifested. Jos. F. ullman, who presided, made a happy speech, informative statement regarding what could accomplished for the common good by hav-g such meetings.

The chairman announced, with regret, that on. Murray Hurlbut, being detained in Vashington on official business, was unable to tend the meeting and speak concerning the lvantages of a "free port for New York City."

Mr. Cullman, however, had the pleasure of troducing Beverly D. Harris, vice-president the National City Bank of New York, a man ho above all others in the United States, was cognized as an authority on "Trade Accept-nces."

Prefacing his address with the statement that was born in a tobacco patch and had been rought up, so to speak, in an atmosphere of bacco, Mr. Harris expressed gratification for ie privilege of speaking to tobacco men on a bject so important to the country just now, s "Trade Acceptances."

Having finished his speech, Mr. Harris con-ucted a questionnaire concerning the availa-ility and utilization of trade acceptances, as efined by the Federal Reserve Board.

Benno Rosenwald, chairman of the War Sav-ngs Stamp Sales Committee, brought before ie meeting, the present urgency for encour-ging purchases of War Savings Stamps and hrift Stamps.

Charles A. Fox, secretary of the Leaf To-acco Board of Trade, spoke of the coming onvention in New York, and in a humorous eference to "kickers," exhorted greater interest n matters pertaining to co-operation in the rade.

"ONLY ONE IN FIFTY MAKING GOOD."

Only one in every fifty retail dealers, a per-entage accentuated since the war and war taxes egan, is making good these days, according to igures divulged at a meeting of 300 Minnesota igar dealers at the St. Paul Association re-ently.

The meeting, in line with the educational cam-paign begun by the St. Paul Retail Cigar Deal-rs' Association, was presided over by Gene Gates, president of the association.

The small town dealers, with an overhead ex-pense of 21 to 26 per cent., are reaping only a 16 per cent. profit at the most, the business men said. The manufacturers, it was asserted, are 'passing the buck."

A complete price list of all kinds of tobacco to standardize the prices throughout the State is being compiled and probably will be adopted March 1.

ONE OF THE LARGEST OF THE SEASON.

One of the largest tobacco sales of the sea-son took place on the loose leaf floors in Frank-lin, Ky., Friday, when 393,000 pounds was sold on the Simpson County loose leaf floor; 180,000 pounds was sold at an average of $16.50; leaf brought from $16 to $22; lugs from $12 to $20, and trash from $7 to $9. On the Planters' loose leaf floor 110,000 pounds was sold, the average price being $15.49; leaf brought from $14 to $22.50 and lugs from $10 to $16.50. On the Farmers' loose leaf floor 93,000 pounds was sold, the average price being $16.84. Leaf brought from $14.50 to $22 and lugs from $12.50 to $16.

THE DEPARTURE OF A TRAINLOAD OF BULL DURHAM FOR OUR BOYS IN FRANCE

A special train, 30 cars, all loaded to capacity with Bull Durham tobacco for our soldiers in France, rolled out of the freight yards at Durham, N. C., Tuesday afternoon, a week ago. The big trainload, comprising 11,000,000 bags of Bull Durham, represented just half of the shipment the American Tobacco Co. will make each month to U. S. soldiers at the front. Touching each other, placed in a row, 11,000,000 bags of "the makin's of a nation" would extend 900 miles. Or the 30 carloads of tobacco would make a single cigarette lengthy enough to reach around the world.

The departure of the first Bull Durham special train was witnessed by a great crowd. All Durham turned out to show good will toward the boys who are waiting for the tobacco in France. A speaker's stand was erected and patriotic addresses were made by Mayor Newsom and President Foushee of the Chamber of Commerce of Durham. In the ceremonies, the American Tobacco Co. was represented by A. W. Treybal, George Winemiller and W. B. Penn.

STYLE VERSUS SEASICKNESS

Robert E. Lane and Nelson Wasserman made a trip to Havana expecting to have a wonderful time. Lane traveled light, but not Wasserman. In addition to a large collection of pills to ward off seasickness, on which he had been practicing for several days before leaving, Nelson was equipped with nine suits of clothes, thirty shirts, twelve pairs of shoes and ties galore.

The pills, however, refused to work, and Wasserman spent much of his time near Lane telling him just how much he felt like dying. Once he was tossed out of a chair and hurled across the room. The weather was not only rough and unsociable, but the joy of the trip was dulled by the captain's orders against lights of any kind.

Once in Havana they found living conditions somewhat more expensive than in New York. Bread was scarce and Uneeda biscuits cost thirty cents a package. After getting rid of his sea experience, Wasserman managed to have a good time, but he did not get an opportunity to wear more than three of his nine suits. They remained in Havana eleven days and then came back by rail, reaching New York Monday night.

The Entertainment and Dance of the Independent Retail Tobacconists Promises to Be a Great Success.

The independent tobacco dealers of Greater New York, under the auspices of the Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association, will hold their fifth annual ball at Terrace Garden on Sunday evening, February 24. Dancing will begin at 8 o'clock sharp. A ticket, admitting gentleman and lady, costs fifty cents.

To all who love music and dancing this affair promises much, and in the past the Retailers' ball has been well attended by cigar men, their friends and the press. It is scarcely necessary to state that little groups of men will be seen bending over tables, discussing cigars, prices, and business in general.

But the ball, from the viewpoint of the independent retailer, is one of the social events of the year. That it will be more largely attended and even more enjoyable than previous affairs is confidently believed.

In the modern hotel the parlor seems to be a superfluity. In the good old days women seemed to have time to sit around in a hotel parlor, and men were allowed in it if they behaved real nice and took off their hat and properly used the cuspidor. But the parlor has gone, or is going with the ladies' hotel entrance and the old-fashioned bar in the most prominent corner in the hotel. The parlor is now a little reception room near the entrance and the mezzanine on the second floor. The old time parlor has become a Bridal Suite, State Suite, Committee Room, or something of that sort, and brings in real money.—Hotel World.

UTILITY OF OLDER MEN

The Tampa Tribune says: "There was a cry raised some few years ago that a man after he reached forty-five years was on the down grade mentally and physically, and toboganned so fast that by the time he reached sixty years old he should be chloroformed as a mercy to himself and as removing a deterrent to the progress of the world.

"And there were some who believed it. They took their foundation for the belief from some few who had never been good for much even at the supposed prime of the middle thirties, and they pointed to those miserable misfits and unfortunates with gray hair and beard—mostly beards—and declared that Dr. Osler was right.

"Today we have begun to apologize to the man who is above forty, and to take him again into the position he has always held, that of the supremest importance in the nation, in business, and in the domestic affairs of life.

"The war is responsible for bringing us back to our senses. We have not lost any of our appreciation for the high ambition and the impetuousness of youth, or of the in-his-prime man. We glory in the strength and the accomplishment of both; but we have restored the man above forty to his rightful place, that of guiding and moulding and accomplishing the affairs of life.

"This war has taught us much besides how to fight, and how to feed nations. It has taught us that while youthful energy is essential to some things, maturity brings with it a poise and equilibrium and a wisdom which also has its advantages. We have seen thousands of our young business men go, preparing to go, out of the business world into the sphere of warfare, and we are seeing daily their places filled by the elder men who are proving that the business of the country and its affairs will not suffer because again entrusted to the matured men of the time. We are discovering that, taken in the aggregate, the older men are doing more and fully as good work as the younger men whose positions they are perforce taking.

EXPORT LICENSES.

The President issued on February 15 two proclamations which subject to control by license the entire foreign commerce of the United States and no commodities may be exported from this country or imported into this country except under license.

The President heretofore has issued several proclamations controlling certain exports under the provisions of Title VII of the Espionage Act, and one proclamation controlling the importation of certain commodities under the provisions of Section II of the Trading with the Enemy Act. The military situation and the tonnage situation have made increasingly apparent the necessity of instituting a complete and thoroughgoing control of all our exports and imports.

The transportation of our armies to France and the maintenance of a continued flow of the supplies and munitions needed to maintain them in fighting trim require the use of every ton of shipping which can possibly be devoted to these purposes. This demand must be met, and if it becomes necessary to curtail our exports or imports, these are measures which are forced upon us by the critical tonnage situation and the necessity of availing ourselves of every possible means of maintaining our armies in France.

The limitation of exports is necessary also to conserve the products of this country for the use of our own people and the peoples of the nations associated with us in the war; we must dispose of this surplus in such a way as to aid, as far as possible, those countries to the south which have always depended upon us; we must also dispose of our surplus in such a way that Germany and her allies will derive no benefit therefrom; and we must secure for ourselves in return shipping and supplies urgently needed.

The promulgation of these two proclamations does not mean an embargo on exports or a prohibition of imports, but places in the hands of the President the power to regulate, which he will exercise through the War Trade Board and the Treasury Department. This power will be exercised with the single purpose of winning the war, and every effort will be made to avoid unnecessary interference with our foreign trade and to impose upon our exporters and importers no restrictions except those involved in the accomplishment of definite and necessary objects.

As heretofore, licenses for the export or import of coin, bullion, currency, evidences of debt or of ownership of property, and transfers of credit, will be issued by the Treasury Department; licenses for all other exports and imports, including merchandise, bunkers, ships' supplies, etc., will be issued by the War Trade Board.

Sixteen little war stamps
On a cardboard square,
Make a "scrap of paper"
The Kaiser cannot tear.

No doubt has ever been entertained, apparently, at the U. S. Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington as to the entire propriety of allowing the "deduction" of bona fide expenditures for 1917 advertising in figuring an advertiser's obligation for war income and excess profits taxes. The Treasury Department is following, with only a few minor modifications, the policies obtaining heretofore in the collection of Federal income and corporation taxes. These policies have all along recognized in expenditures for advertising a legitimate and consistent element in the cost of doing business.—Printer's Ink.

BATTLE

By Lieut. Robert Nichols.

With a terrible delight
I hear far guns low, like oxen, at the night.
Flames disrupt the sky. The work is begun.
"Action!" My guns crash, flame, rock, and stun
Again and again. Soon the soughing night
Is loud with the clamor and leaps with their light.
The imperative chorus rises sonorous and fell;
My heart glows lighted as by fires of hell,
Sharply I pass the terse orders down:
The guns stun and rock. The hissing rain is blown
Athwart the hurtling shell that shrilling, shrilling goes
Away into the dark to burst, a cloud of rose,
Over their trenches.

"The Superior Utility of Trade Acceptances"

An Address by Beverly D. Harris, Delivered February 16, 1918, Before the New York Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade

This nation is mobilizing all its forces to effectively prosecute the war.

The present is the supreme world-crisis of all time.

Therefore, I invite your close attention to these fundamental facts.

This nation is facing the largest tasks ever assumed by any nation.

The expansion, co-ordination and centralized control of our economic, industrial and financial resources present problems of gigantic magnitude.

This centralized control must necessarily be governmental.

Under these circumstances, the supreme responsibility of the management of the general banking situation rests with the Federal Reserve Board at Washington.

The Federal Reserve Banks, operated as a unit, under the control of the Federal Reserve Board, constitute the Government Bank of the United States.

The banking and credit reserves of the nation have a close relationship to the position and to the operations of the Federal Reserve Banks. In former times, the gold reserves of the nation, which constitute the basis of credit operations, were carried by the individual banks.

Under the Federal Reserve banking system, the banking power of the nation is being co-ordinated and unified. The nation's gold reserves are carried by the Federal Reserve Banks, and their consolidated statements reflect the credit and currency position of the country. The reserves of the member banks are represented primarily by credits on the books of the Federal Reserve Bank. Their secondary reserves consist of paper eligible for rediscount with the Federal Reserve Bank.

It is evident, therefore, that the amount of credit which the banks can extend depends upon the liquidity of their assets, the availability of these assets for rediscount, and the policies of management of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Federal Reserve Banks thus form a great centralized reservoir of available commercial credit, behind which are the government and national resources. This constitutes the greatest reservoir of available credit existing in the world.

The Federal Reserve banking system has been the salvation of this country in this crisis. I may go further and say it is the salvation of the world, for upon it depends the marshalling of our resources, upon the effective administration of which depend the destinies of all mankind.

If our tasks are huge, we may feel reassured by our basic conditions to meet them. We have about one-third of the gold money of the world, absolute control of gold exports, an assured heavy balance of trade in our favor, full employment of labor, inexhaustible raw materials and natural resources to make us practically self-supporting and inestimably greater than those of any other country; agricultural products of an estimated value of nearly twenty billions of dollars annually, an annual income estimated at fifty billions of dollars and the position on a large scale of a creditor nation. Our Federal Reserve Bank position indicates present reserves of approximately $1,750,000,000 gold, or approximately 65½ per cent against circulation, and 62½ per cent against deposits, with a floating gold supply roundly of more than one billion dollars, which could be made available as a further basis of credit. These things combine to make our credit and economic position incomparably stronger than that of any other country.

Therefore, our credit base can be made to support such expansion of credit as may be necessary to the vital needs of the nation. At the same time, further expansion of credit at this time must be along lines determined by the policies of management of the Federal Reserve Board.

Bearing in mind these basic conditions, our immediate problems are those of good methods and good management, making it incumbent upon us all to effectively co-operate with the Federal Reserve Board. We need to bring our credit methods up to the highest efficiency in order to make commercial credit as liquid as possible, cut out lost motion, arrange our whole credit system for effective co-operation with our main credit reservoir through the Federal Reserve Banks, clearing credit against credit, in order to accomplish a maximum of business on a minimum of credit, to the end that legitimate commercial credit may not be curtailed, forcing unnecessary contraction and liquidation. We must bear in mind that through force of circumstances this nation is projected largely into the position of the World's Banker, the World's Work-shop, and a main reliance for food and raw materials, which, combined, will require an almost incalculable volume of credit. It is very apparent that credit must somewhere be curtailed, for the enormous borrowing needs of the Government must first be supplied, taking precedence over everything else. Next in order come the most essential industrial and commercial operations. Considerations of broad public policy will govern the Federal Reserve Board in the administration of banking credit, curtailing as fully as may be necessary credit for non-essential operations. Where and how the line will be drawn is going to depend upon the exigencies of the tremendously complicated situation ahead.

It is inevitable, under present circumstances, that the needs for corporate industrial capital requirements on a large scale must be supplied through centralized control, in which this discrimination will be exercised. If the bill creating the $500,000,000 War Bank becomes a law, with a possible credit expansion of four billion dollars, supported by the Federal Reserve banking system, it may mean an encroachment of great magnitude upon available credit reserves —how great we can only conjecture. It is inevitable also that the banks will have to absorb, from now on, government obligations to an of resources in order to be in position to adeextent which will require the utmost liquidity needs.

Beverly D. Harris, vice-president of the National City Bank of New York
A great authority on the availability and utilization of Trade Acceptances

With this in mind, I ask you, therefore, to concentrate your attention upon these fundaquately provide for legitimate commercial mental facts.

1. An unmatured commercial credit in negotiable form is a valid asset, convertible at once through our present banking machinery into CASH or AVAILABLE CREDIT.

2. Our credit methods should be standardized to automatically produce a type of credit instrument which will represent distinctly actual sales of merchandise going into consumption and the terms of such sales, thus bringing into existence an immense volume of self-liquidating commercial credit instruments of a purely commercial type, which show upon their face exactly what they are, and as such will be the more readily absorbed by the banks and the open market, because of a type in a class by itself—distinctly self-liquidating, of short commercial maturity and acceptable above all others to the Federal Reserve Bank, either from bankers or in open market transactions. As an instrument of this kind, fulfilling all these functions, creating an elastic credit currency, expanding, and contracting automatically, corresponding to the volume of legitimate commercial business, the ideal credit instrument is the commercial "Trade Acceptance." There is no mystery about them—they stand for what they are. This, of all forms of credit, is the one against which there can be the least discrimination.

Bear this large fact firmly in mind: that the Trade Acceptance represents goods that have been actually sold. A plain note may represent borrowing for any purpose, and does not necessarily represent transactions of a self-liquidating character, and may be borrowed against goods that have not or may not be sold, or are unsalable, or against book accounts of an unknown character or for speculation, or for diversion into outside enterprises, or for capital or plant account, or for purposes of an unliquid or of an obscure character.

Large interests have recently been apprehensive of finding themselves handicapped for needed commercial credit, owing to their extensive requirements. They were doubtful of the future, and they sought certain instances to obtain absolute assurance of round amounts on bankers' acceptances for a period of two or three years ahead, through the medium of syndicate operations involving a high rate of interest, making their paper in 90-day periods under guarantee of renewal for the time mentioned. To establish a market for a large volume of such offerings, the underwriters have found it necessary to sound the attitude of the Federal Reserve Board as to the eligibility of such paper for rediscount, and have found it unfavorable for several sound reasons, of which it is only necessary to mention that it is regarded as really long time borrowing, not essentially self-liquidating, and of an inflexible and unscientific character as to rate, which would be a demoralizing element in the banking machinery. The necessity of such methods indicates a shortening of intermediate avenues of credit, which would be available if the paper were eligible for rediscount with the Federal Reserve Bank. Had these borrowers been in a position to negotiate with the same underwriters, on the other hand, to convert into cash the same stated volume of trade acceptances, for the same period of time, a very broad market could be developed for the latter, for reasons which I shall later endeavor to make evident.

Here let me impress upon you the fact that in our open-account system, merchants, in borrowing to carry their credit customers, are usurping the functions of bankers and carrying an unnecessarily heavy load. Is there a means at hand to remedy the situation and transfer the load where it belongs—to the bankers and through them to the Federal Reserve Bank? I think there is—the Trade Acceptance.

Let us suppose that, as a war measure made necessary by the present crisis, the various wholesale merchants associations of the country should "take the bull by the horns" and for that reason alone, utterly ignoring any discussion of the many other sound and excellent reasons which exist and are capable of demonstration, should join together forthwith and announce firmly that for this supreme reason hereafter all sales of goods for the period of the war must be closed on the basis of cash or trade acceptance. Competent legal authority has ruled that such concurrent action is not subject to penalties under the Sherman Law. It can only be effectively done in that way—by combined effort and backbone on the part of the merchants themselves. If you wait for the bankers to do it it will never be done, for it is altogether a matter of selling terms.

If this could be done, what would be the result?

1. Credits arising from the sale of goods would not be locked up until maturity or indefinitely, but would take the form of negotiable credit instruments of the most liquid type, commanding the broadest possible market. Locally, they would be absorbed by banks, the open market, and the Federal Reserve Bank.

2. The banks, the Federal Reserve Banks and the open markets of the whole country would furnish a broader market.

3. They would constitute an ideal means of settlement between the respective Federal Reserve Banks under the management of the Federal Reserve Board, in lieu of settlements through the gold settlement fund on occasions when the general situation requires lightening the load on one district and distributing it among the Federal Reserve Banks in the other districts.

4. It would be an ideal type of instrument for the investment of the funds of country bankers, particularly where the acceptors are merchants of standing scattered over the country, whose home banks would be glad to buy their paper when in available funds, especially so if reinforced by the additional strength of the selling firm on the paper and the knowledge that this double-name paper carries with it prima facie evidence that it represents the sale of goods out of which the debt is to be liquidated, and is not borrowing for operations of an obscure character. The banks holding a trade acceptance knows that it can be immediately converted into cash at the Federal Reserve Bank; also, the purchasing bank is permitted, when in surplus funds, to invest in trade acceptances without reference to its loan limit, whereas it can lend not exceeding its loan limit to any one borrower. Innumerable small banks have surplus funds out of all proportion to their loan limits.

5. Further, the Federal Reserve Banks are permitted to buy trade acceptances in the open market, and have made a preferential rediscount rate on them to member banks in recognition of their desirability. By virtue of this function the Federal Reserve Banks can directly relieve a tense local situation, and more equally distribute the burden of the country's business through the rediscount, under the general management of the Federal Reserve Board, of paper of this character between themselves. An arrangement which might prove practical would be to rediscount with the Federal Reserve Bank of each district the paper of firms in that district. In such times as the present, the country as a whole cannot participate equally in some of the larger financial operations, the burden of which concentrates at the principal centers, particularly New York, which is the country's great security market and the principal center of export and import transactions, as well as of governmental financing and domestic credit operations, intimately concerning the whole country.

There are times and seasons of extreme demands on these centers, as when we are financing the movement of the country's crops abroad or the importation of goods for national consumption, or when securities from other parts of the country or from abroad are sold in our markets and the proceeds drawn against, creating conditions in which it is desirable that the Federal Reserve System should operate, as was intended from its inception, as a unit; that is to say, as a Government Bank, distributing through the medium of the Federal Reserve Board the burden of the nation's business, assigning to each Federal Reserve Bank that portion of the task for which it is best qualified, in order that no legitimate activities may be curtailed.

6. In times of stress, the merchant could use the trade acceptance to advantage both in buying and selling. In fact, the war creates a condition where sound reasons of public policy may exist for so doing, and if all merchants alike give as well as require trade acceptances, the practice would operate to remove apprehension of any impairment of credit on the part of a firm giving a trade acceptance. The expediency of giving trade acceptances is in all cases a matter of individual determination, which would be governed by money tension, restriction of credit, relative interest rates, cash discounts, and similar conditions.

7. Assuming that the selling merchant in a given city, under such conditions finds it expedient, profitable or desirable to give an acceptance in a certain transaction in lieu of cash, to a merchant in another city, the merchant to whom the acceptance is given would ordinarily discount it with his home bank. But if it should happen that money is more plentiful or rates lower in the city of the buying merchant, it might be profitable for the latter to arrange for the discount of the paper at his end and settle in cash with the seller, subject to such a cash discount as may be reasonable and fair under the circumstances. As a war measure, the burden of financing large operations under this system may be distributed over the entire country, relieving the excessive burdens on main centers and placing the entire financial resources of the country effectively behind banking and credit transactions, thus realizing maximum efficiency and a minimum of tied-up capital and fully utilizing the functions of the Federal Reserve Banks, through which such credits would be largely cleared against each other.

When the trade acceptance is paid, there are a debt and a deposit cancelled. There is no inflation, because the acceptances are based on goods going into consumption. Imagine ten men sitting around a table. The second says to the first, "You owe me $10, pay me." Payment is made with a $10 bill. The third says to the second, "You owe me $10, pay me." And the same operation is repeated all round the table. One hundred dollars' worth of debts are cancelled with a $10 bill. The same ablebodied $10 bill can go on indefinitely cancelling debts. Substitute the Federal Reserve credit for the $10 bill; the principle is the same. The main thing is to organize your self-liquidating credits to connect up with the Federal Reserve Banks.

The Federal Reserve Bank System is something on the order of a national clearing house, and the results would be similar in some respects to clearing checks through the clearing houses. Could you imagine the amount of cash which would be necessary to effect the country's daily settlements without clearing house system? The increased efficiency through this standardization of credit might be compared to standardization of models and parts in manufacturing. The employment of the trade acceptance is the "jiu jitsu" of commercial finance.

There will be dire forebodings of overtrading, bad management, too great expansion of iabilities, perhaps kiting, accommodation paper, ınd other objections. As a matter of fact, as in he sale of paper through brokers in the open ıarket, it will be altogether a matter of good ıanagement, scrutiny and information. Credit elationships, in the last analysis, are based ıpon this, knowing with whom you are doing ›usiness and confidence. Under experienced ›bservation, devious methods will not go far. Under this, or any system, the banker's risk is predicated upon the good management, conservatism, financial responsibility and integrity of the borrower. Without these, under any system disaster will follow. No system affords better basic conditions of commercial credit or of observation and scrutiny.

The use of trade acceptances abroad is as old as the hills, and has satisfactorily stood the test of time in banking and open market transactions in the leading European countries where credit standards are on the highest plane.

To the banker, the trade acceptance has the merit of keeping in view the character of credit operations into which his money is going, distribution of the risk, prima facie evidence of liquidity and immediate availability for rediscount.

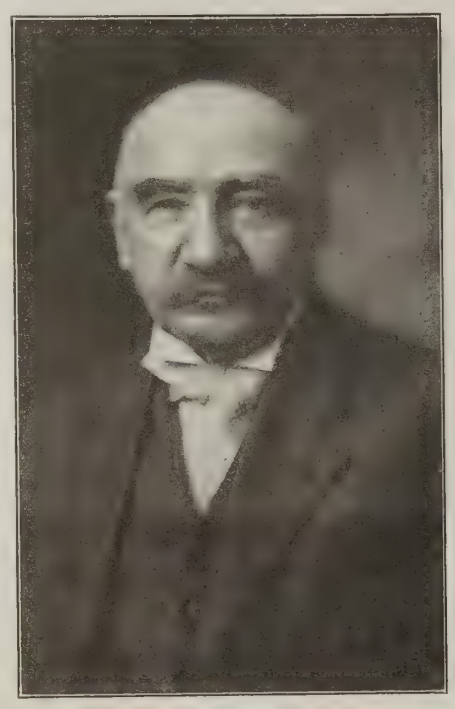
The commerce or banking of a nation cannot proceed on better fundamentals. The trade acceptance and banker's acceptance are ideal units in both domestic and foreign interchanges of credit. The trade acceptance is the last and final accomplishment to bringing our credit and financial machinery to full effectiveness. It is the appointed instrument of credit regeneration, and healthier and more scientific economic and business standards.

Let there be no confusion of thought about this. I am not advocating the abolition of cash payments. The buyer should, by all means, be encouraged to finance himself and pay cash. Our system of cash discounts, with some modifications and adjustments, is probably sound in principle and likely to be continued. Single-named paper will not be driven out of existence. It has its uses. But the great government banks of the world discriminate against plain paper and invariably require two names or more. The foundation of their credit or currency operations is the Commercial Bill of Exchange—bankers acceptances or trade acceptances representing strictly liquid and clearly defined commercial transactions. The thing radically requiring a change is our open-account credit system—expensive, antiquated, unscientific, cumbersome. The adoption of the trade acceptance is primarily a matter of trade and selling terms. It will never come into universal use until selling terms are universally changed to require that an account shall be closed either by cash less cash discount or by trade acceptance.

In times of normal easy money conditions, we are prone to follow the line of least resistance. Radical innovations are unsettling and difficult of accomplishment. It is in a great war emergency like the present, when excessive burdens must be well distributed over a broad area, and limitations are placed upon credit, that we come to a full realization of the true value and efficiency of the trade acceptance, scientifically employed, as a means of opening latent avenues of credit which would otherwise be unavailable, and bringing the entire banking power of the country to the support of the general situation.

EVERY MEMBER HAS A LIBERTY BOND.

There are 8,000 members of Typographical Union No. 6—known as "Big Six"— in the Greater New York district, and according to President Leon H. Rouse, there is not a man of them who does not own a Liberty Bond. The union is already making arrangements to surpass its record in the previous loans, when the drive for the third issue is announced.



AN HONORED VETERAN

A. Winter, of the M. Perez Co., Passes Away—A Just and Upright Man Long in the Tobacco Trade and a Very Successful.

Aged 81, A. Winter, a well-known leaf tobacco merchant and principal owner of the M. Perez Company, passed away, after a brief illness, at his home, 14 Morningside avenue, New York, early Sunday morning.

In many respects Mr. Winter was an unusual man. Despite his years he remained in business, attending to important affairs almost to the last. Naturally industrious, indisposed to waste time on trifles nor caring to hear idle talk, he centered his attention on the business at hand.

Shrewd and discerning, knowing exactly what he was doing always, he proceeded carefully and he achieved more than ordinary success. His word could be depended on, absolutely. His judgment was remarkably good. His appraisals were entirely trustworthy. In the leaf tobacco business, for many years, he occupied an enviable position. He was said to be "the best judge of credits on Water street." He was a hard man to deceive. Maintaining the highest standard of honesty, he had an uncanny knack of quickly detecting a false statement, however camouflaged. Almost instinctively, it seemed, he knew whom to trust.

THE LATE A. WINTER

More than one struggling cigar manufacturer received timely financial aid from A. Winter. On occasions he preferred "an honest man's word" to collateral declared to be "gilt edged."

If "a man in trouble" came to A. Winter with a truthful plea, the shrewd tobacco merchant didn't preach or indulge in pretensions of sympathy. He helped, frequently and generously. But even intimate friends never heard A. Winter speak of acts of charity he performed.

Casual acquaintances might fail to realize how fine a man A. Winter was. But those who knew him better were assured that he had a heart of gold.

He came to New York and entered the leaf tobacco business, in middle life, after he had achieved success as a merchant, beginning as the proprietor of a small store in Nashville, Tennessee.

Born in Westphalia on February 6, 1837, he came to this country when he was 18 years old. Settling in Nashville, he commenced merchandizing in a small way. From the very outset he gained a reputation for reliability. And people liked him. He prospered from the start. While a young man he assisted to establish a Masonic lodge in Nashville. Being held in high respect, he became Worshipful Master of the lodge.

Soon after the lodge was founded, a young lawyer joined. Associated in the work of the lodge, Winter and the youthful attorney became close and enduring friends. The lawyer, later in life known as Judge Dickinson, was made Secretary of War by President Taft.

In the Civil War, Dickinson was a Confederate soldier. Winter was inclined to the Northern side and for a time served in the Union Army. But the two men did not cease to be friends.

"During the late unpleasantness," Nashville, at times, was an unhappy place. Winter had some exciting experiences and perhaps one or two "hair-breadth escapes." But when the war ended, Winter was right there, carefully attending to business and laying the foundation firmly for greater prosperity. He remained in Nashville about 30 years.

A. Winter had a fortune when he came to New York and started the M. Perez Company. The cigar factory of the company then was located on the corner of 19th street and Second avenue.

He had planned that his sons, Maurice and Sydney, should be associated in the tobacco business with him. Maurice Winter, an apt student, took a decided interest in cigar manufacturing. Not content with generalities nor a smattering of knowledge that might enable him to manage a factory successfully, he applied himself not only to the manufacture but also to the culture of tobacco. In Cuba he studied soils and methods. He made himself thoroughly familiar with everything that was done, from preparing the seed bed to packing the cured leaf. In time, Maurice Winter gained enviable recognition as a tobacco expert. Acquiring very desirable plantations in Cuba, he proceeded to grow tobacco must successfully. Incidentally, too, he became a notably reliable tobacco buyer.

The cigar factory of the M. Perez Company, moved to Key West, increased its output and added to its good reputation. The Pinzon brand is known from coast to coast as an excellent clear Havana. The Winters knew how to make fine cigars and they wouldn't be identified with the manufacture of the poor kind.

Sydney Winter was a salesman, a first-class man, a worker and one who won wide popularity with the trade. Ill health, however, caused him to retire. He went to Southern California to live, but failing to obtain the expected benefit, he died some years ago. His death was a sad blow. For the Winters were a closely united family. Mrs. A. Winter, a remarkably intelligent woman, gifted with clear vision, endowed with sound business judgment, a wise counsellor, ever aiding her husband and sons, encouraged unity of purpose and caused the Winter home always to be very happy.

A middle-aged man when he first engaged in the tobacco trade in New York, A. Winter's ambition was to build up a business that would be prosperous and secure, a business that he justly might be proud of, a business that would increase and endure.

How well he could succeed in such an endeavor has been shown.

His investments were conservative and safe.

All that he attempted to do, he did methodically and wisely. He made himself a rich man. But, riches did not corrode his nature nor, to him, did the accumulation of money seem more desirable than having a good name. He was philosophical; he had a fund of quaint humor; when in the mood he would discourse most entertainingly.

No advertisement was attached to his charity. If he aided an unfortunate, he enjoined secrecy. He concealed acts of kindness. Though often

Effect of a "Free Port" for New York

Indicated in Answers Supplied to Questions Propounded by the United States Tariff Commission—Consensus of Opinion, Obtained by the Merchants' Association, Seems to Be That There Is "No Justifiable Reason Why Congress Should Not Grant, Under a Comprehensive Plan, the Right to Establish a Free Zone"—What the Advantages Would Be.

The Merchants' Association of New York has furnished the United States Tariff Commission a report showing the results of an inquiry regarding the probable effect of establishing a Free Zone in the Port of New York.

A list of questions, the scope of which had been outlined by the Tariff Commission, was submitted by the Association, through its Foreign Trade Bureau to its members. A large number of replies were received, and the substance of these has been given to the Commission. The tenor of the replies is shown in the following report. The questions put to the members of the Association are printed in italics:

I

In the event of the establishment of a Free Zone policy, how would merchants handle non-dutiable goods coming into this country? Would they be landed in the Free Zone or elsewhere? Why?

Importers should be allowed to land non-dutiable goods in the Free Zone if they so desire. Naturally, such goods imported for specific purposes would at once be shipped to destination and it would not matter whether they came by vessel which discharged at the Free Zone or by vessel which discharged outside the Free Zone. The Zone could be utilized for storing such goods, pending a positive decision as to final destination. So as not to cumber the Zone with an unlimited quantity of goods to the detriment of other interests, there should be restrictions as to the period during which the goods could be stored in the Zone, a question which could be left to the managers of the Free Zone.

II

What action would be taken by the large passenger-carrying steamship companies with reference to the landing of passengers? Would they be landed in the Free Zone or elsewhere? What reasons would dictate the action taken?

It is the consensus of opinion that if a vessel is primarily a passenger vessel it will dock at whatever point is most satisfactory from the point of view of passenger traffic. If it is primarily a cargo vessel, it will dock at whatever point is most satisfactory from the point of view of handling its cargo. Probably steamship companies largely employed in passenger traffic would find it to their interest to continue the use of their own piers outside the Free Zone. Under proper restrictions it would seem feasible and desirable for cargo vessels carrying passengers to land their passengers in the Free Zone or to land them on tugs in the stream, which would at once leave the Zone, so as to raise no customs question. This again is a matter which could very properly be left to the Zone management.

III

What would be the effect of the establishment of a Free Zone on existing shipping and other facilities for handling commodities in imports and exports? Would the establishment of a Free Zone destroy the usefulness or value of existing facilities? To what extent?

At present few, if any, of the large shipping ports in the country are adequately equipped to care for the volume of foreign and domestic commerce which it is desirable to have them handle. There is, therefore, ample opportunity for the establishment of a Free Zone to care for a part of our increasing trade without in any way injuring the value of existing piers, terminals, warehouses, etc. Probably the establishment of a Free Zone would, in time, be a factor tending to increase the volume of business coming to the port, part of which could not be handled in the Free Zone. The character of use of various port facilities might be modified by the establishment and operation of a Free Zone. Such a readjustment, especially in light of the increasing pressure for port facilities which will probably follow the release of the vessels now employed by and under construction for war uses will continue to increase, and not decrease, the value and usefulness of port facilities.

IV

Should the privilege of establishing Free Zones be granted, is there any danger that too many such Zones will be established for the good of the country, owing to rivalry between the various ports?

The Cigar Store in the most lofty office building in the world

William A. Hollingsworth wanted to have a cigar store in the Woolworth Building on Broadway. He had his eye on the place long before the building was finished, and ere he secured the concession he discovered that three thousand other persons, including owners of chain stores, had coveted the location. Being a persistent individual, however, Hollingsworth won out.

For three years he conducted a cigar stand in the building on the right hand side. Then he shifted his cigar business to the opposite side and turned the old stand over to stationery. Having acquired additional space he set about extending his quarters to the street, the extension giving him two excellent display windows.

No expense has been spared in the decorations and furnishings. Fixtures of fine mahogany have been supplied and set in place by The Bedford Show Case Co., under the direction of Reuter & Kutner.

To the left as you enter the store from the corridor you encounter private boxes, then a large humidor used for storing and exhibiting cigars. The bookkeeping department comes next, and then a window for display purposes. On the right hand side are pipes from the C. E. D. factory, a show case for cigars, flanked by mahogany humidors of all kinds. With the idea of obtaining 100 per cent. service and efficiency, Mr. Hollingsworth has surrounded himself with experienced cigar men who know how to handle business, who will treat customers exactly right always. Henry Hertz is the manager, and the assistants are Thomas E. Miller, who for several years was with Godfrey S. Mahn, Albert Karp and Frank Laurie.

Some of the brands that Mr. Hollingsworth is handling are: Clear Havanas, Aragona, W. A. H., First Consul (Lincoln Bros.), Tuvals (Marcelino Perez & Co.), Invocar, Charles The Great (Salvador Rodriguez), Segars de Luxe (Merriam Segars Inc.), Old King Cole, Van Dykes (M. A. Gunst & Co.), Cuesta Rey & Co., Gato (Gato Cigar Co.), El Genio (Verplanck Bros.), R. A. Bachia & Co., Tademas (Arguellas Lopez & Bro.), Sanchez & Haya, etc. Imported cigars: Coronas, Garcias, Carolinas, Bock, Henry Clays, Edens, Romeo y Julieta, Larranaga, Partagas, Hoyo de Monterey, Punch, etc. Shadegrown wrapped: Principe de Oro, Escutcheon, Monte Cristo (Lincoln Bros.), Prince Hamlet and Mapa de Cuba (Bayuk Bros.), Lucellas (R. Gangemi & Co.), Argentas (L. Golovine), Admiration (S. Fernandez & Co), Garcia Grande (Julius Klorfein), Merchants' Delight (B. Wasserman & Co.), etc. Sumatra Wrapped: Armas de Casa, Boldt's Special, Special (Waldorf-Astoria Segar Co.), Starlight Bros., Blackstone (Waitt & Bond), etc. 8 Cents: Centrosa (Cien Porciento Co.), El Faison (A. Seigel & Sons), etc. 7 Cents: Colonial (A. Hertz), and C. & R. (Cuesta Rey). 6 Cents: Non Plus Ultra, Norwoods and Tampa (A. Seigel & Son), Specials (Hollingsworth's). 5 Cents: Cuban Babies (A. Hertz), La Sultana (Tobacco Corporation of America), and Hollingsworth Specials (A. Hertz). Porto Rican Cigars: Rubiana, Artoco Smokers, Plentius, La Turina and Don Alvar (Metropolitan Tobacco Co.) Cigarettes: All of the popular brands, including Philip Morris, Condax, Strands, Benson & Hedges, Murads, Moguls, Rameses, Milos, Schinasis, etc. Tobaccos: Hollingsworth Drury Lane and W. A. H. and all of the pupular selling brands. Pipes: The famous "Old Pal" of the G. B. D. variety will be featured. An American Air Purifier Machine has been installed in the large humidor. Everything in the line of smokers' articles has been added and nothing has been left undone to make this store one of the very finest in the United States.

Congress should undoubtedly provide proper restrictions to prevent the creation of Free Zones except under conditions which would warrant their existence. With the proper restrictions and regulations, there is no danger of the establishment of too many Zones.

V

If any enabling act be passed by Congress: (a) Should a minimum limit be placed on the volume of commerce after a certain number of preceding years as a condition precedent to the establishment of the Free Zone?

No. It would be difficult to fix an absolute minimum limit which would be universally serviceable, and other deciding factors would probably produce the result desired in a different way.

(b) What physical conditions or facilities, if any, should be required by the act?

The act should provide for reasonable facilities to be furnished in the Zone, such as dry-docks, repair shops, adequate wharfage, including piers, warehouses, etc.

(c) Should there be a statement of the minimum length of waterfront, present and prospective, which must be included in the Free Zone?

It might be well to have some justifiable restrictions as to the waterfront, either on river or harbor, including the proper basins for ships to lie idle in and discharge in lighters, without having to go to piers.

(d) Should there be a statement of the minimum depth of water along such waterfront?

There is no objection to minimum depth of water being stated, but it inevitably follows that any Free Port to be of value must have a sufficient depth of water to enable vessels of the largest capacity to enter readily and lie afloat at all stages of the tide, even when fully loaded.

(e) Should there be a statement as to the minimum or maximum acreage to be included in the land and water area of the Free Zone?

The matter of acreage is important. A Free Zone properly handled should grow in importance, as would any normal enterprise, and it should be started with a proper acreage, with the privilege secured to take over further adjacent acreage as requirements demand. The water acreage of the Free Zone is of the greatest importance, and must be ample beyond question.

(f) Should there be any statement as to minimum or maximum investment which shall be made in the equipment and other facilities of the Free Zone?

The question of investment and the cost of a Free Zone is naturally based upon how ambitious the scheme may be. A large amount of money, undoubtedly, will be required. Once the enterprise is established, additional capital could be obtained as the need for additional facilities become apparent.

(g) Should there be any statement as to the railroad terminals and other connections required to be established in or to the Free Zone?

Because it is self-evident that such are needed, detailed specifications need not be included in the enabling act. Direct railroad terminals are most important, and such connections should be made if possible. If not feasible, spurs or branch connections should be built to take merchandise from the Zone to the main terminals outside.

(h) Should the Government officer having charge of the administration of the act have the option to reject or approve applications for establishment of free zones, or should the act require him to approve applications, on showing that certain conditions precedent have been complied with?

It is immaterial whether Congress itself passes in each case on the allowing of a Zone to be established at any port, or whether such authority be delegated to a Government official or commission, so long as the act allowing Free Zones to be established specifies the basis of foundation on which the grant shall be made.

(i) Should the act authorize manufacturing to be carried on within the limits of the Free Zone?

Yes, manufacturing should be allowed, but under proper restrictions, the details of which might well be left to the authorities having charge of the Zone.

(j) Should the act require standardized construction of docks and warehouses within the Free Zone?

Undoubtedly those who manage the Free Zone would require proper standardizing of docks, warehouses, repair shops, etc., but it would be unwise to have those specified in detail in the act, it being far better to leave it to those who would handle the property.

(k) Should any mention be made as to financing the Free Zone?

Yes. Any method of financing the Zone should be subject to the approval of the Governmental official or commission who has charge of the Free Zones.

It is to be noted throughout the answers to No. V that it has been considered best not to cumber any enabling act that may be passed with numerous requirements which might be embarrassing. The handling of all matters pertaining to the Zone would undoubtedly rest with the commission or person in charge of Free

Juvenile Celebrities Entertain at the Vanderbilt and Aid Smoke Fund

Elizabeth Pauline Gulick, the most photographed child in the country today, has been entertaining the children at the Vanderbilt Hotel every Saturday afternoon for the past month. Her repertoire consists of stories and recitations, and although she is but five years old, the grown folks who bring the kiddies to hear her enjoy Miss Gulick as much as the children do. During a visit to Boston last week the Hearst-Pathé Weekly made several hundred feet of film of her on the Boston Common. Miss Gulick helps her dad with his office smoke fund.

Last Saturday at the Vanderbilt, Miss Gulick had as fellow entertainers, Lillian Emerson, the wonder dancer; Horace Stowe Marshall, son of Walton Marshall, and great great grandson of Chief Justice John Marshall, the first American Emissary to France; George Custer Dewey, grandson of Admiral Dewey, and Genevieve Wells, who by dancing interprets poetry.

The Vanderbilt stages these shows for the benefit of the guests' children and they have proved to be very popular.

Unloading Cargo At San Francisco, 1850

In 1849, Captain Charles Allen Thacher of the ship Pleiadies sailed from San Francisco across the Pacific to Manila to obtain a cargo of supplies. He returned in 1850 with provisions and some luxuries, among them Manila cigars. The voyage netted him a fortune.

Full cargoes of Manila cigars are now bringing fortunes to importers and dealers in the United States.

New York State Capitol District,
February 18, 1918.

"Say," challenged Benny, flirting a hand of lustbane o'er the store floor, then brooming the accumulation of stubs, ashes and bands to the cellar catch-all—"say, didcha roll 'round ter th' Hall last nite, an' spot a quarter an' th' tea-ax on Walt Catnip in that new show of his, Chasin' th' Chippie'?"

"Yeh, I admit it, I did so," nodded Benny. 'An' yer kin take it f'om muh, Walt an' his close fren's, Georgie Bickle an' Bill Howland, don't cut no comedy, neither!"

"Why, Walt jess shows yer what a Nervy Nat puts over wit' a unregistered green-an'-gilt roll, solely an' person'ly conducted by a single-shot silent sleeper, flashed 'casionally ter th' tune of 'Vive le Roi,' said ter be 'Gott Save Der Mark!'

"Anyway, Walt makes a clean get away wit' vera, vera li'l cash, chargin' up his cig'rets an' odder daily desires in a neat-ly bound vest pocket red book, loaned by himself ter th' Cap'n of th' Gong-Gang!

"Yassir, Walt has a system of credits an' debits which as should be 'mediately 'dopted by th' Amalgamated Association of American Accountants! He puts in a season at a swell resort, an' th' only actual cost ter him is som' slight loss of repertashun.

"Even Georgie Bickel, th' sida-Swiss cheese, an' who owns, manages an' operates th' Komon Inn, a hotel wit' a real jazz band, even he som'-how jes' can't sep'rate Walt f'om th' $7 owin' ter Georgie since th' day Dewey did it!

"While Bill Danforth, who's both bank an' broke, simply keeps Walt in Partagas cigars an' king's size Pell Mells, much as he dislikes ter do it! Fac' is, it gits so bad, Missus Bill 'most frets her head off, worryin' how ter satisfy Walt an' still keep th' wolf away f'om th' garage!

"An' Walt, jess ter jolly her, an', at th' same time, direct a li'l' 'tenshun to Missus Bill's fine feathers, which is pruned down th' back ter th' belt, says as how olemonia is pagin' Missus Bill on th' Trail of th' Lonesome Spine!

"All this chatter gits Walt a heap of menshun in th' mawnin pap-pers, an' that's why he kin 'ford to travel wit' Ray Hitchykoo, smokin' better cig'rets an' things than he buys at th' Ten Eyck Hotel Canadayesque!"

He's got 'em! Right there on the counter, there they are! And they're just one more innovation to the cigar stand of the Hotel Ten Eyck.

Pipes! That's what! Some of those briars in the black wood finish, made by Kaufman Brothers & Bondy, New York. So Proprietor Myron J. Canaday, of the House-on-the-Hill, is now prepared to supply just what the smokers desire in addition to his previous enormous line of sincere segars!

And Walter Branche has got 'em, too! No, no, not pipes! But founting pens! That's what they are!

Not satisfied with having more coal than anybody in the Capitol District, Walter has likewise cornered the pen supply!

You see, Walter is some bowler, in addition to holding the record for salesmanship on Hansel & Gretel and R-B cigars. Yes, Walter has captured he-doesn't-know-how-many prizes for being a champ bowler.

So, quite naturally, he's also pretty slick on punch boards. That sinewy arm of his is extremely strong in the punch. Throwing balls at the pins has made it just right for board punching!

And that's why Walter has three fountain pens, lots of pencils, and goodness knows how many other punch board prizes suitable for order writing in the H. & G. book with the name on the cover, "Branche Brothers Cigar Co., New York."

Which reminds jolly Joe McElveney that Walter once overheard a bowling ball say: "For ten pins I'd knock you down!"

He knows! Ask him! In any New York Central R. R. Station you'll find black, brown and yellow gen'men wearing brilliant French red caps. Some of these red caps are not so brilliant, too. In fact, some are smoky. Same, also, with the mind under the cap. Ask Bellinger!

For, you see, Carnation Bellinger hustled down to the Syracuse station in an awful hurry! Wanted to get that 8:25 A. M. for Albany! And he had to skip the egg-poach an' toast to do it!

Then off he went in one of those twenty-ton Pullmans which the Chicago car builders furnish to the 137 railroads which sometimes have 'em! Yes, sir, it was one of the Pullman's 7,400 palace cars, with a name like a new cigar!

And it was supposed to land in Albany some three hours later! That's what the brown-boy in the red-roof said. Surely he was nearly right, for Mister Pease's red guide likewise said the same!

So Bellinger settled down in the pleasant plush of the palace Pullman to pass the placid perspective! Yes, yes, he gave the conductor the mileage; then he slept! He dreamt he was in the factory of the Prince Cigar Co., down there in Trenton, New Jersey. And he looked out of the window in the factory to see a grand review of the entire mobilization of soldiers from the nearby Camp Dix, at Wrightstown! Yea, and every man jack of 'em carried—no, not a gun—but a mammoth Hall of Honor cigar!

Pleasant dreams! And Bellinger yawned, rubbed his eyes, looked at his watch—wow!—4:13 P. M.—eight hours from Syracuse, and just getting in the upper train yard of the Albany station! That red-cap!

From Glens Falls word is passed that Pearsall & Gray filed a bankruptcy petition in the Federal Court at Utica last Thursday. Assets are placed at $43,000. Liabilities at $76,872. One Albany creditor is I. M. Strasser for $122.

"This is a time to fight, not funk," remarked Paul Wessels. "So, to carry out the idea, the General Cigar Co. will advertise Owls, White Owls, and other brand leaders, in 48 newspapers and magazines covering the country. This copy will reach twelve million readers, just at a time, too, when most manufacturers are cancelling advertising contracts."

Such a policy, however, is not the present program of G. W. Van Slyke & Horton, Albany and Kingston. They are renewing painted sign contracts throughout the Capitol District. These spaces will continue to advise smokers to "Get Back of a Peter Schuyler Cigar." And the revised colors of the famous trade-mark and slogan will throw the familiar head out in black, with red and white letters and background.

"I've just come in from Western New York," announced Eddie Englebrecht, "and I tell you my valentine was now and lots of it! Business is good in Buffalo and Rochester, even down to Syracuse and Utica. Cigars are selling well wherever men are employed in munition and supply plants in that section. And, I may say, Fitzpatrick & Draper have no kick comin' on the progress of F. & D. cigars in such territory."

Six days an' a Sunday ago Melachrino Davis had a hunch that this here Hispano-Suiza was a box-title for another competitive cigarette.

Whether it had a cork or straw tip Davis knew not. Neither did he know if it was a Number Four or a Nine. But he was sure of one thing. And that certain-surety was that it didn't originate in the plants of the Tobacco Products Corporation!

But now, in a week, he knows the klever-kid called Spanish Suzie is no cigarette. For he knows it's an engine, the same sort as the English Rolls-Royce, which sounds like a two-ounce breakfast, an' ain't!

Other illusions about these identical engines have been dissipated by the investigation of Mel Davis. For instance, Mel understood these machines were reg'lar soaks! Dissipated, all right, drinking in all the juice they could get!

And now it turns out these engines require no intoxicant, no near-beer. No; all they desire to make 'em go is castoroil!

Lots an' lots of facts an' fancies like that Davis has acquired on the subject of Liberty Motors an' their allied cousins. For he knows now that Professor Langley never dreamed of such a motor as the Liberty! Never in all the world! Because, if he had, the first Langley machine would have stayed right there in the Potomac River, where it fell. While the Smithsonian Institution coulda whistled for the exhibit to place, as a contrast, alongside of even the very first Liberty machine, made in 28 days by over 200 corkin' good draftsmen, completed July 4th, 1917, an' now such an ancient model that the Packard Company, who turned it out, have made 11 better improved styles since!

Yes, Mel Davis has learned a lot about this flyin' game since last week! Even tho he has no rubberoid or leatherette aviator's coat-an'-pants, he knows where to get 'em!

Perhaps the Signal Corps Headquarters didn't know where to obtain a complete outfit itself when war was declared on April 6th, a year since!

Still, with the assistance of Hammondsport and Dayton, Glenn Curtiss and the Wright folk, they've learned! Why, even the Gold Dust Twins are helpin'. Look at the cards in any street car, an' you'll see the niggah nymphs sittin' there in an aeroplane, with the accompanying slogan, "Let the Right Bros. Do It!"

So what could Mel Davis do but pitch in, too? Six hundred an' forty millions of long green dollars are to be spent in the advancement of the air work. And it takes at least 10 men to care for each machine.

Acetone must be secured for the taut wings. Spruce has got to be selected for the frames. Pure Irish linen or some excellent substitute is also necessary for the kite effect. And all this means work; much of it!

Right there, then, you have the reason Melachrino Davis has resigned from Tobacco Products. For he has gone to help his Uncle Sammy put that red, white an' blue-circled star in the great blue sky as the service insignia guarantee that the world is Free!

To help the war fund of the Knights of Columbus, the various stores of the United Cigar Stores Co. all over the Capitol District gave 5 per cent. of their Thursday sales last week to the organization.

"Way stations are my work for the present," said J. H. Hardsworth. "Today I managed to increase the Larus & Brother business in such famous towns as Coeymans and Ravenna, in Albany County. Dealers are buying rather freely of Edgeworth just now because the new 15-cent price at retail will soon be effective on all stock. It should be sold at 15 cents, or two for a quarter in the one and one-half ounce tin, ready rubbed. In the slice form many retailers now obtain 30 cents for the package of the current weight, which agrees with recent lists on the subject."

What are they doing? Are they holding their hands in the air as a token of surrender? Is it a puzzle picture? Is it necessary to find a title for the illustration, like Life's contest for the $800 in prizes?

Else why are the apparent American soldier boys in the half-page newspaper Murad ad., now running, standing by the tank with pleasant smiles, hands raised to the clouds, with the accompanying words, "Men! They Win!"?

But perhaps they are railroad men, signaling the engineer it's all right to proceed at the new 18-cent price. Or to compare them "with any 25-cent cigaret," as the big space requests.

With his Scotch Mist o'ercoat tightly buttoned to the throat, head down, hands thrust in capacious pockets, his long legs in military quickstep, Mike Dunn was observed a day or two ago on the slip-an'-slide of Albany's State street hill, toward the gayer life of Pearl street.

Mike formerly sold plain, ordinary cigarettes. But now he sells the Anargyros Number 25. That is, he urges the high spots in club and hotel circles to buy Egyptian Deities. Then, as a little extry-consideration, perhaps the buyer will put in a carton of Number 25s? He will. And he does. Otherwise, the Iroquois trail from Albany to Buffalo would hardly be covered so thickly with those fancy flat forms so closely resembling Anargyros affinities in the choice-an'-classy cigarette of celebrated charm!

Circulars from the P. Lorillard Co., New York, inform Capitol District jobbers of another advance in Anargyros cigarettes. Under the new schedules former 15-cent brands like Luxuries, Moguls, and Murads will now retail for 18 cents, or two for 35 cents. Trophies, Helmars, and the like, will be 13 cents, or two for 25 cents. An advertising campaign in the newspapers will advise the consumers of the change.

Accepted! "Beg to advise we have accepted your draft of this day and date," etc. Some such formal notice as this came to Chris Bittel the other day as he opened his parcel post.

Since then Chris has been opening dealers' doors in the Capitol District, standing at attenshun, heels clicking, right fore arm, fingers extended at the appropriate 45 angle of degree, in salute, awaiting the recognition of the busy buyer.

So when Chris gets to camp, trying that stunt on the general in command, they'll take 'im for an old trooper, promoting 'im right away to the post of cigarette corporal.

And Chris knows his revised regulations, too! For he knows very well that you can't salute with the left hand any more, even though so close to the boss-officer that you may biff 'im in the eye as you smartly withdraw your strong right arm at considerably less than the prescribed ten paces!

While smoking a Ziry, awaiting his call for a Bernarr MacFadden examination, Chris had a giggle on a mutt who preceded him in the doctor's draft board.

This chappie who came ahead was one of those big, outstanding young men—shoulders, torso and the like—right up to Government specifications!

But, like all good men, he had a fault. Yes, sir; this otherwise perfect person had a serious fault. For he was myopic. You know what that means! Goggles with lenses like the spyglass in the Lick Observatory.

Even at that, with the assistance of all that optical aid, the Sandow couldn't read a single line of the ABC dope over there on the opposite wall!

No, sir! Glasses or no glasses, Sir William Crookes, Goerz, or any other magnifying system, would never make Young Swoboda read again!

So the M.D.'s canned 'im. They told him to put on his clothes an' beat it! With a broad smile, satisfactory evidence of a happy conclusion, the blind athlete made for the door.

And he made long strides for the door, one of several with various labels, which was lettered in type 'bout so large as newspaper lost-an'-found notices, with the welcome-word "Exit."

That was all right. Exit means just about the same as Phineas Barnum's "Egress." And the crowd, expectin' to find 'nother one of Mister Barnum's circus-freaks, would hasten through the "Egress" gate—an' suddenly find themselves on the street!

But that was just the spot the helpless hero hoped to make in a hurry—egress or exit, he didn't care a whoop, so long as he got out of that terrubul draft room!

Still, there's many a slip, as the coin turns in a flip! Here, too, it proved even so! For the Captain-Doc, lookin' after th' retreatin' form of yonder youth, suddenly shouted:

"Hey, you! Come back 'ere! How could you see that there miniature 'exit' on that phony door leadin' to my office? Why didn't you go out th' right door, without the sign? You're a fake, young feller, but we'll take you just th' same for a little trainin'."

"Sight Draft cigars are selling very nicely indeed at the 6-cent figure," stated Salesman Evans. "This is not my territory, as it is in the division of Larry Carroll, of Troy. But, nevertheless, I may say Sight Draft cigars are going in surrounding cities and towns with the same vim they have always had as a nickel offering."

Preliminary meetings of the tobaco growers in the Connecticut Valley have been held recently with the idea of incorporating a concern to market tobacco and buy supplies.

This new scheme will include stockholders who are farmers only. And it will be capitalized for $500,000 under the name of the Connecticut Valley Tobacco Growers.

This plan has been under way for a year or more, and it will ultimately embrace all the planters of the Massachusetts-Connecticut terrain.

"Not a single case of Quaker Oats in the local market," sighed Lord Hiscoe, "and it reminds me of the days, not so long ago, that I sold Royal Nestor cigarettes. Maybe it's this Cossack-fur cap which sells the goods, for there is certainly something about the Bolsheviki effect of the dome which makes people happy to look at it. Hence, while still grinning, they sign the order. But now, with the approaching warmer weather, I'll have to buy another hat that may not be so lucky!"

Now, then! See if this is right: On February 22d, 1732, there was a heap of 'citement in the Colony of Virginia. It was located at last in Westmoreland County, near Bridges Creek.

And Gus, the father, who was out on the plantation som'ere, bossin' a string of niggers gettin' ready to plant a pile of tobacco, came a-hurryin' up to the house to shake mits with son George, who'd just come.

Well, things went on as they should 'round an ole Varginny farm 'till Georgie got to be about six. That was just nigh on to 180 years ago—quite a spell back.

So what they say now in regard to that there peach or cherry tree mayn't be true—it's so long since.

Still, there's the hatchet, with the nick in it! And there ain't no cherry nor grape fruit growin' on th' farm any more. So it really does look as though there certainly was some ground for the story which circulated through the slave-shacks, and eventually to the sportin' editor of the Weekly Wag, that Georgie had accepted Teddy's advice to cut down at least one tree daily, just for his robust health!

All right. But who the deuce would have thought Pa would be so mad about it? By the shade of a Tory, who'd a-thought Pa would pin a feller right down to facts?

Fibs is fibs. Lies is lies. And truth is veracity! So, when a kid gits cotched with a nicked hatchet, a tree stump, an' a big blister under his thumb, what could he do?

Nawthin'. That's exactly what flashed through the film-file of Georgie, son of Gu father of U. S. So he up an' tole th' truth, tl hull truth, an' nothin' but th' truth, s'help m John Adams!

And there you have it, just as George himse told it when he came later, much later, to th Capitol District to see Gen'r'l Schuyler at th Schuyler Mansion, down there on Schuyle street, Albany. They laughed a lot about i sittin' there a-smokin' those Peter Schuyle cigars, an' drinkin' water from th' well!

However, this is his birthday party a-comin And, to patriotically celebrate it, George's di rect descendant, who is none other than Georg Washington Thompson, will go down there o Schuyler street an' cut a notch in the fence merely to commemorate the day an' date!

Then, afterward, when he has the time George Washington Thompson will sit himsel down in a Piedmont County chair, an' write a letter to Liggett & Myers about takin' som steps to make this annual event a dual holiday For it seems to G. W. T. that a big concern lik L. & M. oughta realize that any man who ha an ancestor who never—no, never—framed a falsehood, should have the day off to contem plate the advantages of the situation, unique i the affairs of a cigarette division manager, wh is frequently obliged to justify the commercia intercourse of a large staff of active salesmen!

"With safety matches at $1 the gross," re marked Pete Groot, manager of Pike & Capron Albany, "there'll be no more free boxes at th cigar counter. They'll soon sell for 2 cent the box, instead."

THE SMOKER.

Buyers in Connecticut

Says the Hartford Courant: "The tobacco buyers have been visiting this section of the tobacco belt more frequently since the beginning of the year and several sales have been reported, some of them at very good prices One man is reported to have sold his crop at 45 cents per pound "through," which means that all grades will be taken at that price. There are other signs of revival of business as there are a number of new buyers in the market eager to buy any kind of tobacco direct from the growers within reasonable prices.

"Several of the buyers are reported to be short of tobacco on hand and some of them have very little in their warehouses. They are beginning to be anxious for the future and they do not care to open new accounts but will try to satisfy all the old customers. There is considerable tobacco hanging in the sheds and the growers are anxiously awaiting a warm damp spell of weather so that they can take down the remaining crop. Generally at this season of the year all of the crop is down, but this year the extremely cold weather and the absence of the customary "January thaw" left the crop harvested last fall still hanging in the sheds."

The Federal Food Board has started to check up the hotels and restaurants of New York City that are said to be violating the food rules. Following a conference with J. McE. Bowman, of the Hotel Biltmore, and Thomas E. Green, president of the Hotel Association of New York City, all hotels and restaurants observing the rules will be given a placard to be placed in a conspicuous place. The Greeters of New York have volunteered to patrol all the hotels and restaurants of the city at night and report all violations to the board.

With something more than conscious pride, the Tampa Tribune remarks: "Last year Tampa made nearly a million cigars a day, but the other nine million American smokers had to content themselves with an imitation of the real thing."

A Dozen Facts and Suggestions From a Successful Cigarette Manufacturer to the Progressive Retailer:

1. As the Turkish cigarette has now become one of your principal assets in the retail business, always feature Quality.
2. Be convinced that QUALITY has proved itself in the brand you intend to feature.
3. After you have selected a winning brand, concentrate on that brand, and talk it to your customer.
4. By satisfying your customers with QUALITY, you not only please them, but also hold their trade.
5. Cigarette sales are not "secure business" for the retailer when based only upon the medium of advertising.
6. Every package of MELACHRINO cigarettes sold by you, sells many more for you—gratis.
7. MELACHRINO cigarettes have the acknowledged approval of QUALITY from all experts of Turkish tobacco.
8. MELACHRINO quality will always live—when advertised brands cease to sell.
9. MELACHRINO cigarettes, unlike any other brands, are big sellers in all the markets of the world.
10. Measure your profits by QUALITY—the same as you will measure your volume of cigarette sales by featuring MELACHRINO.
11. Keep your MELACHRINO cigarettes attractively displayed at all times on your shelves and counters and in your windows and watch your cigarette sales grow.
12. All retailers crave high class custom. MELACHRINO cigarettes will bring it to your store.

"Breaking Even" or Better in Philadelphia

Fire on Southeast Corner of Chestnut and Eighth Streets Damages United Cigar Store—Advance Made on Stratford Brand—Mark Kaufman Does Notably Well as Manager of a Schulte Store—Baum Will Distribute Blackstones—Cigar and Tobacco Association Commences to Accomplish Things—H. Magen Begins Business for Himself

PHILADELPHIA, February 18.—Just to break even and let the struggling young smoke seller in on the general feeling of relief now that the Mondays minus coal are with us no more, everybody who smokes in this burg seemed to be buying a double supply on the first day of this week. But in spite of that it can be said on good authority that the aforesaid frozen Mondays still owe money to most of the local dealers. As a matter of fact, they put a severe crimp into the February business records of every big store in the city, not to mention the little fellows. In most instances it is a wallop that cannot be returned, too, but now that it's over everybody's 'appy.

At the same time, if it wasn't for that handy modern institution known as fire insurance Tuesday of last week would have been more of a shock to the profits of the United Cigar Stores Company in this city than any old saleless day. For along comes what the newspapers have figured out was a close personal friend of Bill Hohenzollern, who emps over in Prussia and environs, and starts a free little blaze in the old Times Building at the southwest corner of Eighth and Chestnut streets. Fire begun up in the second or third floor, but bimeby it got a fair young start and spread itself. Down on the first floor is one of the United's busy corners. The loss has not yet been figured out. It was estimated at first at about $16,000, which is quite a lot of iron men. They didn't all go up in smoke, however, virtually all the damage in the first floor being due to the young Niagara eased into the place by the feverish firemen. To make matters exciting for the United clerks who stood across the street and watched the fire, the cute little cupola on the top of the building took a bad list to port and teetered around on one leg as if it was going to give up cupoling and come right down in the street. When it was all over the cupola was still up there, looking like a late morning after, and every bit of the weed in the cigar store on the first floor was oozing with high-pressure water, while some of the stock had been washed out and into the culverts. It will be several weeks before repairs can be completed.

Retailers here who have been shuddering for some time in expectation of having another five spot or thereabouts tacked on to the $41 to $43 they are now surrendering for each thousand of nickel smokes, of the better known brands, are still shuddering. So far none of the manufacturers have come up to scratch on it. But in order to keep up the suspense and, what is more important, to bring up receipts to a more comfortable point, the El Draco Cigar Manufacturing Company, of 104 North Front street, has sent out a notice to jobbers, retailers and other distributors that henceforth and hereafter this firm's well-known "Stratford Havana Cigar" will cost from $69.50 to $85 per thousand, according to size and shape. The Stratford Babies have been moved up to $37.50 in 1/20 packages. And with this notice went this informataion:

"Gentlemen: The increasing cost of Havana tobacco which we use in the manufacture of our Stratford Havana Cigars, and the higher prices for labor, boxes, labels, etc., has compelled us in order to keep up the high standard of excellence to raise prices on different sizes. We enclose the new price list, which includes the excess war tax of $3 per thousand."

We have this week a stirring tale to tell of what can be done by a guy who makes up his mind that he's there with the goods and starts out to prove it. The ambitious young individual we have in mind has just taken over the Schulte stand at 911 Market street, which was given up a little less than a year ago by a local distributing concern running a small string, because they figured the rent was too high to make a cigar store profitable. The Schulte store has been making money, but recently it was determined to try out a new man who had been learning the business since last Thanksgiving at the Eighth and Chestnut street store. In his first week on the job he has been increasing receipts at a daily rate that would make all the big retailers in the country sit up and take notice. The man in the case is Mark Kaufman. He got into the cigar game a few months back at the solicitation of A. Lewis Jacobs, manager of the main Schulte store here.

L. W. Erlichman, formerly district manager for the Schulte stores here, has resigned to accept a position with Pent Brothers Company, manufacturers of Don Digo and other widely known brands. This concern is inaugurating a drive which includes a newspaper advertising campaign. It is going at the thing in the right spirit, being so sure of success that additional men are being put on to handle the increased sales which the firm is confident will result. A successor to Mr. Erlichman has not yet been appointed.

Horace H. Leach, of Leach & Co., who also is president of the Philadelphia Cigar and Tobacco Merchants Association, has been laid up for some time at his home in Baltimore with a severe cold. He has been convalescing in the last few days and is expected at his desk at the main Leach store, Tenth and Chestnut streets, before the end of the week.

In the absence of Mr. Leach, vice-president Charles B. Lloyd presided at the fifth regular meeting of the association, which is now beginning to settle down into its stride and get busy. The Membership Committee reported that it had been on the job and proved it by trotting out T. J. Sullivan, A. T. Schmid, Morris Schoenfeld, L. P. Kimmig, J. L. Abramson, L. W. Erlichman and Sidney Cohen, of E. Regensberg & Sons, as new members. It was decided to print immediately the constitution and by-laws of the club. N. W. Mead reported that the Emblem Committee will be ready at the next session to report on a model for the sign, or trade-mark, or insignia of the association. The Charter Committee is also making progress. Several speakers got into the price situation with both feet, as the man in the street has it, and handed out some straight stuff about the futility of trying to do business on a margin of profit that is too narrow to squeeze through at the present state of the well-known H. C. of L.

Keunstner Brothers, now doing business at 714 Arch street, have leased the property at 812 Arch, and are making extensive alterations preparatory to the opening of a first-class cigar store and billiard room on or about March 1.

Recent visitors to the trade here included: "Chick" Morris of Pendas y Alvarez; Eli L. Missly, of Florin, Pa.; Seymour Bookman, of New York, who was selling Porto Rico leaf; Hi Hammer, Joseph Goldberg, a leaf dealer and packer, of Lancaster, Pa., and Al Falk, of the Falk Tobacco Company.

"Blackstone" cigars will be distributed in the territory hereafter by I. Baum, head of the cigar department of the firm of Reeves, Parvin & Co., 116 South Delaware avenue. The appointment is being announced to the trade by Waitt & Bond, of Boston, makers of this brand.

The "Drag of the Draft" is still playing in the business houses of this city. It is not exactly as unpopular with the employer who loses a good man as it may turn out to be with the Kaiser, but at the same time——. George E. Lewis, of Yahn & McDonnell, will go to Camp Meade to answer the call of Uncle Sam the latter part of this month. M. J. McDonnell, of the same firm, has just returned from a short vacation in Michigan.

The Rivola Cigar Company has removed from 918 Filbert street to new and larger quarters at 932 Buttonwood street. At the new plant the company has greatly enlarged floor space and facilities for increasing its output to meet the growth of business.

John G. Kreher has been named by George Schlegel, lithographer, of New York, to succeed Henry Harrison. Mr. Kreher, formerly handled the eastern Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Washington territory.

Although scores of small manufacturers have been knocked out of the cigar business in the last year by the rising prices of leaf, labor and everything euse, the industry moves on and the demand must be met. Along comes H. Magen resigns from the Pass Cigar Company, and is about to open a combination retail store and factory at the northest corner of 11th and Sansom streets, where he will sell his own lines and the other fellows'.

Chief among the enlargements being made to the store of Dan Ostrow, at Seventh and Chestnut street, is a humidor that Dan says will hold 200,000—count 'em—cigars.

At the annual stockholders' meeting of the Bement & Seitz Co., wholesale grocers in Evansville, Ind., the capital stock of the company was increased to $200,000, this increase being fully paid. The following officers were elected: H. O. Amos, president; W. F. Viehe, vice president; C. W. Fuhrer, secretary; August E. Glister, treasurer. The increase in the capital stock will be used to increase the business and widen the territory covered. At least five more salesmen will be added. The Bement & Seitz Co. had in 1917 the largest and most successful year in the history of its business.

Shifts and Changes Occurring in Chicago

Always There Is "Something Doing" in the Cigar Trade

CHICAGO, February 14.—Clark C. Cutler is no longer connected with the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co. Sales Manager Phil Verplanck in the future will take care of the territory formerly covered by "Cut." Verplanck's many friends in Chicago are glad that he will make his headquarters here. During his stay with the Preferred Havana Tobacco Co., Clark Cutler secured some of the finest accounts in the middle west for his firm and has made a lot of friends in Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Minneapolis. He is about to close for one of the fines clear Havana lines made in Tampa. He will continue to make Chicago his headquarters and will cover a large portion of the United States with his new line.

Chas. Frey who sold the "Arthur Donaldson" cigar passed away this week.

Humbug is a new plug tobacco sold in all the stores of Albert Breitung. It retails for 10 cents a plug.

Reid Murdock & Co., will shortly put on the market the La Rosa Espanola brand of cigars made in Key West; 10 sizes will be carried as a starter. The goods are expected any day and Ernest Mac Kenzie and his crew of "Roi Taner's" will get busy placing them when they get in. This is one of Mac Kenzie's best deals this year.

La Venda londres grandes are now 11 cents with the house of Breitung. A new size called Londres is sold for 10 cents in this well known brand of Havanas.

The 10 for 15 cent cigarettes of Lorillard have advanced $1 per thousand this week and the 10 for 10 cent brand advanced 90 cents per thousand.

Royal Bengal and Telonnettes little cigars have advanced to 18 cents retail and Egyptian Straights 10's to 13 cents and 20's to 25 cents.

Ever seen Ed. Fish? Well, he's the fellow that has been placing Traveller 5 cent cigars with the retail trade. He has secured a lot of accounts for the jobbing house of McNeil & Higgins. He is a hustler and hustles his Maxwell car around securing orders.

Ben Bey cigars in the Corona shape are now retailing for 11 cents. This brand is made by Grommes & Elson.

Jack Planco of Ruy Suarez & Co., New York, visited the trade. Jack is also placing the Strand cigarette of which he is the general representative. Planco cigarros packed 10 in a box now retail for 30 cents. All sizes of Planco and Apropo brands have advanced in price.

The Western Cigar Box Manufacturers Association held their convention at the Auditorium Hotel, February 11, 1918.

Doing the loop was H. L. Morris, the L. Sanchez & Co. representative in this market. Several good dealers carry his brands here.

John Dolan, Jr., son of John J., the owner of Dolan's Segar Shop "blew" in from training quarters at Jacksonville, Florida. He's in the army now with his brother, Clarence. Likes the life and hopes that they will soon go "over there." Looks fine and asked to be remembered by all the boys.

Wm. Krizan for many years located at 42nd and Halsted streets has bought the old established drug store of E. L. Stahl Drug Co., at the corner of Van Buren and Sherman streets, in the loop. He retains his former location but will devote his time to the new store.

The Germer Drug Co., at Lincoln avenue and Wrightwood street suffered a bad loss by fire recently. They are open again for business.

R. H. Wilson, at 400 South Ashland avenue, suffered from a raid of burglars. Goods valued at $100 were taken.

The Illinois Pharmacy, located in the Illinois Hotel, Bloomington, was sold at auction recently. Lee Taylor of Peoria is the new owner. This store is one of the largest in Bloomington and always did a good cigar trade.

Neubauer & Weber are the owners of four good paying retail stores located at 623 and 1202 North Clark street, 800 North State street and 1600 West Madison street, Casa Rosa, a local made cigar, is their leader. They also feature Jose Vila, Mozart, El Roi Tan, Lucius, Rey Oma, and M. Bustillo, in fine sixes. Neuwebs, a 6 cent cigar wrapped in foil packages of 5 is a big seller with this firm. They are made by Heineman Brothers of Baltimore. John Weber of the firm is treasurer of the newly formed Chicago Cigar Dealers Association and a hustling retail cigar man.

Sprague Warner & Co., handle the Maravillas Blunt 6 cent cigar of Pendas & Alvarez. They have it placed around Chicago.

The store of Neubauer & Weber at 1600 West Madison street, was held up and robbed twice last week. Holdups are coming strong these days in the cigar and drug line.

The Merchants Record and Show Window, an illustrated monthly journal for the merchant, manager and advertising man commends itself to every cigar man. It shows many window trims that are of benefit to the cigar and tobacco trade. The February issue just out has two pages featuring several window displays of one of our most prominent chain store owners. The Chicago offices of this publication are at 431 South Dearborn street.

Naturals are now on sale in their new dress, 16 for 25 cents.

Harry "Milo" Adams has connected with Merriam Segars, Inc. Adams is well known here and is sure to line up a bunch of accounts. He will shortly pay Chicago a visit working his way west. Harry will now drop the "Milo" nom de plume and will henceforth be known as Harry "Bull Dog" Adams.

Joseph Banker, representing M. Sacks & Co., New York, called on the trade. Armas Del Casa is carried here by a number of good dealers. Armas Del Casa is a fine Sumatra wrapped Havana filled cigar and comes only in the finer sizes.

Leopold Levy who sells stogies and little cigars, is cleaning up the trade and is figuring on an extended western trip shortly. His Chicago office is 1200 Tribune building, and while here he lives at the Hotel Sherman. Nothing small about Leo. even though he sells "Small Smokes."

An order closing down all "non-essentials" for an indefinite period was issued by the Rockford Fuel Administration Committee on February 9. The order includes churches, schools, clubs, lodges, theatres and billiard halls.

The smoke ban has been placed on the players of the Chicago White Sox, New York Yankees and the Pittsburgh Pirates by the managers of these teams. "Don't smoke during the training trip—cigarettes, cigars or pipes," reads the order just issued.

D. A. Schulte has renewed the lease on the corner store located in the Lombard Hotel, Quincy and Wells street, for a term of ten years at an aggregate term rental of $48,000. The lease includes the cigar privilege of the entire building.

Some people who are worrying about lawlessness in Russia would do well to turn their thoughts to the Chicago bandit problem. Here the "Yeggs" are holding up cigar and drug stores regularly. Hardly a day goes by without some one is "touched."

The Anti-Cigarette League of America held its annual dinner and election Thursday, Lucy Page Gaston, Wm. Francis, Ass't. States attorney Jas. C. O'Brien, Judge John A. Swanson and others, spoke.

Overheard this conversation at Widduck's Cigar, 118 North La Salle street. George Knight, Jr., says, "It's tough when you have to pay 45 cents a pound for beefsteak." Lou Widduck says "Yes, but it's a good deal tougher when you only pay 18."

The creator of "It's a Bear" is out with a new winner, It's called "Sod Busters" good from start to finish, a four for ten cent stogie made by Edwards & Kildow of Alexandria, Ind. Who is the creator? I beg your pardon, it's no other than our old friend Harry Totten. It's a full size cigar shaped stogie packed 100 in a box and it's going to be a big seller.

A member of our cigar fraternity seated just in front of me at the theatre the other evening with some friends. He leaned over during the absence of one in the party and asked, "John, does your friend go out to smoke between acts?" "No," answered John simply, "He comes in to see the play between drinks."

Ice cream parlors and drug stores that operate soda fountains may be called on to contribute license fees to the city treasury. Alderman Krumdick said many of the ice cream parlors need almost as much police supervision as is given saloons, and that they should pay the same license. A sub-committee of the license committee requested the law department to draw up an ordinance fixing a graded license fee for the parlors, based on seating capacity.

The Condax variety package showing sevreal sizes of this well known cigarette with straw tips is shown by many dealers. The outside box is of mahogany. It is one of the handsomest packages to be seen in the cigarette line.

Frank Johnson, vice president of the Havana American Co., paid Chicago a visit recently.

The brands manufactured by Heimann Brothers of Baltimore, have advanced in price. They have fourteen jobbing connections here on their various brands, the largest seller being the Salome, made for Wm. A. Vorhauer & Co.

John King, representing the Havana American Co., has returned to his Chicago office after a most successful selling campaign. He states they are several million cigars oversold on their La Preferencia brand.

Romeo Garcia mild Havana cigars are now on sale in all the loop cigar stores. The Boite Nature 10 in a box selling at $1 is shown in many window displays. While this brand has only been on the Chicago market since March they have already become a popular seller. They are carried in sizes ranging from 5 cents to 3 for a half.

Chapin & Gore have rented their store and office floor at 65 to 67 East Adams street to John Keane for fifteen years from May 1, at a term rental of $250,000. Keane has organized a company with a capital of $2,000,000 for the purpose of operating a chain of lunch rooms throughout the city. John Keane is a "movie" theatre owner and operates several large houses in Chicago. Chapin & Gore will move their offices and salesrooms to one of the upper floors of the building which is owned by the firm at this address.

EL ROI-TAN

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

Cigar Trade in St. Louis Is Recovering Rapidly

Recent Setback Caused Notable Losses—Price Adjustment Not Entirely Satisfactory—Dr. Hoelscher Endeavors to Obtain Co-operation—Gilpin Sells Union Station Privileges to Fred Harvey System—Assessment of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. Increased—A Big Contribution to Knights of Columbus War Fund Given by United Cigar Stores Co.

St. Louis, Mo., February 16.—The retail cigar and tobacco trade of St. Louis has fully recovered from the severe setback it received as a result of the strike of conductors and motormen of the United Railways Company, which completely tied up the street car system of St. Louis and St. Louis County for a period of five days, ending February 8, and business once more is normal, or as normal as possible under war conditions. All lines of retail business suffered greatly, and the production of all factories was cut at least 60 per cent. because of the inability of workers to reach the various plants with any degree of regularity or promptness. As an evidence of what it did to the cigar business, the manager of a chain of six stores said that his sales had fallen off $300 a day during the strike.

All restrictions imposed on business by the Missouri Fuel Administrator have been removed. They were not nearly so strict as those which applied to the eastern half of the United States by the ruling of Dr. Garfield. All stores were ordered at first to close at 7 P. M., an exception being made to drug stores. The latter were permitted to sell cigars, although there was some confusion as to that order. Later the order was modified to permit the opening of all stores until 10 P. M., and more than a week ago, even this restriction was removed. There was very little complaint, the cigar trade, as usual, showing a patriotic spirit.

The retail price situation has not been thoroughly adjusted, although it is in process of adjustment. Jobbers have not hesitated to advance prices when conditions justified it, but the retailers have been backward. A number of retailers are still charging 5 cents for goods that should be sold at 6 cents to net them a fair profit under existing conditions. Many are doing this because they bought heavily before the advances, and are basing their profits on the old prices, rather than what they would have to pay for the goods at present. Some jobbers think that this condition will prevail and that things will not right themselves until all of the old stock has been disposed of. Retailers admit that there is need of co-operation.

Because of embargoes and a general congestion of freight the business of the jobbers has suffered somewhat. The shipment of goods into and out of St. Louis has been unsatisfactory, but some improvement in the situation is expected shortly. Stocks of jobbers on most sizes are very low, and shipments by express are being made inorder to relieve the situation. Dr. William A. Hoelscher, vice-president of the Stickney-Hoelscher Cigar Company, who has been made chairman of the division of cigars and tobacco of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, expects to work to the end of obtaining closer co-operation between members of the wholesale trade in St. Louis and also between the trade and other business interests of the city. Dr. Hoelscher believes that only through such co-operation can the best results be obtained both from the development of St. Louis and its business interests. H. B. Gilley, manager of the St. Louis store of the Parker-Gordon Cigar Company, is vice-chairman of the division, and other members are S. B. Sheldon, of the F. R. Rice Mercantile Cigar Company; John Davis, of Peter Hauptmann Cigar Company, and Charles P. Stanley.

Charles S. Gilpin, who has owned the cigar and tobacco concessions at Union Station since it was built 24 years ago, has disposed of the privilege to the Fred Harvey System, and Howard Knowles, manager of the cigar department of that system, is now in charge. Gilpin has been operating three stands—one in the Midway and two inside the station. He has been very successful, and will retire from business to live on his farm in Florida. Gilpin has always been one of St. Louis' most enterprising dealers, and he was the first here to sell the 6 cent cigar. He has a large acquaintance, especially among travelers, and is extremely popular.

The work of liquidating the business of the T. Wright Cigar Company is now going on, and will require several months. This concern was established in 1866 by T. Wright, long since retired, and has been located during all that time at Third and Olive streets. W. R. Wright has been president of the company. Of their staff, F. A. Barthels has joined the traveling force of the Parker-Gordon Cigar Co.'s St. Louis Office; George E. Jones will go with the Meyer Brothers Drug Company, and Edward Dillon will go with the Moss & Lowenhaupt Cigar Company March 1. The R. B. brand (Rosenthal Brothers) has been taken over by Moss & Lowenhaupt, and Havana Inn (Reish Mfg. Co.) by Brinkman, Meisel & Recker Cigar Company.

J. Lennington has repurchased from Charles Hallenberg the retail store at 210 North Fourth street he sold to Hallenberg. The latter intends to go into the automobile tire business soon.

No successor has as yet been named to Charles P. Taylor, who resigned as manager of the cigar department of the Judge & Dolph drug stores.

Bob Mosher, formerly with Lemp's Brewery, has been added to the city sales force of the Stickney-Hoelscher Cigar Company, making the sixth city man of that concern. Mosher will call on the saloon and cafe trade.

The United Cigar Stores Company have closed their store at the northeast corner of Seventh and Pine streets, and E. R. Schaefer, who had been manager, has been transferred to the store at Seventh and Olive streets, one block north, where R. W. Godfrey is manager.

The Knights of Columbus received 5 per cent. of the sales at the seven United stores in St. Louis and one in East St. Louis, which are under the management of M. H. West.

The State Tax Commission has accepted the recommendation of its special agent that the assessment of the property in St. Louis owned by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company be increased from $4,517,145, the assessment in 1916, to $7,634,006 in 1917. Wholesale increases have been made in all industries, averaging 131 per cent.

La Resta and Kelly's Boquet are being featured this week at the 12 retail stores of the W. A. Stickney Cigar Company, and are having quite a run according to A. V. Henderson, manager of the chain.

George Stocking, representing Marcellino Perez & Co., has been boosting Tuval.

B. Hamberger, representing the Falk Tobacco Company has gone on a two weeks' trip through the South.

R. H. Ellis and C. W. Coe of the Tobacco Products Corporation have been busy here.

A VETERAN CELEBRATES

Captain Albert R. Austin, of Suffield, Conn., Passes His Eightieth Birthday—An Old-Time Cigar Man Who Served in the Civil War.

Capt. Albert R. Austin, well-known Civil War veteran, celebrated his 80th birthday on February 13, at his home in Hastings Hill, near Suffield, Conn. He has lived to see six generations in the Austin family.

He was born in Suffield, February 13, 1838, the son of Thomas H. and Sarah (King) Austin. He was born in a South street tenement house, which is still standing, now owned by Ernest N. Austin. He attended the South street and Hastings Hill Grammar Schools and the Suffield School. While a student there he walked to school and back home, six miles a day. The tuition at that time was $4.50 a term, while to-day it is considerably more. At the age of 17 years he decided to leave school and went to Ravenna, O., where he lived with his uncle, Albert Austin, for two years and went to school. He came back to Suffield in 1856 and went to farming on his father's farm, where he now lives.

In 1860 he again went West, settling in Newark, O., and entered the cigar business. Soon after this the Civil War broke out and after the call for troops a company was organized in Newark, O. He enlisted in C Company, 27th Ohio Infantry, of which one entire company was made up of Newark boys.

Capt. Austin tells with interest his experiences in the war, describing battles in Springfield, Mo.; New Madrid, Mo., and Fort Pillow. He was promoted to a lieutenancy July 19, 1861, and brevet captain later. Austin was mustered out in Mississippi in May, 1865, and immediately returned to Newark, O.

On June 16, 1862, he married Rose Norton, of Newark, O., and remained there in the cigar business until 1870, when he returned to Suffield with his family, and has lived here ever since. His wife died January 7, 1897.

Mr. Austin has five children living, Thomas Homer Austin and Julia Louise Austin of Suffield; Mary Josephine, wife of Bernie Graves, of Longmeadow; Albert J. Austin, of Feeding Hills, and Miss Grace S. Austin, of Springfield. There are also five grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. He also has six brothers and sisters living, Sarah, wife of Edwin Humason, of Suffield; Carrie E., wife of the late Charles Stiles, of Suffield; Charles T. Austin, of Suffield; George D. Austin, of Suffield; Horace B. Austin, of Hartford, and Newton M. Austin, of Mechanicsville, N. Y.

The annual report of the General Cigar Company, Inc., formerly the United Cigar Manufacturing Company, for the year ended December 31, 1917, shows net profits of $1,342,021, compared with $1,313,965 in 1916.

REWARD FOR GOOD WORK

Oscar Boettiger Is Promoted from Spokane to Manager of M. A. Gunst Business in Western Washington and Alaska.

Oscar Boettiger, manager of the M. A. Gunst cigar stores, including the wholesale branch, in Spokane, leaves February 20 for Seattle to make his headquarters, having received the appointment of manager of all of the western Washington territory, including the stores in Seattle, the Camp Lewis business and Alaska business.

The appointment, which comes in the form of a promotion, both in territory and salary, will give Boettiger one of the most important cigar positions in the Northwest. Boettiger has been Spokane manager for two years. He has been in the cigar game for fourteen years, and was formerly in San Francisco. He came to Spokane from Seattle. Besides having charge of the Spokane stores, he managed all of the territory in eastern Washington, northern Idaho and western Montana.

Lou Cheney, of Portland, who has been in charge of the city territory in Portland for M. A. Gunst, is in Spokane, and will take over Boettiger's duties. Boettiger takes Harry Jonas' place in Seattle, Jonas being promoted to manager of the San Francisco branch.

"Under Boettiger's management the Spokane branch has shown a big increase in business, and it was due to his success that the Gunst officials decided to give him the promotion," says the Spokane Chronicle.

Speaking of Egmont H. Arens, who has a store at 17 West 8th street, New York, The Quill says: "We might have forgiven Arens if he had stopped at trying to sell us Russian novels, and Russian poetry, and Russian histories, but now he sells Russian cigarettes."

WERTHEIM'S REPORT

WAR REVENUE ACT.

The passage of the War Revenue Act through the Congress was, as we all remember, tedious and protracted. Times beyond mention there was a seemingly unalterable disposition on the part of the Congressional committees having the measure in charge to inflict a burden aggregating $100,000,000 in additional taxes upon this trade. Apparently realizing the inevitable consequence of such a penalty, which would have automatically cut tobacco production in half the day it took effect, those charged with the duty of meeting an unprecedented war budget heard lengthy representations from our trade.

And it was the voice of the T. M. A. that gave expression to the existing facts and irrefutable conclusions of the entire industry. How this was done was most interesting, illustrating as it does the unbiased and impartial conduct of our association. As our respective committees arrived at war tax schedules which they conceived to be consistent with the grave need of our Government, and an adequate contribution on the part of our industry towards the cost of the war, copies of these recommendations were sent post-haste and broadcast throughout the trade, to big manufacturers and little manufacturers, large distributors and small distributors, members and non-members of the T. M. A., soliciting their support and urging them to advise their respective Senators and Congressmen of their endorsement of our proposed schedule of tax rates.

It is supremely significant that for the first time in our fifty years' existence as a trade, the tobacco men throughout the United States presented a united front before Congress, and for the first time, speaking as one man, the trade secured the adoption of a revenue schedule endorsed by all branches and by all factions of the industry.

PRICE READJUSTMENT.

Our exceedingly cordial and mutually beneficial relation with the trade throughout the country touches very closely to what may fairly be considered the most impressive achievement of the Tobacco Merchants' Association during the year just past. That was the successful conduct by the association of a national movement for the readjustment of prices upon tobacco products made necessary by the war conditions.

In that campaign, which was commenced the middle of July and continued upon a scale that rocked the trade to its farthest foundations for a period of six weeks, over 600,000 pieces of mail matter were sent out, reaching directly and indirectly over 400,000 retail tobacconists throughout the country; twelve hundred leading tradesmen in sixty of the principal cities of the country volunteered to work with the T. M. A. as local committeemen; and not less than eight hundred local organizations of the tobacco and allied trades were brought into active participation in that movement. It was a sweeping, a conclusive and a permanent success.

It is scarcely necessary to attempt to describe what enormous benefit that campaign has brought to the trade. Not one other industry in the country was so sadly, so perilously and so irretrievably riddled by price-cutting as ours. The costs of production in every branch of our business were up to a high elevation; the prices governing the gross income of every one in the trade were apparently down to the lowest level, and on top of these conditions we were called upon to pay $60,000,000 of additional taxes. The success of that campaign probably spelled the salvation of our trade.

OUR CONVENTION.

The success of our first convention held in Washington, D. C., in May, 1916, has aroused such interest in our annual gathering, which was to have been held in the month of May last year, that the entire tobacco industry of the country has been looking forward to that event with pleasurable anticipation and with considerable impatience.

It was, therefore, with sincere regret that, owing to the crisis in our country, our executive committee deemed it advisable to postpone the holding of our annual convention to an indefinite date.

The T. M. A. being a national association, with its membership spread broadcast throughout the country, our conventions must necessarily be attended by representatives from all parts of the land, and hence it is a serious question whether it would be wise to call such a convention at this time under existing conditions, and in face of the extraordinary difficulties that we must now endure in traveling, particularly over long distances. It is respectfully recommended that this matter be given due consideration.

PROMPT ACTION AND EFFICIENT SERVICE.

Passing over, for a moment, the enormous financial economies that our association has effected for the industry and the individual services rendered our members, I believe that the institutional character of the T. M. A. has been abundantly and impressively illustrated. In this organization we have a vast semi-public, semi-industrial utility, the recognized authority of the trade both internally and in its multiplex relations with the Government and with the public.

The alertness with which this finely-balanced mechanism silently watches after the interests of the tobacco industry and the promptness and directness with which it acts, are literally cause for those who may not be intimately acquainted with its work to marvel. The progress of every measure, every influence, the most insignificant inquiry, whether from within the trade or without, is tended most solicitously and with almost unvaryingly beneficial result for our trade.

When leaf tobacco was inadvertently included in the Presidential import embargo, that very day our headquarters were advised, and for hours that afternoon our office was in almost constant communication with Washington by long-distance telephone, with the result that before the trade had any knowledge even of the existence of the embargo our special bulletins were in the hands of the members of this association affected thereby, advising them of the modification of the embargo, dispensing with the requirements to obtain a separate and individual license for each consignment of tobacco.

Similarly, when the sugar embargo was about to reach out to paralyze the production of smoking or chewing tobacco, etc., the T. M. A. was promptly on the job, so to speak, and before the very tobacco manufactures themselves knew of what was about to come all restrictions as to the supply of sugar needed for tobacco had been removed. As still another instance of the immediate response which any member of this association may anticipate in the most perplexing problem, let me cite a case where precise and authentic scientific knowledge was put at the command of an inquirer.

A large cigar manufacturer telegraphed to the T. M. A. to ascertain whether cigars would be harmed by being stored in a warehouse containing large quantities of salt. As that inquiry necessarily called for scientific information, immediate communication was established by us with the Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and the same afternoon a definite reply was telegraphed to the manufacturer. Not one tradesman in ten thousand, I will venture to say, knows what effect sodium chloride will have upon tobacco, but the T. M. A. found out promptly and completely from unimpeachable authority, and so advised its members.

One of the most gratifying illustrations of the timely service of our association was provided in the special Treasury Department order, formally issued February 7, 1918, modifying a former decision to the effect that 3 for 10 cent cigars must be taxed at $4 per thousand by agreeing with the views submitted by the T. M. A., that such cigars if done up in packages or bundles are taxable at $3 per thousand as heretofore. Our representations to that end were made to the Internal Revenue Department last December, and a favorable regulation was granted. On December 24th, the members of this association were advised of this new interpretation of the law. It was not, however, until seven weeks later that the official regulation was first published. Within that period approximately three hundred million cigars of this class were made and $300,000 was thus saved through the prompt action of this association.

In a large number of other instances, through the alert watchfulness of our organization, we have been able to anticipate for the trade both legislative action and administrative decisions affecting its interest. We have fully posted our members concerning new Internal Revenue rulings before the department itself had opportunity (in the great crush of business with which it has been burdened during the war) to notify the district collectors. We have warned the trade in distant states of legislation then pending in their general assemblies, covering tobacco topics, that the tradesmen themselves in those commonwealths had not the slightest inkling of.

MEMBERSHIP AND RESOURCES.

The growth of our institution from the point of numerical and moral support is indeed more than gratifying. From a membership of 312 at our last convention, with nine affiliated associations, the T. M. A. has grown up to an organization of 506 members, with a Retailers' Council of over 1,000 members, and with 17 affiliated associations.

The increase in our income is, however, by no means as pleasing as the growth of the association in point of membership.

The T. M. A. from its very inception has been conducted along democratic lines, and the amount of dues to be paid has been left entirely to the discretion of the individual members. Unfortunately, however, quite a number of our members, apparently appreciating the value of our association, but not realizing the expense of maintaining such an institution, have fixed their dues at a purely nominal amount hardly sufficient to cover the postage on the bulletins, etc., forwarded to them in the course of a year.

While perhaps such a policy might have been justified during the period of "watchful waiting," this has long since past, and we believe that the time has come when we may justly ask our members to contribute substantially to the support and maintenance of our association.

Needless to say, to do the work that we are doing and to be in a position to furnish our members with reliable and up-to-the-minute information in regard to all matters affecting the industry, requires the maintenance of an elaborate and well equipped office with an adequate and proficient staff, and the employment of various agencies in all parts of the country engaged in the gathering and furnishing of information, all of which is indeed costly.

However, step by step our members who have originally subscribed for nominal dues are voluntarily increasing their contributions to more adequate amounts, and there is reason to hope that with the continuation of the splendid services that the T. M. A. is rendering and the due appreciation of this by its members, as well as by the trade in general, adequate financial support will come.

Cuba Produced 370,904,485 Cigars in 1917

No Good Crop News Comes Now from Vuelta Abajo

According to El Tabaco, Cuba's output, during the year 1917, amounted to 370,904,485 cigars, 367,990,385 packs of cigarettes, and 442,625 kilos of picadura, or cut tobacco. As Cuba exported only 111,909,685 cigars, home consumption reached the sum of 258,994,800 cigars. Which shows, so far as volume is concerned, that Havana manufacturers haven't much cause for complaint, but the trouble is, that the cost of production has been, and is, disproportionate to the selling price. There will be a considerable advance, and it is said that several manufacturers say that on all sizes below $60 per thousand, they are actually losing money. Now they are persuaded that it is preferable to produce less, but at a profit, than to have a larger output without any profit. The raise on the higher priced sizes may be small, or not at all, as the pinch comes chiefly on the lower priced sizes. One manufacturer said that he had orders pending, from the United States, for several hundred thousand cigars, which he could not or would not execute, as the filling of such orders would mean an actual loss. If the order called for an assortment of sufficient regalia shapes, he would be willing to include some cheaper sizes. In other words, he wants orders balanced so he will not lose money.

Because of bad crop news from Vuelta Abajo, the leaf market has become more active. Some of the Tampa manufacturers have added to their holdings of Vuelta Abajo fillers, and large factories in Havana have not stopped buying yet, so that the stocks for sale are further reduced, and may disappear before the new crop can reach our market. Prices are very firm, and there isn't much chance for the buyer to get a reduction on the asking figures. "One has to accept the offered prices, or not buy at all, as the dealers still hold the trump card."

Sales totaled about 6,000 bales, divided into 5,000 bales of Vuelta and 1,000 bales of Remedios.

Buyers were: Americans, 3,000 bales and local manufacturers, the same quantity.

Receipts of leaf tobacco from the country.

	From January 25 to February 7, 1918.	Since January 1, 1918.
Vuelta Abajo	3,363 bales	8,113 bales
Semi Vuelta	311 "	649 "
Partido	23 "	23 "
Remedios	668 "	1,452 "
Oriente	6 "	6 "
Total	4,371 "	10,243 "

Exports per S/S Mexico on February 2, were 328 cases, containing 1,395,079 cigars, and which were consigned to the following countries, viz.: To United States, 623,500; to Great Britain, 531,985; to Portugal, 72,600; to British Africa, 50,584; to Canada, 38,250; to Argentine, 34,000; to Australia, 30,000; to Brazil, 11,660; and to Venezuela, 2,500 cigars.

Exports of leaf tobacco, during the week ending February 4, 1918, totaled 6,506 bales, which were distributed to the following countries, viz.: to ports of the United States, 4,363; to Canada, 161; to Portugal, 782; to Honduras, 2; to Argentina, 342; to Chile, 831; and to Australia, 25 bales.

There is little news about the crop to report at this time, as we are still sighing for rain in the Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta districts. In the Partido and in Santa Clara province, they had light rains in some places. Enough of the Remedios growth has been cut already to equal the quantity harvested last year.

Among leaf buyers arriving this week were: Allie Sylvester, the President of the American Cigar Company, and the Vice-President of the Henry Clay & Bock & Co., Ltd.; Joseph Holzman, of Joseph Holzman; and Antonio Gutierrez, of the Gene-Val Cigar Company, all of New York. There also arrived José M. Diaz, the President of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Company, and Louis Avenel, the representative for Great Britain, of the Por Larrañaga Co.

Manuel Corral purchased, while here, 900 bales of Vuelta Abajo, for Corral, Wodiska & Co., of Tampa.

Bernabé Diaz bought for F. Lozano, Son & Co., 867 bales of Vuelta Abajo fillers, during his stay here.

José Escalante & Co., added some 300 bales of Vuelta Abajo to their holdings.

Romeo y Julieta purchased 1,500 bales of Vuelta Abajo, choice vegas, and for which high prices were paid. This factory is turning out 85,000 cigars daily, and which requires no further comment, as it speaks for itself.

Partagas added 1,264 bales of Vuelta Abajo, during the past week, to their stocks of leaf. This factory is working strenuously. Robert E. Lane expects to leave for New York on Saturday next.

Punch has also acquired several choice vegas of Vuelta Abajo lately, and is working in good shape.

A Drop in Importations of Luxuries

The people of the United States have indicated their willingness to economize by a marked reduction in their importation of luxuries. A compilation by the National City Bank of New York shows that in many articles of luxury imported, the 1917 imports are from 20 per cent. to 50 per cent. below those of the earlier years of the war, despite the fact that in most cases prices per unit of quantity are higher than in earlier years.

The list of luxuries which the people of the country have formerly imported is a long one and includes many articles of food, clothing and personal adornment, and the 1917 economies in most of these lines are quite apparent on a comparison of the figures of imports of the year 1917 with those of 1916, 1915 and even 1914. While in a few instances, the fall-off may be due to the lack of transportation or the reduction of available supplies in the countries at war, the reduction in quantities imported has been so general as to indicate a growing disposition to minimize unnecessary expenditures in the classes of articles of this character brought into the country.

Diamonds, pearls, laces, plushes, ribbons, hats, bonnets, feathers, jewelry, glove leather, fruits, olives, olive oil, cheese, macaroni, cream and confectionery show a marked fall-off in 1917. Precious stones show a reduction of 8 million dollars when compared with the importations of last year, pearls alone over 6 million dollars reduction, diamonds, cut but not set, a reduction of about 4 millions. Art works show a fall of about 3 million dollars when compared with 1916 and approximately 4 millions when compared with 1914. Cotton laces imported in 1917 are nearly 7 million dollars below those of 1916 and 14 million dollars below those of 1914. In silk laces, the value of imports of 1917 is but little more than one-half that of 1916, silk plushes less than one-half that of 1914, and silk ribbons in 1917 only about 10 per cent. of the 1915 imports. Hats and bonnets imported in 1917 are slightly less in value than in earlier years, despite the higher prices, and this is true of jewelry, platinum, musical instruments, automobiles, glove leather, tanned goatskins and many other articles of this class. Feathers imported in 1917 amount to about 3 million dollars in value against over 5 millions in 1915 and more than 6 millions in 1914, while in ostrich feathers alone, the imports of 1917 were less than a half million dollars against 2½ millions in 1915. Dressed furs and manufactures of fur show a decline, but undressed fur an increase.

In foods of the character usually considered luxuries, the fall-off is distinctly marked. Cheese, chiefly brought from France, Italy and Switzerland shows for 1917 but 6 million pounds against 28 millions in 1916, 39 millions in 1915 and 55 millions in 1914. Cream imported in 1917 chiefly from Canada was but 770,000 gallons against 1,321,000 gallons in 1915 and 2,230,000 in 1914. Olives chiefly from Italy and Spain are in 1917 only 4½ million gallons against over 6½ millions in 1915, while olive oil shows a fall of over a million dollars in value in the 1917 imports when compared with 1915. Macaroni, of which the foreign product may perhaps be classed as a luxury in view of the fact that the United States now turns out twelve million dollars worth per annum, shows an importation in 1917 of but 1 million pounds against over 16 millions in 1916 and more than 33 millions in 1915. Malt liquors imported in 1917 were but 1½ million gallons against 2½ millions in 1916 and over 5½ millions in 1914. Gin imports in 1917 were only 230,000 gallons against 536,000 in 1916 and nearly 1 million in 1914. Champagne importetd in 1917 was 167,000 dozen quarts against 239,000 dozen in 1916, and mineral waters in 1917 214,000 dozen quarts against 574,000 dozen in 1916 and 951,000 dozen in 1914. Even the gum chewers seem to have yielded to the general impulse for a reduction of expenditures, since the quantity of chicle, the chief constituent of chewing gum shows a fall-off of about 1 million pounds in 1917 when compared with 1916 and over two million pounds when compared with 1915.

administrations as your president, regretfully but unavoidably. After determining some years age never to resume my long-time activity in the tobacco trade, I eventually saw the merit of this great undertaking in which we all have been so unselfishly engaged, to give the tobacco industry a national, living, active organization for all the future, and I was prevailed upon to become its president.

My terms in office have been a source of enduring pride and pleasure; I have come to know all who were once my competitors as man to man; and so each of us has known and learned to respect and admire his fellow members. I resign the presidency of the Tobacco Merchants' Association of the United States in full confidence that you cannot do more and will not do less than accord my successor that full measure of loyalty and complete confidence it has been my pleasure to receive.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Tampa Cigar Shipments Have been Badly Delayed

Freight Embargoes the Cause of Many Complaints—Tampa Cuba Cigar Co. Holds Election—Berger Entertains—"Jim" Burns Ill—Jerome Regensburg Busy Accelerating the Output of Admirations — Garrett H. Smith Meets Success.

TAMPA, February 16.—Local manufacturers have been considerably handicapped since January 1 on account of the transportation embargo effective in the district east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, which prevents the making of shipments from Tampa to points affected other than by the regular package car to Chicago and by water to New York and other eastern points. Many complaints have been made on the subject, but these have been of no avail, and the manufacturers are accepting the conditions as patriots. Early relief is hoped and prayed for, however.

The manufacturers are also embarrassed by the necessity of transferring all freight to and from Havana at Key West. This practice has been in vogue since the P. & O. steamship Olivette went down off the Cuban coast, and as the company is unable, owing to the war-created demand for vessels, to secure a substitute for the Olivette, it is not known when relief can be given. The vessels now in use by the P. & O. Line are the Mascotte and Miami.

At the annual meeting of the Tampa-Cuba Cigar Company, held yesterday, the following officers were elected: J. A. Treasurer, Salt Lake City, president; Ira B. Clark, Nashville, first vice-president; D. G. Wise, Atlanta, second vice-president; Charles H. Huhn, Minneapolis, chairman executive committee; Ernest Berger, Tampa, secretary, treasurer and general manager. Mr. Berger entertained the visiting directors and stockholders at dinner at the Pasaje.

Jerome Regensberg, of E. Regensberg & Sons, has returned from a long stay in New York, and is now directing "speeding up" tactics at the factory.

Jose Escalante, head of the old-established Escalante factory, has returned from a trip to Cuba.

Manuel Corrall, of the Corrall-Wodiska Company, returns Sunday from a trip to Havana.

Garrett H. Smith, of the Havana Lithographic Company, which is doing fine work, is calling on the local trade.

John Bain, Jr., editor of Tobacco Leaf, who was in the city recently, was called to Miami on account of the illness of his wife.

Jim Burns, for years a traveling salesman for F. Lozano & Co., but more recently a manufacturer "on his own hook," is ill in his apartments at the Elk's Club.

WHY HARRIS RESIGNS

Chairman of Federal Trade Commission Would Be a U. S. Senator from Georgia, Succeeding Hardwick.

WASHINGTON, February 19.—William J. Harris, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, has tendered his resignation to President Wilson to take effect May 31. It is Mr. Harris's intention to run for the Senate in Georgia against Senator Hardwick, and he is resigning from the Commission for that purpose.

Chairman Harris has been connected with the Trade Commission ever since its organization about three years ago. This will leave Commissioner Joseph Davies the only one of the original commissioners appointed when the commission was organized. All of the other members of the Commission are second appointments made necessary because of deaths and resignations.

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., February 15.—The delayed January thaw has been with us the greater portion of the week, commencing with a thunder storm and continuing with mild temperature that brought the hanging tobacco into very fair case. Almost any time during the week growers might take down from the sheds at their leisure and as much as they pleased. The report comes to us that the uncured and shed frozen leaf is now pretty well dried out, and the percentage of wet butts in the balance of the crop will be comparatively small. Farmers can now proceed with their stripping, and as soon as the snow banks recede deliveries will become more general. Receiving is going on at packing points moderately, but the difficulty in getting cars at interior stations is still holding back the shipments for warehouse handling. This situation, however, is improving, for the railroads are gradually pulling themselves out of the congestion.

The market for old leaf is barren of news due largely to the scarcity of stock in packers' hands.

Scarcely any shipments out of storage are yet permitted to eastern points, though plenty of orders for factory shipments are still unfilled.—Edgerton Reporter.

M. A. Gunst Branch Obtains Much Desired Corner

Magnificent New Store to Be Located on the Old Richelieu Site at the Junction of Market, Geary and Kearney Streets, San Francisco—Price Adjustment Proceeds Harmoniously—The Retailers Are Actuated by a More Friendly Feeling—Mark Snover Has an Automobile Accident in the Yosemite Valley—A King City Combination

San Francisco, February 13.—Harmony now pervades the retail cigar business of San Francisco, and the dealers, big and little, are acting together for the best interests of the trade. The chain stores were the first to harmonize their differences growing out of the increased price of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco. Now the smaller individual dealers are falling into line, and the new prices are pretty well established all over town. Of course there are a few dealers who had stocked up on cigars before the increased prices were put into effect who are insisting on their rights to sell at the old figure so long as their stocks last. But they are growing fewer every day and in the aggregate their influence is no longer felt. This has brought about a very friendly feeling, and the consumer, who is becoming accustomed to paying his extra cent or two, feels the optimism that peace instead of strife engenders. This feature of the situation is psychological, perhaps, but notwithstanding that fact and in all likelihood because of it, better feeling among the dealers has brought about a better feeling among the customers. Certain brands of cigars, especially those put up in small packages, and certain brands of tobacco have just been advanced in price somewhat by the dealers, and it is safe to say that the latter will not have to make any more advances now until the manufacturers take another step. In that sense the trade of San Francisco has at last become adjusted to the new price lists, and as said above all is harmony.

It is reported that the M. A. Gunst Company has leased the site back of its small stand at the corner of Market, Geary and Kearney streets. This is one of the most important corners in the city, and has been regarded as such for over thirty years. Gunst has had a small open stand there almost as long as he has been in business. Back of him was located the Richelieu saloon, one of the most popular in the city. A few months ago the proprietor of the Richelieu got into trouble with the Federal authorities on the charge of selling liquor to soldiers, and was compelled to close his doors. He fought the case as best he could, but his business was ruined and the saloon was not reopened. Report now has it that Gunst has secured the lease of the whole place and will put in the most pretentious cigar store that San Francisco has yet seen. The window display, it is said, will be unique and attractive and the interior luxurious.

M. Bercovich has recently received a considerable shipment of Mi Consuelo cigar, one of his late acquisitions, and reports a splendid sale on the same.

Emil Judell of H. L. Judell & Co., is in Vallejo visiting the navy yard authorities. The Judell company has had some very fine orders from the army, navy and quartermaster's department.

Bouquet Cohn is making a fine window display of the Fighting Bob, the first extensive display of the kind that has been made with this cigar.

H. L. Judell, who served as one of the executive committee of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, has just received an invitation to attend a banquet given by C. C. Moore, the president of the Exposition, in celebration of "Three Years After" the great fair's opening.

Mark Snover, who for a great many years traveled out of Fresno for Samuels and about a year ago suffered a very serious accident in Yosemite Valley, when his automobile turned over and rolled down a steep grade, is at last out of the hospital. He was a San Francisco visitor this week, and while he still walks with a cane he says he will be back in the game again in another month or so.

Ehrman Bros. & Co. announce that they have just received a large shipment of Optimo cigars and what was proving to be an embarrassing shortage has been relieved. They are still short on Roi Tans, but the goods have been shipped and are expectetd any time now.

The Isabella is proving one of the most popular Manila cigars in this market and is going strong in the section east of here, according to Ehrman Bros., who are acting as distributors.

V. Warren, of Kemmit, near Los Angeles, was visiting the trade in San Francisco this week.

The retail department of the M. A. Gunst Branch on California and Front, has been removed from the reconstructetd headquarters of the company to California and Montgomery streets.

They do things in a peculiar way in Southern California, at least from the San Franciscan's viewpoint. A dispatch recently received from King City says that the Star Candy Kitchen found that it was making too little Benson, Atlantic City; assistant secretary, Mary A. Gleason, Newark; financial secretary, Isaac N. Stetser, Woodstown; treasurer, Frederick C. Hall, Montclair.

E. M. Freeman is rounding up business in Buffalo, while Sidney J. Freeman looks after things in the New York office. Freight embargoes are giving Sidney J. something to worry about. Two carloads of goods that had been shipped from Manila and should have arrived in New York about January 10 went astray, and after a great deal of tracing were discovered in St. Louis. Then they were forwarded by fast freight, but as yet they have not reached New York. Mr. Freeman has hopes of seeing them some time before the 4th of July.

Five husky men entered a cigar store at Flatbush and Church avenues, Brooklyn, at midnight, Saturday, as Fred Schutts, the clerk, was counting up his day's receipts. Two of the men flourished revolvers while a third went to the cash register. Schutts was carefully bound and gagged with a towel, then secreted behind the counter. The men took $230 from the cash register. The clerk worked himself free later and called the police. He was so frightened that he could give no description of the thieves.

Says the New Haven Union: "At the headquarters of the New Haven Cigarmakers' union the 350 strikers who still remain in this city, received their allotment of $9 a week in benefits. There has been received the sum of $1,600 this week from subordinate branches of the order, in addition of the regular sum sent out from Chicago by the national headquarters. About 200 cigarmakers have gone away and secured work elsewhere, it is reported. It is also stated that 24 local shops are now in operation. Among subordinate unions that have sent financial aid this week are New York, Bridgeport, Boston and Manchester."

The Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. in the year ended December 31 last, earned profits equal to $28 a share, compared with $25 a share in 1916. After allowing for charges of all kinds, together with dividends on the common and preferred shares paid during the year, the company showed a surplus for the twelve months of $2,722,662, against $2,-106,031 the previous year. The huge expansion in the cost of inventories in the hands of tobacco companies is shown by an increase of more than $10,000,000 in this item. On December 31 last the company had cash of $7,261,824, compared with $2,923,933 at the close of 1916.

Max Rosenthal, aged 82 years and six months, veteran cigar manufacturer, and a resident of Fort Wayne, Ind., for more than a half century, died Friday afternoon at his home, 424 West Main street.

EFFECT OF A FREE PORT

Zones, and it would be wise not to restrict them, but to leave to their discretion many important considerations.

VI

Should private persons or corporations be permitted to erect warehouses or other structures within the Free Zone according to their own plans? Should such plans be first approved by the Free Zone authorities, if such private operations are allowed? Should such private parties be required to use the facilities provided by the Zone itself?

Under proper restrictions, private persons or corporations might justifiably be permitted to erect warehouses or other structures within the Zone, but undoubtedly the plans and the location of these would have to be established by the Zone authorities, and no land in fee should be held by outsiders. Only lease-hold rights should be granted, with the authority always resting with the Zone management to take over any such plants at valuation of the buildings, with reasonable notice, and grants of this character should only be allowed after the fact was thoroughly established that the facilities of the Zone were not sufficient to allow the required space to be hired from the management. Private parties or corporations should not be allowed to monopolize any of the water-front of the Free Zone.

VII

Should warehouses or docks erected by Free Zone authorities be leased to private parties? If not, how should their use be provided for?

Yes, warehouses in part or whole should undoubtedly be leased as required by private parties, proper care being first taken, however, to see that there was always ample facility in the Zone for outside parties who might apply for space. The leasing of docks in the Zone should only be for restricted periods and immediate requirements.

VIII

Should the construction and operation of the Free Zone be financed (a) by local communities alone? (b) by local communities, with assistance of Federal, State or Municipal governments? If so, how much and in what proportion?

There is no fundamental principle involved that should prevent the participation of Federal, State or local funds in the financing of a Free Zone.

IX

How much delay in the loading and unloading of vessels, savings in demurrage charges, etc., would be eliminated by the establishment of a Free Zone?

It is impossible to answer this question with any definiteness. Undoubtedly, there should be considerable time saved in loading and unloading vessels. The quick handling of cargoes must be one of the essential features of a Free Zone, and beyond doubt vessels would benefit greatly in this particular.

X

How much delay in handling cargo would be eliminated?

It is impossible to answer this question with any definiteness.

XI

If possible, ascertain from masters, or others familiar with Customs practices, statements as to delays caused by present Customs regulations and laws.

XII

How much of such delay would be eliminated by the establishment of a Free Zone?

XIII

What reforms could be made in the requirements of the Customs regulations which would eliminate unnecessary red tape and facilitate the handling of goods: (a) from ship to dock, (b) on the dock, (c) from dock to warehouse, (d) in warehouse, (e) from dock to consignee?

XIV

What is the cause of delay in obtaining drawbacks claimed on re-exported articles? How could this delay be eliminated?

Satisfactory answers to these questions could not be obtained. There is apparently much difference of opinion among persons in touch with these matters, as to the extent and causes of delay under present procedure, so that the amount of delay which would be eliminated by the operation of a Free Zone cannot be estimated.

XV

How much statistical information as to exports and imports is desirable? Would the securing of such information delay in any way the handling of goods through the Free Zone? Make suggestions as to how such data would best be obtained with least interference with business and at least expense.

Very little change from the present method and regulations would be necessary in order to give all data needed. The nominal value of goods entering the Zone should be recorded with the class of goods and the trade. If they are re-exported without change, a simple record would then be sufficient. If they are mixed or handled in any other way, a statement should then be filed by the exporter. If brought within the Customs jurisdiction of the United States, the usual entries would, of course, be made.

The management of the Zone should be under a commission, and, no matter how the money be the Tidy Sum Uncle Sam Will Need During the Coming Year—According to Treasury Estimates.

EIGHTEEN BILLIONS

WASHINGTON, February 18.—The greatest nancial drive in this country's history is under ay today to obtain over $18,000,000,000 for overnment expenses this year.

According to the estimates of the Treasury epartment the United States will spend over 53,000,000 every day during 1918, the greatest ortion to be spent to run the war.

It is expected that the third Liberty Loan will et the Government far above $4,000,000,000.

Internal revenue returns for 1918 will show 3,400,000.000 as compared with the $809,393,-40 collected during 1917, according to Treasry Department estimates.

The total internal revenue returns for 1918 ill equal one-third of the total revenue of the ntire world two years ago.

Excess profits will bring in $1,200,000,000. he next largest amount, $650,000,000, will ome from the personal income tax. The penies that are paid with nickels and dimes for admission to movies and from dues paid to club easurers will net $50,000,000. The picturesque Virgin Islands, lately acquired, will furish their share of the revenue, $20,000.

Out of this vast sum to be raised by internal evenue only $750,000,000 represents the revnue of the commodities taxed under the old aw. The remainder will be the tangible reults of the revenue act of October 3, 1917.

EFFECT OF A FREE PORT.

aised, or whether the Federal Government contributed or not, the Government should have some members on the commission. For example, with a commission of nine, the Federal Government might properly have two commissioners; the State, two commissioners; the Port, two commissioners, with three commissioners to be selected from the merchants of the city in which the port is located. This would provide for co-operation in the interest of the entire country.

There is a considerable variation in the packing requirements of various nations, due to the physical condition of various countries, or the usages of many years which it is desirable to comply with, and while this work of course can be done at any factory, a Free Zone will afford the exporter who is not a manufacturer an opportunity to assemble goods and pack them in a way which will satisfy the requests of their foreign customers, and undoubtedly the Zone will be considerably used for such purposes.

The question of the extent to which goods will be mixed and packed in a Free Zone is very difficult to answer, as no statistics are available or accurate, but undoubtedly the Zone would be used to mix, assort and partly manufacture in a considerable volume.

Passenger or other steamers discharging outside the Free Zone should have the privilege of discharging goods into lighters and transferring said goods to the Free Zone, whether the goods were free or dutiable, to be held there subject to the wishes of the owner, and, equally, vessels discharging in the Free Zone should be allowed to discharge goods, whether free of duty or dutiable, into lighters and send the same into the United States. The management of the Zone would, of course, formulate proper regulations to cover transactions of this kind, especially in connection with duitable goods, so that the duties might be promptly adiusted and collected.

The question of smuggling has also been brought forward, but that seems to be merely a matter of detail. There is no doubt whatever that safeguards of a satisfactory character can be established, and the danger of smuggling to any appreciable extent is hardly worthy of consideration.

There seems no justifiable reason why Congress should not grant New York City, under a comprehensive plan, the right to establish a Free Zone.

money on a side line of cigars and cigarettes. So the proprietor decided to abandon the tobacco trade and take on a side line of pianos and talking machines. It may be a winning combination for King City, but San Francisco would have stayed with the weed, even if it had to abandon the product of the cane. "Cigars and Pianos," would have made a unique sign.

E. J. Stoltz, Western representative of the Palo Cigar, is in San Francisco. He is making his headquarters with Joe Rinaldo, his local representative.

Jose Diaz, president of the Preferred Havanna Tobacco Company, who recently returned from a trip East has left for a trip to Portland and Seattle.

"Dahlman, the Pipe Man," representing the William Demul Company, is scheduled to arrive in San Francisco. He is popular with the trade and will receive a hearty welcome.

KENTUCKY TOBACCO MARKETS.

PARIS, Ky., Feb. 14.—Receipts of tobacco were very heavy on the Carlisle market today and prices continue strong. One house sold 245,000 pounds, at prices ranging from $6 to $51. Another house sold 186,700 pounds at $5 to $60, an average of $25.54.

HIGHER TENDENCY SHOWN.

GLASGOW, Ky., Feb. 14.—The Glasgow tobacco market showed a general higher tendency today, both dark and Burley being up about $2 a hundred pounds. All the warehouses are full. A total of 250,000 pounds of Burley was sold today and 300,000 pounds of dark. One house reports a total sale for the day in money of $66,000.

PARIS MARKET ACTIVE.

PARIS, Ky., Feb. 14.—The Paris tobacco market today was strong and active. All grades were in demand and bidding was brisk. The quality of the offerings was an improvement over yesterday. Only one house held a sale, disposing of 334,035 pounds for $101,196.97, an average of $30.26.

HENDERSON MARKET OFF.

HENDERSON, Ky., Feb. 14.—The largest rush of tobacco this season today caused the price to drop from $1 to $2. Leaf sold up to $24, but trash and lugs showed the first slump since the holidays, some trash selling as low as $9, and lugs from $10.50 to $16.

FRANKFORT AVERAGE $24.61.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Feb. 14.—The Frankfort tobacco market sold 150,090 pounds of tobacco today that averaged $24.61. Prices ranged from 9 to 52 cents. Grade prices unchanged.

MARKET IMPROVES.

MAYSVILLE, Ky., Feb. 14.—The loose leaf tobacco market here today showed considerable improvement with sales amounting to 425,000 pounds. Prices ranged from $9 to $52.

LOW GRADES SHOW STRENGTH.

SHELBYVILLE, Ky., Feb. 14.—The tobacco market was stronger today, especially on low grades, which showed an advance of $2. Prices ranged from $10 to $47, 325,620 pounds selling at an average of $26.75.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

GETTING AHEAD OF THE BOSS.

A young man came to me yesterday to tell me his boss had been fired.

I was sorry for the boss; glad for the young man; and glad for myself. It proved me, for once, a good prophet.

For the same young man had met me three months ago and complained of his lot. His boss was loafing on the job, he said, leaving all the work of the department to him. "He gets the money, and I do the work," the young man exclaimed. "What shall I do?"

I told him to do more work.

"But I'm doing so much already!" he cried.

"I know it," I said. "Do more. Do so much more that everybody in the office will notice it. Then see what happens."

Well, it happened. The boss is fired; and he has the boss's job.—Bruce Barton in Every Week.

SUGGESTED BY SOLOMON

Peoria Cigar Dealer Proposes a Plan for Jewish War Relief in Russia—How It Works.

N. Solomon, wholesale cigar and tobacco man, 512 Columbia terrace, Peoria, Ill., and treasurer of the congregation of Agudas Achem, has set in motion a practical plan of war relief that is gaining vogue as "The Peoria Idea." It is a business-like plan by which the sons and daughters of various Russian communities organize for the war relief of their own old home and neighbors.

Showing how Solomon's proposal works out, the Peoria Star says: "For instance, Mr. Solomon himself came, years ago, from the little town of Pliskoff in the province of Kiev. He knew that in Chicago and several other cities of the country were colonies of people who came from the same neighborhood—just as a Peorian going to Los Angeles naturally gravitates to the Peoria colony of that city. He went to Chicago, hunted up these people of Pliskoff and vicinity so far as he was able, and through those he found others. The movement got into the Chicago papers and this brought more. One of these was a salesman who left Pliskoff 18 years ago. They held a meeting and made Mr. Solomon chairman, then organized the Pliskoff war relief fund. Each pledged himself or herself to a weekly or monthly payment to continue so long as the need exists.

"The officers of the fund will arrange, probably through government agencies, to transmit the funds thus contributed in regular instalments to a committee in Pliskoff. This committee is made up of people they know and through them aid is extended to such families at home who need it most—and practically every family there is suffering. Thus, instead of a spasmodic donation, all well and good in its place, is established a regular relief agency with a constant and dependable income, large or small.

"The idea is spreading to other cities, for Mr. Solomon's plan appeals strongly, each contributor knowing his money goes to aid people he knows, or at least people in his own community in the war-torn, revolution excited country, blundering blindly in circles just now, but ultimately toward its own salvation unless German chicanery rivet autocracy still more firmly than when a czar ruled the land."

ACCOMPLISHING MUCH IN PHILADELPHIA.

Miss Sidney B. Wilson is making a splendid showing for Philadelphia by collecting contributions to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund. She has secured the co-operation of a score of professional and club women who are working among the hotels, clubs and factories.

Every American in Philadelphia appears to be anxious to do his bit for the soldiers in the trenches, and if Miss Wilson maintains the present pace she will finish with a record of which she may feel justly proud. The fund for which she has been working night and day has a total of $157,000.

ASKS HOOVER TO REVOKE LICENSES.

Following an investigation of several weeks, the Federal Trade Commission has asked Federal Food Administrator Herbert Hoover to revoke the licenses of two firms and to withhold the licenses from two other companies. The firms are R. D. Otter & Co., Louisville, Ky.; The Wiener Fruit & Produce Company, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; the Purity Preserving Company and the R. J. Meguiar Company, both of Greenville, Ohio. The cases acted on are four of fifty or more which Commissioner Murdock has under advisement and investigation. R. D. Otter & Co. were charged with rejecting a shipment of two carloads of beans shipped them by the Western Grain Company, of Denver. Commissioner Murdock informed the Food Administrator that "their only reason in rejecting the shipment was that the market dropped suddenly and that accordingly they were not able to sell the beans at a price which they anticipated." The Wiener Fruit & Produce Company was charged with refusing without just cause tw carloads of bulk potatoes shipped from Lachin Mich., by the Twining Elevator Company.

As reported by the Modern Merchant, "the ev dence showed that the Wiener company waite so long before rejecting shipment that some o the potatoes spoiled. An additional factor i this case was that the cars containing the pota toes were held up, thus preventing use of thei for other purposes. Evidence in the other tw cases showed that the Purity Preserving Com pany and the R. J. Meguiar Company ar owned by the same people; that the Purity Pre serving Company contracted to sell tomato ca sup to Seeman Brothers, of New York; tha when the time came to deliver this catsup th Purity Preserving Company claimed that be cause of crop conditions they were unable t deliver their contracts. Commissioner Mur dock's investigation disclosed that the R. J Meguiar Company pasted their labels over th labels of the Purity company and sold the cat sup to Seeman Brothers at $1.30 per doze bottles, the Purity Preserving Company havin contracted to sell the catsup at $1 per dozen Evidence also showed that the R. J. Meguia Company is a manufacturer of prepared mus tard and peanut butter and not equipped to pac catsup."

The War Trade Board desires to make clea to all exporters the meaning of the clause "fiv per cent more or less" appearing on all expor licenses under the space provided for the state ment of the amount of merchandise to b shipped. This clause is intended to provide fo slight excess in weight or measurement whe the actual weight or measurement could not b actually determined at the time of applying fo the license. This clause is not intended, an the Collectors of Customs have been instructe not to permit it to be availed of, to allow shipper to make a practice of deliberately shipping i excess of the amount stated in the license.

Western Retailers in Convention Assembled at Tacoma

More Than 80 Delegates Attend—Enthusiasm for the Cause—Earnest Inquiry Concerning Practical Measures—Greater Co-operation Promised—Dwyer of San Francisco Elected President—Proposals to Dispense with the Less Profitable Brands—Speeches by Leading Men in the Northwest

(Special Telegram to TOBACCO)

TACOMA, February 26.—More than 80 delegates, practically representing all parts of the Pacific Coast, attended the opening session of the sixth annual convention of the Western Association of Retail Cigar Dealers here today.

The convention met in the hall of the Chamber of Commerce. President M. C. Collins called the meeting to order at 10:30 a. m. In an address of welcome, Mayor A. V. Fawcett extended to the visiting delegates "the hospitality of Tacoma." Appropriate response was made by President Collins.

After the minutes of the previous convention had been read, President Collins, in his address, reviewed what had been accomplished during the past year and spoke earnestly of what the association hoped to do in the future. Next in order came the annual report of Secretary N. E. Nelson and Treasurer J. F. Dizard, reports from affiliated associations and the appointment of committees.

Officers, to serve for the ensuing year, were elected as follows: President, Dan B. Dwyer, of San Francisco; first vice-president, J. F. Dizard, of Seattle; second vice-president, L. Coughlin, of Tacoma; third vice-president, A. R. Johnson, Hoquiam, Wash.; treasurer, O. E. Doherty, of Seattle.

N. E. Nelson at first was disinclined to accept a re-election as secretary, but eventually he was induced to take the office.

The trustees chosen were W. L. Alfred, of Tacoma; J. E. Kelly, of Portland; R. B. Neff, of Yakima; J. Weinberger, of Los Angeles; E. Lippert, of Spokane; L. Nathanson, of Minneapolis; S. F. Brown, of Wapto; W. L. McNeil, of Prosser, and J. B. Embaum, of Seattle.

Percy P. Powell, of the Powell-Sanders Co., of Spokane, urged greater co-operation, a better understanding between retailers and jobbers, for mutual benefit.

The scant profit apportioned to the retailer under existing conditions, occupied an important place in the discussions on the floor of the convention. Emphasis was laid on the necessity for greater co-operation and for determined action to eliminate unprofitable goods.

The program for Wednesday evening comprises a banquet to all delegates, members and their ladies, given at the Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce by the Tacoma Retail Cigar Dealers' Association.

President W. L. Alfred, of the Tacoma Retail Cigar Dealers' Association, will act as toastmaster and the following will be called upon to respond: Mayor A. V. Fawcett; A. B. Howell, president Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce; F. H. Pettit, Commissioner of Public Safety; S. Perkins, owner of the Tacoma Ledger and News; F. G. Reeman, prosecuting attorney.

After the banquet will be a ball and reception at the Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce.

STORE ROBBERS CAUGHT

New York Police Arrest Four Youths Who Boast of Complicity in Recent Depredations—Others in the Toils.

Louis Oldstein, one of the four youths arrested on Friday night following a hold-up in the United Cigar store at Beekman street and Park Row, New York, is said to have related his exploits in that line to the police with considerable pride. As a result, it is alleged, of statements made by him and other prisoners, five more youths were arrested Sunday as members of the gang that Oldstein is said to have ruled with an iron hand. Members of this gang, the police say, help up at least three cigar stores in Brooklyn besides the one on Park Row.

Those gathered in Saturday, all of whom live in Brooklyn, said they were Charles Tucker, eighteen years old, of 1777 Park Place; Nat Kornblatt, fifteen years old, of 1873 Sterling Place; Irving Zipowitz, twenty years old, and Abraham Zipowitz, eighteen years old, of 1580 Eastern Parkway, and Nat Selig, twenty years old, of 137 Barrett street. The four older prisoners were held in $5,000 bail each in the Flatbush avenue police court for examination Monday on the charge of robbery. Kornblatt was turned over to the Children's Society.

The fourth man alleged to have been concerned in the Park Row hold-up is Max Meissner, twenty-two years old, of 1856 Prospect Place, Brooklyn. Detectives found him in his stepfather's automobile on Fulton street, Manhattan, after the hold-up. It is alleged that he was waiting to carry away Oldstein and his companions, Philip Lipschitz and Leo Fleischman, when the cash register of the cigar store had been emptied.

Oldstein is asserted to have told the police that he was the head of a gang that gathered in a poolroom in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn. It was there, he is reported to have said, that many cigar store raids were planned.

From start to finish, according to the police account of Oldstein's story as quoted by the New York Tribune, this twenty-year-old youth was the life of every hold-up party. It was he who selected the places to be robbed and mapped out the line of action, detectives said; it was he who played the prominent role of gunman in the actual robbery, flashing his revolver on the salesman and cowing him into submission; it was he whose word was law when the spoils were divided.

"He told me," said Detective Roddy, "that he would not let any of the others touch anything until he made his selections. And he

TWENTY PER CENT. STOCK

Dividend To Be Declared By the P. Lorillard Co. In Lieu of the Usual Extra Cash Disbursement.

The P. Lorillard Co. will declare an extra dividend of 20 per cent in common stock in lieu of the usual extra cash dividend. The extra dividend last year amounted to 6 per cent and two years ago to 5 per cent. The proposed extra dividend will call for an increase in the authorized common stock, and a special meeting of the stockholders has been called for March 12 to vote on the matter.

Thomas J. Maloney, president of the company, in an explanatory statement said:

"The net earnings of the company for the year 1917 have been sufficient to justify the directors in following the same course and paying a similar or even a larger extra dividend this year, but as there has been an enormous increase in the cost of leaf tobacco and all materials used in the manufacture of tobacco, which necessitates a much larger provision for working capital, they deem it for the best interests of the company to conserve its cash resources and to omit the declaration of the extra cash dividend this April.

"Under these circumstances, the officers and directors have come to the conclusion that in addition to the regular cash dividends of 1¾ per cent on the preferred stock and 3 per cent on the common stock, payable April 1, it is advisable to declare and pay to the common stock holders an extra dividend of 20 per cent of their holdings, payable in common stock of the company as soon after April 1 as practicable, in lieu of the usual extra dividend in cash."

The stockholders will be asked to authorize double the present amount of outstanding stock of 151,556 shares, only one-fifth of which will be needed to pay the extra stock dividend.

WAR FINANCE MEASURE

Seems Sure to Be Passed Soon—Bill Creates Corportation with $500,000,000 Capital and Power to Issue $4,000,000,000 in Bonds.

WASHINGTON, February 26.—Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, chairman of the Committee on Finance, yesterday called up for consideration the War Finance Corporation bill. It is believed that only a few days' consideration of the bill will be necessary.

Prompt passage, with bipartisan support, of the administrations measure to establish a war finance corporation and provide Federal supervision over private security issued is predicted by those in charge of the bill. It is understood that the House is also prepared to expedite the passage of the measure.

As redrafted, under an agreement between Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and the Senate Finance Committee, the bill will create the corporation with $500,000,000 capital and power to issue $4,000,000,000 in bonds to be advanced to war and contributory industries. Four directors, appointed by the President, instead of by Secretary McAdoo, with the latter as head of the directorate, will manage the corporation's affairs.

The most important change made in the original administration draft provides that instead of the corporation's directors, a "capital issues committee" of five members, appointed by the Federal Reserve Board and comprising three of its members, would license and control security issues of $100,000 or more.

TIN FOIL FOR RED CROSS.

A wholesale grocery house in Duluth, Minn., has devised a special tin can for the saving of tin foil from cigars, chewing gum, candy, cigarettes and like merchandise. These cans are placed in cigar stores, churches, schools, and other locations by the Red Cross, and the accumulation of tin foil is gathered up and sold. Receipts of tin foil are so large in the community where this plan originated, it is said, that the Red Cross chapters there have received several hundred dollars for old tin foil. The Red Cross has also derived revenue from the sale of expired 1917 Minnesota automobile license plates which are made of aluminum, and, therefore, carry a considerable old-metal value.

CARL F. THOMAS

Secretary of the Minneapolis Cigar and Tobacco Dealers' Association.

Thirteen years ago Carl F. Thomas entered the cigar business as manager for the Yerxa Cigar Department. Two years later, when he was 19 years old, he resigned from his position to take charge of C. S. Brackett Company's cigar department, where he remained for nine years.

In 1916 Mr. Thomas tired of working for others and opened a store of his own in Minneapolis, later adding two more stores to his credit. The stores are located at 621 Hennepin avenue, 302 Hennepin avenue, and 37 West Sixth street, Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. Thomas controls one of the largest box trades in the Northwest, and sells exclusively: El Genio, Henry the Fourth, Eden, St. Denis, all products of the Preferred Havana Tobacco Company; Norma and King Henry, R. Steinecke Company's brands; La Tessina (Gonzales & Sanchez), La Muna (Gans Bros.), El Stefano (Celestino Vega & Co.), Kingdale (Charles Morris & Co.), Marie Antoinette (E. Kleiner & Co.).

A GAIN OF $20,000,000

In Total Sales of American Tobacco Co. During 1917—Record Year's Business Amounted to $90,000,000.

The annual report of the American Tobacco Co. to be issued early in March will probably show between $25 and $26 a share for the $40,242,400 common stock after preferred dividends. These earnings are after allowances for war taxes, which ran in excess of $1,000,000.

The Wall Street Journal intimates that "net for the year gained in the neighborhood of $1,200,000 after all these allowances, which amounts to approximately 3% on the junior issue. Earnings of close to $26 a share in 1917 compare with $23 in 1916 and $20 in 1915.

"The American Tobacco Co. on December 31 closed its biggest year since the dissolution of the Trust. Sales for the year amounted to $90,000,000 as compared with slightly more than $70,000,000 in 1916. This is a gain of 28%. The 1916 business represented the company's previous record year.

"Earnings of $26 a share or $3 more for the stock in 1917 than 1916 compare favorably with the showing of the Liggett & Myers Co. which earned close to $29 a share for its junior issue as compared with slightly less than $26 in the previous year. These two companies are the largest manufacturers of tobacco goods in this country.

"December business of the American Tobacco Co. was in excess of $90,000,000. December business the year before was approximately $5,500,000, showing a gain of 55% for the former month.

Earnings of the American Cigar Co., a subsidiary of the American Tobacco Co. for the year just closed will show close to $17 a share for the $10,000,000 common stock as compared with slightly over $12 in 1916. Despite these large earnings there is no intention to increase the common dividends on this subsidiary. The stock now pays 6% and any increased disbursement to stockholders will probably be in the form of a stock dividend. But even that is unlikely before the end of the year.

"The American Tobacco Co. should earn even more in the current year than in the twelve months just closed. Sales should run close to $100,000,000.

"In any discussion of the possibility of increased earnings in 1918 it must be borne in mind that the company will undoubtedly show a margin on the right side of the ledger on its new Lucky Strike brand of cigarettes. This was a new brand brought out last February, and its sales are already running at the rate of 4,000,000,000 cigarettes a year. This is the most remarkable sales record in the tobacco history of this country, but it was a new brand and has cost a great deal of money to feature. In fact, the company probably lost $500,000 on this brand for the year ended December 31 last.

"But in November of last year this brand started to show a profit on the investment which has continued up through January of this year and should prove a large earner for the company in 1918.

"Including various subsidiaries the American Tobacco combination did a gross business in 1917 of probably close to $14,000,000. This compares with $110,000,000 in 1916 and $99,000,000 in 1915."

The stewards of the dining cars of the Pennsylvania Railway have asked the government for an increase in pay from $100 to $125 per month, which they now receive, to $150 per month. They also ask to be granted an eight-hour day with at least four days off a month. Their propositions have been laid before the railroad wage commission.

THE ONE SURE BET

"My Liberty Bonds are quoted below par," says a reader. "Shall I sell?"

Not on your life.

Every single bond issue the United States has ever put out has sold above par before its retirement. It is as sure as that the sun will rise tomorrow that your Liberty Bonds will go above par as soon as the war is over.

Pledge every possible cent of your salary for Liberty Bonds; in this day of financial uncertainty, they are the one sure bet.

Your Income Tax

If your income is taxable—and it must be a modest one to escape taxation under the War Revenue Act of October 3, 1917—don't wait to be notified that you must pay an income tax. The Government is not required to seek the taxpayer. The taxpayer must seek the Government.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, has extended the time for filing income and excess profits returns from March 1 to April 1, 1918. You may file your return any time before April 1, but if you wait until April 2, you are subject to a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $1,000 and an additional assessment of 50 per cent of the amount of tax due.

Returns are required of every unmarried person—man or woman—whose net income for the calendar year 1917 was $1,000 or more and of every married person whose net income was $2,000 or more.

The rate of tax is at least 2 per cent on net incomes of unmarried persons in excess of $1,000 and on net incomes of married persons in excess of $2,000. Payment must be made on or before June 15, 1918.

The estimated revenue to be collected this year under the War Revenue Act is $2,500,000,000, of which $666,000,000 is in individual income taxes. Last year 500,000 persons paid income taxes; this year it is estimated the number will be more than 6,000,000. If you are one of them, remember that your dollars are for the support of the war. By promptly filing your return and promptly paying your tax you are helping the Government to early victory. Pay your income tax in the same spirit in which you bought your Liberty bond.

Salesmanship Shown

"I am interested in three small retail stores," writes William Maxwell in Collier's, "and I am confident that their aggregate business would increase 50 per cent if the salesmen could be persuaded that they can't 'size up a customer.'

"I have a friend who conducts a specialty shop on Fifth avenue. He says: 'I can't break my salesmen of the habit of trying to size up the people who come to the store. If they think a visitor is a live one, they are good salesmen. If they think he is a dead one, they are rotten salesmen. They don't seem to realize that it's a part of their duty to try to turn dead ones into live ones.'"

Turning "dead ones into live ones" is the most important and the most highly paid branch of salesmanship. Wholesale salesmen realize that fact, but few retail salesmen seem to be conscious of it.

A good many years ago I was standing in a cigar store in a Western town. The c store was next door to a toyshop. The was a week or so before Christmas. A co of countrywomen entered the cigar st Just inside the threshold they paused looked around in confusion. One of t stammered: "I guess we're in the wr place; we want to go to that store w they sell toys."

The salesman came from behind the co er and politely said: "We don't sell here, but a good many of the ladies are terested in our carved German pipes—ca in the Black Forest, you know. The store is just next door, but before you g like to show you one of the pipes. It's re rather a curiosity—more interesting to dren than a good many toys—and, of cou a gift that any man will appreciate."

While he was saying all this he was ting out the pipe. The women looke each other doubtfully and then at the One of them pointed to the distorted f ures of a gnome carved on the bowl of pipe and said to her companion: "I wo if Albert wouldn't like a pipe like that

"Sure he would," the latter agreed.

"And it would tickle little Al too, woul it?" the first woman continued.

A moment later the sale was closed, those two women, who had blundered in cigar store under the mistaken impres that it was a toyshop, went out with a ra expensive carved pipe. They were dead when they came in, but the salesman tur them into live ones. I admit that I thou the salesman was wasting his time in tempting to sell them a pipe. He was dif ent from the average salesman. I happe know that he isn't a salesman any more if he owed me a hundred thousand dolla shouldn't worry at all. The difference tween him and the average salesman difference which the latter must remove fore he can become anything more than average salesman.

DON'T DELAY WORK

To help, as best he can, towards win ning the war, is a most urgent duty o every American, whether he be a labor er or a capitalist.

He who assists in stirring up labo troubles at this time is giving aid and com fort to the enemy.

In every industry, employer and em ployee alike should place the interest o the nation above selfish desire.

Fomentation of class antagonism at thi time is treachery to the United State Greed may lead the unscrupulous to com mit acts associated with treason.

Men who are truly patriotic, men de termined to do their part in helping th United States to achieve victory, will no impede progress nor be implicated in an endeavor to retard production.

Self-interest must be subordinated t national requirements during the war.

So far as they dare, Kaiserites are en couraging strikes in this country.

How German money has been used t foment trouble is known.

Disagreements may occur, no industr is entirely free from contention, but thi particularly is the time to settle dispute amicably and quickly, that work may pro ceed at full speed.

IT WILL BE A COLD DAY FOR THE KAISER WHEN OUR BOYS GET BUSY "OVER THERE"

Despite the snowstorm, ten thousand men from Camp Upton paraded in New York on Washington's Birthday—Practically all branches of the service were represented and the division of the New National Army made a most excellent showing—In the picture, the troops are passing down Fifth Avenue, just a few doors from the office of TOBACCO—Of her soldier sons the metropolis is indeed proud.

Popularizing Thrift

That the people of the land are coming to a practical realization of the earnestness of the war campaign, is evidenced in the many agencies aiding the government in the successful promotion of the earnest task it has undertaken. This is particularly true among the business men of the country who have come forward with unstinted loyalty and devotion to Uncle Sam and are doing their "bit" on this side of the Atlantic in helping our boys "over there."

How well the various trades have fallen in line in this patriotic service may be seen by the progress of sales of the War Savings & Thrift Stamps which are recorded by the Chairmen of the various trade fields under the guidance of the National Committee of War Savings Stamps of this city. Every effort is being made by employer and employee, not alone in the active participation of the campaign but in personal sacrifice for the good cause. Though the War Thrift Campaign is but three months old, already millions are owners of Thrift cards containing little 25c stamps, building up to War Savings Certificates in which are placed the $5 Stamp.

Such a gilt-edge investment as this, coming as it did during war time, was not easily understood when the plan was launched among the people. Never in the history of this country has such an investment been offered to the citizens to take a self-respecting part in the affairs of the government by aiding it in financing the war. The W. S. S. project is, in reality, a two billion dollar loan launched among the masses of the people and is intended for the benefit of those who cannot afford to buy the larger bond issues. It is a most democratic plan in that it reaches the entire population from coast to coast, men, women and children, rich and poor alike, and there certainly is not a person in this prosperous land so humbly placed that he or she cannot buy a 25c Thrift Stamp as a tribute of loyalty towards Uncle Sam.

This War Savings Stamp plan is a means of directing nickels, dimes and quarters of the ordinary man into the United States Treasury for safe-keeping so that at the end of the war the poor man may find himself no less poor, if not richer, than he was at the beginning. It means "postponed" prosperity, and thus from the business point of view is a most desirable asset.

The remarkable effect of this buying of War Savings Stamps has been the development of a finer sense of "thrift" and economy.

Applying for Licenses

The War Trade Board announces that after March 1, 1918, all applications for export licenses must be signed either by the applicant himself, or by an agent whose authority must be evidenced by a power of attorney acknowledged before a Notary Public, upon a form approved by the War Trade Board, bearing a revenue stamp, and filed with the Board in Washington. Applications by corporations or partnerships must be signed either by an agent named in such power of attorney, or by an officer of the corporation, or a member of the firm. This power of attorney will be required, not only to enable an employee of the shipper to execute an application for export license, but it will also be necessary to enable anyone other than the owner of the goods, acting as forwarding agent or broker, to apply for license. Necessarily, all regulations pertaining to licenses will be strictly enforced. Export licenses will help to prevent supplies from going to the Kaiser, even in roundabout way.

T. M. A. Petitions Internal Revenue Bureau

And Secures a Ruling That Will Be Helpful to Employers—Dispensation Granted Is Applicable Only to Return Forms for 1917—Advice Relative to Import and Export Licenses—What the Director of the Bureau of Exports Says.

Realizing how difficult it is to comply with the provision of the War Revenue Law requiring employers to make a separate report of each and every employee who has received $800 or more during the taxable year on the form, due to the fact, which is undoubtedly true in most cases, that no adequate records for such purpose have been kept, the T. M. A. presented to the Internal Revenue Department a statement pointing out the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of complying with the law, especially for the year 1917.

In the arguments submitted by the T. M. A. it was pointed out that in most cases, particularly in the cigar manufacturing business, the employees have always been designated by numbers and not by names, and that in such cases it is impossible to trace the amount paid to any particular employee; also, that it is common practice for cigar makers to work in teams and that the wages earned by teams are payable to the teams and not to the individuals, each team making its own divisions without any knowledge on the part of the employer as to the amount received by each member of the team.

We are pleased to be able to report the receipt of the following letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in answer to our request for the modification of the requirement, which letter speaks for itself. Commissioner Roper says:

"This office is in receipt of your letter of February 5, 1918, and in reply you are advised that where employees are known by number only, or worked in teams, the team being paid instead of the individual, and where it is not possible to trace through the number or teams the amounts received by individuals in the way of salaries and wages during the year 1917, the reports on forms 1096 and 1099, as required by the Act of October 3, 1917, need not be made.

"It is requested that the Tobacco Merchants' Association notify its individual members that for the year 1918 their record of salaries and wages paid should be kept in such manner that the information called for can be furnished in the future."

It must be noted that the above dispensation applies only to the year 1917. As to the future, it is respectfully suggested that employers fill out one of the blank forms, which they can readily secure from the Collector of Internal Revenue, for each employee at the beginning of the year, and make a memorandum from week to week on the back of the slip of the amount paid the employee, so that at the end of the year each slip will show the aggregate amount paid to the employee.

It must also be noted that in addition to the filing of a separate report for each employee, the employer must fill out and file a general report on Form 1096 covering all such payments.

Re Import and Export Licenses

In regard to the proclamations issued by the President on February 14th prohibiting the importation or exportation of all commodities from or to all countries without first obtaining licenses therefor from the Bureau of Imports or the Bureau of Exports of the War Trade Board as the case may be, we beg to report as follows:

It will be remembered that on November 28th last the President issued a Proclamation prohibiting the importation into the United States of a large number of commodities, including tobacco, from various countries without first obtaining a separate license for each importation from the War Trade Board and that on December 13 last we advised our members by our Special Bulletin No. A-2 that the Bureau of Imports of the War Trade Board had issued a general license for the importation of tobacco from all of the prohibited countries excepting the Dutch East Indies, thus dispensing with the requirement to secure a separate license for each importation.

As to the Dutch East Indies, the requirement as to the special license remained in force only in so far as it applied to tobacco imported direct from these islands, but the general license thus granted applied even to tobacco grown in the Dutch East Indies, if imported from other countries.

Immediately after the issuance of the President's Proclamation of February 1 we placed ourselves in communication with the Bureau of Imports with a view to continuing the general license thus issued in December and we are pleased to report that in a telegram received by us from the Director of the Bureau of Imports he states that the general license issued by the Bureau last December as regards the importation of tobacco from all countries except the Dutch East Indies still remains in force.

As regards exports, we have likewise applied for a general license, but regret to state that our application has not as yet been granted. We shall, however, continue our efforts in that direction.

We are at the same time advised by the Director of the Bureau of Exports as follows:

"As regards shipments to men serving in the United States Army and Navy abroad, I am pleased to advise you that Special License No. RAC-43 has been issued through the Customs Service covering all shipments from individuals in the United States to, and for the personal use of, individuals serving in the United States Army and Navy and the American Red Cross abroad. Special arrangements have also been made for the licensing of shipments to the army which are handled by the Quartermaster Division of the United States Army."

Dunn & Marton, a retail tobacco firm, Louis Caporal, who conducts a fruit store and shoe shine parlor, and W. H. Winters, proprietor of a bakery and restaurant, in Paducah, Ky., were arrested on charges of selling contrary to the Sunday closing law and will test the law. Warrants were served on them soon after they began selling. The city commissioners have instructed the chief of police of Paducah to enforce the Sunday law and the only exemptions are soda fountains and drug stores, the latter being confined to the sale of drugs. The merchants who sold on Sunday did so to test the law.

Helping Materially

Reports from Washington that the complete control of imports and exports just taken over by the Government will give opportunity to determine the classes of manufacturing material, and manufactures to be imported and exported during the remainder of the war, lends interest to a study by The National City Bank of New York, of the principal articles forming the manufacturing material entering and leaving the United States. Manufacturing materials imported into, and exported from the United States show in each case an increase of about two-thirds in total value since the beginning of the war. Manufacturing material imported in the fiscal year 1914, all of which preceded the war, aggregated $952,000,000 and in 1917 $1,585,000,000, an increase of 65%, while manufacturing material exported grew from $1,167,000,000 in 1914 to $1,924,000,000 in 1917, also an increase of 65%.

These figures of the total value of manufacturing material exported and imported, include not only the raw material, but the partly manufactured material intended for further use in manufacturing such as pig copper, pig tin, steel bars and billets, sole leather, etc. In practically all of these articles for use in manufacturing, whether in the raw state or partly manufactured, there have been large increases both in imports and exports, though the growth in quantity is not as great as that indicated by the figures of value, since in practically all cases, the price per unit of quantity is now larger than prior to the war.

The principal raw materials imported include India rubber, hides, wool, cotton, silk, hemp, sisal, jute, nitrate of soda and leaf tobacco, and the principal articles in a partly manufactured state for further use in manufacturing include copper pigs, tin in pigs and bars, iron pigs and bars, lumber, wood pulp, and the vegetable oils. These with sundry minor articles of the same general character imported in 1914 were $952,141,000, in 1916, $1,305,683,000 and in 1917, $1,584,990,000. India rubber shows a large increase, the quantity imported in 1914 having been 132 million pounds, and in 1917, 333 million pounds, while the value increased from 71 million dollars in 1914 to 189 millions in 1917. Hides and skins aggregated 561 million pounds in 1914 and 700 millions in 1917, the value being 120 million dollars in 1914 and 216 millions in 1917. Wool increased from 248 million pounds in 1914 to 372 millions in 1917, but the value shows a much larger increase proportionately, having been in 1914, 53 million dollars, and in 1917, 131 millions. Raw cotton imported in 1914 was 123 million pounds and in 1917 147 millions, an increase of but about 25% in quantity, while the value increased more than 100%, having been in 1914, 19 million dollars and in 1917, 40 millions. Silk in 1914 amounted to 29 million pounds and in 1917, 34 millions, the value, 98 million dollars in 1914 and 156 millions in 1917. Nitrate of soda, used largely in the manufacture of explosives increased from 564,000 tons in 1914 to 1,262,000 in 1917, and the value from 18 million dollars in 1914 to 44 millions in 1917.

On the export side, the increase occurs chiefly in the partly manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing. Of the manufacturing materials exported from the United States, cotton is the only important article which goes out of the country in the natural state, all of the other important articles for manufacturing having passed through a preliminary stage of manufacture before exportation. The raw cotton exported in 1917 was less both in quantity and value than in 1914, the quantity having fallen from 9,165,000 bales in 1914 to 5,947,000 in 1917, and the value from $610,475,000 to $543,101,000 in 1917. Pig copper shows a comparatively small increase in quantity exported but a large increase in value, the total export of 1914 being 975,000,000 pounds and in 1917, 1,022,000,000 pounds, but the value in 1914, $145,000,000 and in 1917, $292,000,000. Steel billets also for further use in manufacturing show a large per cent of gain, having increased from 47,000 tons in 1914 to 1,936,000 tons in 1917, while the value grew from $1,000,000 in 1914 to $136,000,000 in 1917. Chemicals as a whole, largely for use in manufacturing, increased from 27 million dollars in 1914 to 188 millions in 1917, zinc (spelter) from one quarter of a million dollars in 1914 to 61 millions in 1917, and brass plates, bars, etc., from slightly less than 1 million dollars in 1914 to 121 millions in 1917. Lumber exports show a decline from 58 million dollars in 1914 to 27 millions in 1917.

Manufacturing material has formed a steadily increasing share in the imports during the war, but a decreasing proportion of the exports. The share which the two groups "raw materials" and "manufactures for manufacturing" formed of the imports, was in 1914 50% and in 1917 60%, while the share which these two groups formed of the exports fell from 50% in 1914 to 31% in 1917.

DOMINICAN TOBACCO GOES TO FRANCE.

Arthur McLean, American Consul at Puerto Plata, reports that French steamers called at Puerto Plata in January and loaded 1,165,575 pounds of tobacco, valued at $104,300. This tobacco, which was intended for the French Regie, was carried to Fort de France, Martinique, whence it was transshipped to St. Nazaire, France. Some of this tobacco had been stored here for the past year owing to lack of transportation.

These are the first shipments of tobacco to be made from Puerto Plata to France via the Island of Martinique.

FACING A BIG PISTOL

Siegel Saw His Cash Register Rifled of $50—A United Cigar Store Robbery.

Abraham Siegel, clerk in the United Cigar Store at No. 136 First avenue, New York, notified the police that his cash register was robbed of $50 by three young men. He was forced into a back room at the point of a pistol by one of the men, he said, while the other two rifled the cash register.

They then tried to open the strong box in the safe, in which Siegel had placed $200 earlier in the evening, but were not successful.

While the clerk was held prisoner a customer entered the store and was waited on by the two young men behind the counter.

The robbery occurred at a late hour, Saturday, Siegel said, just as he was preparing his cash to close for the night.

Tobacco firms are beginning to send their riders into the country around Paris, Tenn., to give the crop a good "looking over." Owing to the extremely hard weather the tobacco has not fully matured, and until only recently were the planters able to start "stripping." It is thought that the larger part of the crop will be ready for the buyers the last of the week. Crosswys & Co., agents for the Italian Government, put their buyers in the fields this week. Eaker & Co., the first to put riders out, have been buying for several weeks. C. V. Ezelle and J. F. Baldridge Company will put men in the field in the near future. The crop is opening at a good price, some crops bringing around $12. This is thought to be the latest time that tobacco ever remained in the barn, and the farmers are expecting a good price even though they were late moving the crop.

The Tobacco Crop of Western Greece

Reporting on the crop of Western Greece, A. B. Cooks, American Consul at Patras, says: "The chief tobacco-growing region of the Patras district, so far as the American market is concerned, lies around the city of Agrinion, just across the bay from Patras. Here are grown various kinds of tobacco, the principal three being known to the trade under the names of Tsembelia, Aromatic (or Myrodato), and Basma (or Cavalla seed). The Tsembelia is a strong variety of the weed, with a leaf 9 or 10 inches long and light yellow in color when properly cured. The Aromatic has a leaf not more than 5 or 6 inches long, bright yellow and light weight; it is very fragrant. The Basma tobacco is a new undertaking in this region, having first been tried three or four years ago, the seed being brought from the more famous Cavalla region. The experiment is said to be successful, though dealers admit that the product is not equal to the real Cavalla tobacco.

"The crop of 1917 has been harvested and is now in the drying barns. It will not be ready to place on the market before May or June, 1918. And the better grades, which need considerable manipulation in order to prepare them for sale, will hardly enter the market before the fall of 1918, according to dealers' reports. The total crop, all varieties and grades, is now estimated to be about 13,500,000 pounds. The crop of 1916 was estimated at some 5,000,000 pounds, which was a decrease of about 15 per cent from the normal crop, owing to unfavorable seasons. The great increase in the crop of 1917 is due to stimulation in production brought about by attractive prices.

"The following table shows the estimated quantity of each grade produced in 1917, as well as the average prices of that grade per 100 pounds quoted f. o. b. Patras, February 14, 1914, November 14, 1916, and December 31, 1917.

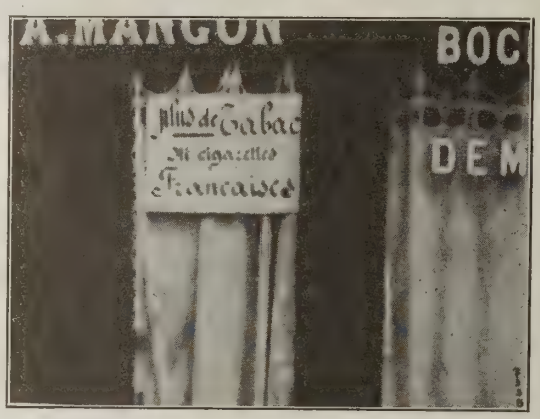
"The movement of tobacco to the American market has been very active as compared with former years, despite the abnormally high prices. Tobacco invoiced through the Patras consulate during 1917 was declared at a total of 549,038 pounds net, with a value of $990,682, as compared with 95,753 pounds valued at $42,853 during 1916. The above values include all packing charges, together with all insurance, but not ocean freights.

"By a law which became effective November 23, 1917, a tax in the form of an export duty of 2 drachmas per kilo (17½ cents per pound) is laid upon tobacco exported abroad from any Greek Province, except that of Argolis-Corinthos. Tobaccos from the latter Province have a duty of 1 drachma per kilo (8.75 cents per pound)."

Suffering Caused by Tobacco Shortage in France

In an article, "La Crise du Tabac," by G. de Nussac, in L'Opinion, a French publication, it is shown, in a translation made for the New York Sun, that the supply of tobacco in France has not only failed but failed badly. The comforting statement is made that the shortage is not felt among the troops at the front, where tobacco is fortunately regarded as one of those things which are as necessary as anything can be which is not powder and shot. M. de Nussac says that it is as necessary as food, and sometimes more welcome.

Even civilians in the towns are more dismayed when they find their favorite kiosk or tobacco shop shut than if it were the butcher shop. Every citizen wants tobacco with his evening paper, and an unfilled pipe is a greater misfortune than hunger. This statement is entirely serious, which is proof that there really is a tobacco crisis, and the causes are both economic and military.



So far the civilian has been the chief sufferer, but an increasing scarcity of tobacco, when any one considers its immediate effect on the comfort of the men at the front, is one of the dreariest portents of today. It is to be hoped that it will not continue and grow worse in France during this time of national privation. According to L'Opinion, the Government cannot be absolved from all criticism. When Lille was occupied it was abundantly clear that this great market was for the time closed. The public could hardly realize that Lille was a center of manufacture and a great importing market, receiving tobacco from Austria and Turkey, and probably countries still further east.

Any one who has smoked the French Government cigarette is fully aware that it is Oriental. It is certainly not Maryland or caporal, varieties that have become exceedingly popular in France. Indeed, to the writer of this article the black cigarette which is smoked so much in France and comes out under the ægis of the Government seems strangely like the dark colored Austrian weed, though the origin of the two must be dissimilar. However, in the matter of smoking there is nothing exclusive, and a cigarette is one of the first things the enemy prisoner receives from his good humored captor. It seems likely, therefore, that if there is a world-wide shortage soldiers will suffer in their most innocent enjoyments.

In Paris the retailer has run short, not only of his native supply but of Virginia and Havana. There are signs up everywhere that tobacco is not for sale, but for how long is not mentioned. The situation is like that of the retail grocers in London. Women, it is said, have been rationed on their cigarettes, or they are denied them altogether. The writer points out that the rule is hardly fair, since the custom of smoking is generally followed by women in Europe, and they have to a great extent the same privations and the same incentive as men. It is doubtful, too, whether such a rule results in much saving, for nothing would be easier than to have some man or boy purchase the cigarettes. Today, as the scarcity is general, there is not the possibility of this division of spoils.

High prices are the rule in the retail shops when there are cigarettes to sell. A soldier who asked for Egyptians was charged about 60 cents for twenty cigarettes. When he asked if he could buy a smaller box he was told that there was none. The situation revealed here is made worse by the shortage of smoking tobacco. To the smoker, especially to the poor man whose chief comfort now is his pipe, the matter is sufficiently serious to prompt inquiry and to ask ventilation through such channels as the press. It is not alleged, in France at least, that high prices are due to profiteering. The retailer, it is true, must put a price on his wares that will cover the state tax. But he would gain nothing if most people gave up smoking, which would decrease consumption to almost nothing.

There is no definite cause assigned for the tobacco crisis. It is accepted as a phase of war which threatens the comfort, not the safety, of a nation. Consumers as a rule believe that the government has shown a want of forethought. The supply of tobacco, like the supply of flowers, is left to take care of itself. It is clear, on the other hand, that the retail dealers have only small amounts of imported tobacco on hand. The supply of home grown and colonial tobacco is negligible.

"No More Tobacco, Neither French Cigarettes"

The sign that a Paris dealer displays

The causes of the shortage, apart from the tendency of Government to leave such things to private societies and the Red Cross, are most probably military, like the occupation of Lille and other markets, and commercial, like the cost of production, lack of shipping and high prices. The danger of the situation is that the population will be driven to the smoking of weeds, and that a vast quantity of adulterated stuff will be dumped on the market. In the interests of the consumer it seems time to take some steps to relieve the scarcity.

ALLEGES A PARTNERSHIP

Charles O. Filbert in Court Claims a Half Interest in The Business Of the Late Albert S. Weber Of Reading.

Seeking to establish the co-partnership between himself and the late Albert S. Weber in the conduct and management of the cigar and confectionery store at 29 South Fifth street, Reading, Pa., Charles O. Filbert, through Attorney William Kerper Stevens, brought suit in equity against Rudolph S. Weber, administrator of the estate of Albert S. Weber, deceased. Mr. Filbert asks the court to grant a preliminary injunction to prevent Mr. Weber, the administrator, from interfering with carrying on the business that he (Weber) be ordered to deliver the keys, stock and fixtures to Filbert.

Filbert in his bill states the co-partnership was formed on January 1, 1917, between himself and Albert S. Weber, who died February 3, 1918. The partnership according to the bill was a verbal agreement between A. S. Weber and the plaintiff under which each of the parties were co-owners in equal shares of the stock, fixtures and good will; also of a savings deposit of $2,233.30 in the Pennsylvania Trust Co.

As reported by the Reading Eagle, "The plaintiff avers the profits of the business were to be divided equally between them after the plaintiff's salary was deducted. In case of the death of Mr. Weber the entire business and contents of the store, accumulated profits deposited in the savings account and other surplus were to go to the plaintiff.

The bill says at the time of his death Weber, although not related to the plaintiff, stood in loco parentis to Filbert, who entered his employ at the age of 18, some time in September, 1908.

The plaintiff says he worked for Mr. Weber at $7 a week with board until he was 21 years of age. His pay was then increased to $12 a week, but $5 was retained by Mr. Weber to be placed to the credit of the plaintiff and deposited with other savings from the business to accumulate until sufficient money was saved to purchase a one-half interest in the business.

On December 31, 1916, the plaintiff says his savings amounted to $1,640, the sum agreed upon for the purchase of the half interest, and that this money was applied to the business.

On February 9, 1918, letters of administration were granted to Rudolph S. Weber, who took possession of the store the following day. Filbert says Weber asked for the keys to the store to make an appraisement, and he, ignorant of the rights of the surviving partner, delivered the keys to the defendant who has refused, the plaintiff alleges, to return them. Filbert says Weber, the administrator, has closed the store, and is diverting business at a loss to the partnership. The stock is appraised at $968.89. The bill says the surplus accumulations on deposit amounted to $2,233.30, besides $137 in cash at the store. Mr. Weber left no will.

A Most Enjoyable Ball

In some mysterious way the Arrangement Committee for the fifth annual ball of the Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association, which was held in Terrace Garden, New York, Sunday evening, managed to bring together a wonderful crowd of beautiful young women.

The ball started on scheduled time to the strains of "Missouri Waltz." At one time there were more than one hundred and fifty couples on the floor, and all appeared to be happy. Louis S. Beller and Miss Dorothy Gompers led the march. A few soldiers, including Sergt. Louis Galeshekow, lent a military aspect to the affair.

The Arrangement Committee, represented by Ike Ochs, chairman, and Sigmund Weil, assistant, kept things in harmony, and Osias Abramowitz, chairman, and Adolph Hirtenstein, as the Reception Committee, made an excellent record in receiving the guests. Louis S. Beller was the floor manager, having for his assitant, A. Pollack. I. N. Naaskoff and Otto S. Jonas were the floor committee.

Among the more prominent persons at the ball were: Mr. and Mrs. Lew Gompers and family; Mr. and Mrs. Ike Ochs; Mr. and Mrs. A. Hirtenstein; Fred White; Sig. Weil; O. Abramowitz; Miss Ruth Strauss; Joe Strauss; Mortimer Strauss; Miss Lillian Rosenstraus; Mr. and Mrs. Carlos Garcia; Mr. and Mrs. Wohlgmuth; Private Sol Weil; Mr. and Mrs. Weinberg; Mr. and Mrs. Matason; Miss Guggenheim and her brother Jerry; Mr. and Mrs. Weiss and family; Mr. and Mrs. Neuwirth and family; Irara Zeretsky; Dave Kaplan; Will Simon; Miss Essie Davis; Milton Neinroth; Max Neuwirth; Miss Esther Neinroth and Ludwig Weil.

Staggerin' outa th' cellar with two buckets f actual anthracite, released from th' em-argo for Stubb & Ash, wholesale an' retail obacconuists, Benny set 'em down on th' oor, back o' th' Acorn cylinder-stove, an' na dead-line wi' th' cracked cuspidor an' ent poker.

"Oh, boy!" panted Benny wipin' his paws n his pants, "them's six Grand street tons -coal I've donkey-engined up th' stairs since A. X. this mawnin'! Gee-ja! An' on th' andle of th' shovel isa don't-yer-fergit-it ag, insistin' yuh mus' 'Help Win th' War by avin' That Extra Shovelful'!"

"Yea, yea," nodded Benny, tossin' a-hull cuttle o' spotless Scranton inter th' fiery-eeder, an' openin' up each an' every damper er mor' breeze, "yea, this yere ole day-in-August stuff goes good wi' th' 'mometer howin' signs o'layin' under th' egg-mark till after Easter!"

"But perk up! Things ain't so worse as they eem! Here's a-feller buys som' stogies while I was shakin' down th' cinders, an' he ands muh a two-by-four visitin' card wit' -quarter inch deep black border all 'round t. In that cheerful frame-up I reads: 'Don't Quit Till the Motor Hearse Comes to the Door!' This is th' advice o' Bill Kehl, who ays he comes from 10th an' Diamond,—yeh, hat's right—it's Philadelphia! So I guess if hey're that exhilarated by pure joy in Cinco City we-uns 'way back here in th' black-bush an keep our catpaws on th' ice 'til th' fric-ion-plug grabs th' ground which mus' still e som'where underneath!"

Just then Paul Wessell came in. "Sparrows flying close to the ground," observed Paul, encouragingly, "means colder weather tonight. Tho, when Owls and White Owls are coming North as fast as they are right now, I betcher business will be better.

"What's more," pursued Paul, "I've got to go to Saugerties on my River trip, so it'll probably be warmer for a few days anyway. People down there must have Robert Burns, Capadura, and the Owls, you know, so it's up to me to brave the arctic bergs along the West Shore for a call on the trade. And, say, have you seen our nifty little box price cards for our General Cigar Co.'s brands? Take a look, then, at this Owl million-dollar-smoke design. Also at this Bobby Burns card, edged with the famous plaid of the clan, and the blooming thistle of the Scottish moor."

Folk who see Big Bill Lakin hustlin' 'round the Capitol District with a long stride an' a swift one, think he's allus bin strong an' wide like the Waitt & Bond factory.

Such people can't remember the day Big Bill didn't know a Totem from a Blackstone, a panetela from a 'fecto. For they didn't know Bill, perhaps, when he went to get that job at the great New England cotton mill.

'Course, that was some time ago. Just how long Bill himself hates to tell. But you can get a fair idee yourself, becuz, at that day, common cotton wasn't sellin' for no 30c the pound.

An' if you'll take a squint at figgers, you'll instantly burroughsize that when Bill went a-huntin' for his first weekly wage the ten Southern cotton States didn't produce no seven million bales for Fall River an' other such mills.

What's more, that tremblin' tiny Texas State didn't grow no half-million bales a year, nuther, when Bill was a kid. While Geor-jah, sah, was a State with a reputation for raisin' considerably less than the two-hunnerd thousand bales she gins annually now, sah.

So, you see, that was at a time when the world was young. An' Bill, cap in hand, approached his boss for a place in the lint as bobbin tender.

Every other boy on the yob appeared to be some sort of a relative to Joan of Arc. For they chattered away, all day long, in that there a la Francaise.

Now this got on Bill's nerves after a while. And he said so. Which, quite natcherly, jarred the Jeans an' Leons to the point of an affaire d'honneur a la outrance.

Well, Bill hitched up his pants, pulled in 'nother notch in his belt, spat on his hands, an' sailed in. To make the affaire of honor a fight to the death these allies of Bill's sicked a new chap on 'im every morning, noon, an' night. Also, sometimes inb'tween.

After a certain time, this got very tiresome to Bill. An' he said so again, emphasizin' his remarks by hurlin' a bobbin-box at his nearest bon ami.

This particular bobbin-box, however, missed fire, as some sure shots frequently do. So, when the resulting damage was repaired, Bill left that place, just as a coup d'etat.

But Bill Lakin had learned one thing. An' that was French. He could an' can talk it, sing it, swear it. Yes, yes, anything Bill can't do in French, entre nous, isn't doable in that belles literature.

Ask Joe Michand. He now knows Bill to be a Yankee, tho the very first time he ever met Bill he told him to his face he lied if he said he wasn't a nobleman of France.

So Bill must talk pretty good stuff, else Joe would hardly have been so pleased that he came across with such an order for Waitt & Bond cigars that the factory folk thought Joe must surely be a big jobber.

Because Bill is big, his orders are big, an' his customers, therefore, must measure up comparatively. Otherwise, Bill'll talk Sea-Island French to them, gingerin' 'em to the point of gittin' the bulk of the Blackstone business lyin' 'round loose in every town here.

"In Albany, our brands will be stocked by the Bruce MacDonald Co., 110 State street," announced Fred Bailey, of the New York and Key West firm of M. Perez Co. "They will wholesale and retail the Pinzon brand. Also the Van Cleve, as at present, in addition to having control of one private label outright.

"While in Utica," went on the gentlemanly Fred, "I sold Pete Wald 20,000 Van Cleves. And in Buffalo, I laid down 50,000 more. So in due time I expect the Capitol District will do as well thru the agency of the MacDonald account."

Buttoned up to the chin, and talking as tho he had just landed the job of bass singer at the Metropolitan, leaf dealer Uncle Gib Cohn paused to remark:

"I'm going into the postoffice row just to see about some revenue matters upstairs with the Collector. My customers frequently call upon me to help them out with Internal Revenue details, simply because, I suppose, of my former years in the office and some familiarity with the work."

"Our lease for the State & Broadway store in Albany has just been renewed," said dealer J. W. Stevens. "So we'll probably round out our fiftieth year in the tobacco business next season, having started originally in the leaf business in 1869. Since that time we have engaged in cigar and tobacco manufacturing, jobbing and retailing. Manager Shaxby has been with us about forty years."

There's very little time to monkey about this—you must hurry. Because, if you expect to have your name inscribed on one of them there six foot panels, you'd better be about it right off.

Only 150 men'll be mentioned. And only those who obtain 51 of the 100 votes cast by the electors of the University of New York. Then, if you're 'lected, your full name an' address, with all the fac's 'bout your wife's mother's folk, will be put up there in the $250,000 building atop University Heights. New York.

Next vote will be polled in a year or two, but, to be eligible to the Hall of Fame, you must register now. And the way to do this is to mention the matter to Carnation Bellinger.

He'll fix it for you. Yes, he'll tell the Prince Cigar Co.

That's all. Just that. Then you're in line for nomination and 'lection as the distributor of the Hall of Honor cigar. This honor eventually leads to a niche in the famed colonnade of the Hall of Fame, says Bellinger. Also, if you hurry, you'll get in as the number Pittsburgh-Heinz made famous. For there are but 56 great Americans in there now on the bronze tablets—and Bellinger is in immediate position to give you control here for the Hall of Honor brand, the first step up the terrace.

Six cents is still a pile of money to some smokers. They want nickel cigars. So that's why H. Heck & Son, the Albany manufacturers, have kept the Old Albany brand down to $36. It's 5c straight.

Talk about leaf tobacco prices. Sure, they've gone up. But lissen a minnit to the tale of broom corn. Bert Best talkin': "Because of the present difficult situation of the manufactured tobacco situation, I have decided to quit my job as general sales representative of the Capitol District for the L. Warnick Brown factory of Utica.

"And, to make a clean sweep of my connections with the tobacco business, I'm going back to Middleburgh to raise broom corn. This Schoharie County product has been boosted in two years from $75 to as high as $308 the ton. So I guess there's a small living in it for a man who has enjoyed Palmy Days with the tobacco business."

On Shrove Tuesday, just about the time the boys an' girls of Orleans Parish, 'way down there in Wesiana, were dustin' off their Madri Gras costumes, an' the Queen of the Carnival remarked in Creole French that tomorrow would undoubtedly be a ventose day, we got it.

Ventose or windy, have it your own way. Tho the signs of the zodiac, sometimes styled the Highway of Heaven, must have got all tangled up. And, in the effort to separate Aries, Taurus, an' Gemini, the ram, the bull, an' the twins evidently started something which struck the Capitol District head on.

For, no sooner had we got the goat of Capricornus, who makes these signs of winter, than our latitude of 42 degrees plus North by the longitude of 4:55 West, was blown by a St. Paul breeze almost to Minnesota's 102-mile-an-hour record.

Albany, as usual, shoots along on a 6 mile gait. Tho, to be honest, we have had as high as 70 miles of wind to the single hour. But this here gale of Tuesday morning last, busted other things besides paper records.

Signs came down. Hats came off. 'Brellas broke a rib or two. Some folk did even better by gettin' hurt in many fancy tumbles. And business went 'way back an' sat down to watch the pretty square an' triangle red flags flutter in the S. E. typhoon.

And they did flutter. So much so that at

Unloading Cargo At San Francisco, 1850

In 1849, Captain Charles Allen Thacher of the ship Pleiadies sailed from San Francisco across the Pacific to Manila to obtain a cargo of supplies. He returned in 1850 with provisions and some luxuries, among them Manila cigars. The voyage netted him a fortune.

Full cargoes of Manila cigars are now bringing fortunes to importers and dealers in the United States.

Record Output Promised For 1918—Retail Sales Grow Rapidly—A Street Railway Strike.

KEY WEST, February 21.—The people of Key West can't kick at the weather we are getting. Washington's Birthday will be a big day here. There will be another Red Cross benefit base ball game. This time the navy champions will cross bats with the Key West All Stars, a local aggregation of great strength. There also will be field sports events during the day. The bathing beach also will be crowded with picnickers

One thing that mars the celebration, is a lack of street car service and the merry makers will have to use jitneys or "shank's mare." The street car men are on a strike for a raise in the stipulated amount of hourly recompense, and because one of their number was discharged last week. The matter is awaiting settlement and as a result there will be no car service on the national holiday.

The S. & F. Fleitas Ca. reports many orders on hand for a long time to come. They are increasing the popularity of their famous Homerica brand, and the new sizes and shapes in which it is now being sold seem to be more desirable than the old.

The Havana American Co. is working a large force. This factory is out to break all previous records for yearly output and, "By gosh, they're a goin' to do it."

The E. H. Gato Cigar Co. is having a little labor trouble in the stripping department. Some workers walked out and demanded a raise, in pay of course. But cigar makers are still at the tables working on prepared stock and the strike will be settled in a few days at the most.

The Ruy Lopez Ca. is keeping a goodly number of men busy and they are expecting to take on more men in the future. They have large orders on hand and good prospects.

Key West is chock full of service men. They sure are welcome, the more the merrier. Their presence means more profits for the retailers here. Wherever the men go they must have their smokes. Key West retail trade in cigars is increasing every week.

Sr. Enrique Pendas, manager of the M. Perez factory, returned to the city last week, from Havana where he has been for some time. Sr. Pendas is now at the factory and is well pleased with the way things are going on. The Pinzon brand is bringing in orders every day. M. Perez Co. has a full force at the tables at the present time.

In fact, all the factories are enjoying great prosperity. Key West is some little burg right now with plenty of money in circulation.

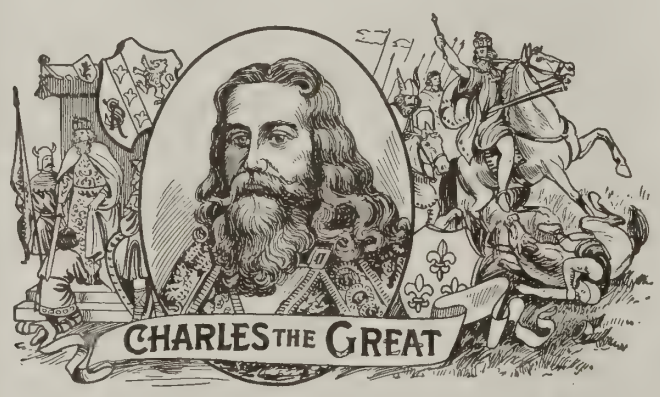
HICKORY.

WISE IS A BUSY PATRIOT.

WASHINGTON, February 25.—Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Company, is again seen doing his bit. Following a conference with officials of the United States Shipping Board he has agreed to exhibit in the branch stores all over the country posters "boosting" the shipyard volunteer reserve division of the Board. The posters are being prepared by a committee of which Charles Dana Gibson, the artist, is chairman. It is expected that the posters will be ready in the very near future.

CONSUL MAHIN'S COMMENT.

Commenting on exports from Holland to the United States, Frank W. Mahin, American consul at Amsterdam, says: "The tobacco exported from Amsterdam to the United States came hither from the Dutch East Indies. The lack of shipping facilities between Holland and its colonies changed the tobacco trade so that most of the shipments in 1917 were direct from the East Indies to the United States. It is possible that this trade may never return to Amsterdam, unless the fact that tobacco does not keep well after harvesting in the Dutch East Indies, owing to the unfavorable climate, should be more potent than the cost of the longer transport by way of Amsterdam, where the climate is favorable for keeping tobacco—one of the alleged reasons why Amsterdam became the market for Dutch East Indian tobacco."



TARZAN CONTRIBUTES TO SMOKE FUND.

Through the patriotic spirit manifested by the National Film Corporation of America, sponsors for the new film success, "Tarzan of the Apes," Our Boys In France Tobacco Fund has been enriched to the extent of $622.88. This check is given as the result of an arrangement entered into between Harry Reichenbach of the National Film Corporation and Bert Ennis of Petrova Picture Co. and McClure Pictures, who is handling the publicity for the fund.

The Hotel World reports that John W. Donahey, who was on the original staff of the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, has enlisted in the aviation section, Signal Corps of the United States Army. He has gone to Princeton, N. J., to take up a course of training in flying. Mr. Donahey was proprietor of the new Chatham Hotel, Pittsburgh, after he retired from the William Penn.

When Burglars Make Life Less Joyous

Philadelphia Cigar Dealers Agree That Something Must Be Done—A Succession of Thefts—And Scant Success Achieved in the Capture of Thieves—Signs of Spring in the Quaker City—Six-Cent Prices More Generally Adopted.

PHILADELPHIA, February 25.—At this writing it still lacks several hours of the time when the new Philadelphia association of purveyors of the fragrant weed will foregather at the Adelphia for their bi-monthly feast of buffet lunch and talk. In spite of that, we hereby prophesy that the association will determine something has got to be done about the yegg situation in this city, which is becoming serious. The week past was a lucky one for cigar dealers, only one having been robbed, excepting, of course, the M. J. Dalton Co., which always manages to have things stolen from protected packages or cases in the hands of the express company. A few days ago, however, the Dalton Co. made even a better showing. It received a case of high class goods from Havana through New York and found it shy, minus and short of about $1,200 worth of excellent smokes. The joke in this case is on the celebrated government, as the case was still in bond when some ardent smoker, untroubled with scruples, pried into it and removed a few months' supply.

The other dealer nicked by the burglars, who are having a harvest time in this city, was Meyer Barr, of 2201 Oxford street. Thieves got $72 worth of smokes from his place a few days ago. Burgling in Philadelphia, since the Mayor decided that the awful crime of having punch cards in cigar stores should be abolished and the police presumably started to turn their attention to that form of alleged gambling, has been so easy that it is reliably reported the first class yeggs are ashamed to take the money. No cop in this town would ever think of covering his beat fast enough to interfere with thieves who might be busy prying off locks here and there. Some loud yawps are expected at the meeting of the association, and dealers who failed to cover up with burglar insurance are lining up a demand for action. When that demand is brought into city hall and introduced to the well known Mayor he will not need any time to get acquainted with it. He has shaken hands with more demands in the last two years than any Mayor Philadelphia ever had, and then ushered them into a corner, where they die of inanition, whatever that is.

However, there are signs of spring in the air; also in the cigar stores. Proof that the cold weather is ended was found at two main stores this week. In the Dalton store, at 5th and Chestnut streets, the steam radiators gave an awakening grunt and started to work. All through the zero spell they were sympathetically icy and everybody shivered, but now that there is no need for heat they can't be kept down. So also at the Broad street Leach & Co. store a storm door has been put on within the last week. Maybe it is designed to block the designs of the March winds. It would be a raw deal to mention the Leach store on Broad street this week, however, without calling attention to the Tareyton window, which is a pippin—one of the catchiest seen around town in some weeks.

Nearly all the centrally located stores, as well as many of the big manufacturers here, are blossoming out with new signs, gaily decorated out in the colors of crocuses and daffodils and other Spring flowers (if the plants named are of that season). The command "seek no further" is the final line on all the new Dalton signs.

Horace H. Leach, president of the local association, who has missed the last two meetings owing to the fact that he was at his home in Baltimore, ill, is back on the job and looking better than ever.

H. M. Magen, who has chucked up his reg'lar job and opened him a store at 11th and Sansom streets, for the sale and manufacture of cigars, has a reason. Before giving that it might be well to note that he also has a nifty looking store, with up to date enclosed humidor cases and two big bulk windows that give him plenty of light for his attractive displays. We'll let him give the reason. "I figured out that if the big dealers can sell cigars at $43 a thousand and make money I can sell them at $50 a thousand and do likewise," said he. "So also I have figured out that there is a real demand for a return to the good old days of the nickel smoke. It is not that people are stingy in these flush times, although of course you find smokers who have internal hemorrhages every time they think of spending a cent. Rather, in my opinion, it is the trouble involved making change. Lots of men will buy nickel cigars because it doesn't involve carting around a lot of copper. I have had many inquiries already for my own make smokes. It will not be necessary to make them as big as base ball bats, of course."

Samuel Rosenberg, for some years bookkeeper and general office assistant for Yahn & McDonnell, will leave that connection about the first of the month and will venture into the Big Town. Business is reported buzzing at all the Y. and M. stores. Officials of the company are chuckling, now that Medical Department of the United Cigar Stores Co.

An Epitome of the Great Work It Is Doing

The medical department which the United Cigar Stores Co. maintains for the benefit of its employes in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia is seen to be growing in importance every year. This service of this department is one of the closest ties between the company and the men and women on its pay rolls. Under the general supervision of its director in New York, Dr. M. Monae-Lesser, physicians are always on call in the three cities named, attendance in case of illness or injury being free under all circumstances. Elsewhere care of the ill or injured is provided by a plan which allows employes to call their own physicians and charge the expenses to the company. All these services include hospital expenses when necessary and as well expenses for surgical operations.

As showing the work done by the United's medical department, the director reports to the Board of Directors that it treated 6,241 cases of illness in New York City and 1,038 in the Bush Terminal depot in 1917. This number did not include 3,693 cases treated by the nurse in the General Office consulting room in New York. In Chicago the cases treated for the same period numbered about 1,500. Not a single death occurred among the cases treated by the Medical Department. The cases of surgery treated numbered 434, of which 13 were important or major operations. The others were minor operations.

Diseases of all descriptions were treated. Especially satisfactory results were obtained in respect to typhoid fever, pneumonia and influenza, the latter an epidemic last summer, from which, however, the company's employes practically escaped. Careful watchfulness of any incipient cases of tuberculosis has eradicated that disease from the ranks of the company's employes. Examinations of urine, blood, sputum, etc., are made by a competent chemists, rendering possible many cases of diagnosis and proper treatment, thereby scientifically eliminating uncertainty of treatment.

The services of a competent nurse are maintained during all business hours of each day in the New York Central Office. Owing to the large number of girls employed both in the Auditing Department and Premium Stations, this, a great factor in efficiency, has thus been worked out. Many cases of customers in the Premium Station, who have become ill, have been attended. This service is of particular value, in that many of the girls employed are kept working comfortably who formerly lost one or two days. A system of periodical examinations was inaugurated some time ago and has been carefully maintained whereby those in the service of the company and particularly the officers are enabled to constantly have their physical condition under the supervision of this department. This service is of particular value in connection with diabetes and high blood pressure, etc., and is constantly being extended. Employes are enabled to come to the office or in case of disability to send for a physician and receive immediate medical aid as quickly as illness develops, the result being either no cessation of work or a quick resumption of it. The department keeps in close touch with developments in all branches of medical science. In this respect it is notable that use of vaccines in cases of influenza, pneumonia, rheumatism, coughs and colds has been highly successful.

Great care has been taken to work in harmony with all family physicians and the ethics of the medical profession have been studiously observed.

PHILADELPHIA FINDINGS

everybody's having trouble getting supplies in, over the fact that a recent order for a little matter of 165,000 smokes slid through from New York without a hitch. It must have been an accident, like the 40 cases shipped by express from New York for one Philadelphia distributor on January 24 which are still on the way.

Mahlon Newton Fox, of the Y. & M. force, one of the most widely known retail cigar salesmen in this territory, is laid up at his home with an infected hand. His condition was not serious at last reports and he is expected back on the job within a few days.

George Lewis, also of the Y. & M. force, got away to Camp Meade on Tuesday of this week.

Officials of Otto Eisenlohr & Bro., Inc., were notified this week of the election of the head of the firm as President of the T. M. A. Mr. Eisenlohr is still in Florida. He is expected to return some time in March.

Speaking of the six cent cigar, it has become more or less of an institution in this vicinity. Many stores are showing more brands at six cents than at a nickel. The same thing is true of the old time ten centers, and the 15 centers. Any old kind of an odd price is common nowadays.

Some Things Show Up Well in Chicago

And Others Don't Add to the Gayety of the Cigar Trade

CHICAGO, February 22.—Clark G. Cutler will not be connected with the preferred Havana Tobacco Co., after March 1. He will represent M. Bustillo & Co. and besides covering Chicago territory he will have a good slice of the rest of the country, south to Texas, his old stamping ground, and west to the Pacific Coast.

Wolf & Powers, who operate a retail store at Wells and Monroe streets, have encountered financial difficulties. A creditors' meeting was held Tuesday. A Tampa factory is said to be a creditor to the extent of $2,100 and several Chicago houses have quite a bit of money due.

Cigarette prices again are ascendant. Murads, Moguls and Egyptian Luxuries now cost the retail dealer $14.50 a thousand and are sold at 18 cents a box of 10. Helmars and Turkish Trophies are now $10.50, having advanced $1.60 a thousand and are sold at 13 cents straight. London Life for the present remains the same. Other brands are about to advance and all dealers are accumulating stock.

Walter Sloman "has signed up" for 1918. He will represent Berriman Brothers. The deal was closed on February 14 and Walter let it out in the form of a valentine to the trade. He is a high class salesman and will do well with his new firm.

Frank W. Bering manager of the Hotel Sherman was elected president of the Chicago Hotel Men's Association, last week.

A new offering of the Dolan Segar Shop is the La Astra Over Seas Brevas that sell for 7 cents or 4 for 25 cents. They are made by Merriam Segars, Inc. Dolan's Special and Bankers Club, two former 5 cent brands, have graduated into the 6 cent class.

The Royal Drug Co., has increased its capital stock from $15,000 to $50,000.

The Sonelli Candy Co., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500.

Schermerhorn, Inc., in several of their window displays, are showing boxes of 10 Sight Draft cigars that retail at 50 cents.

W. W. Roseboro, representing M. Bustillo, is still mingling with the Chicago trade. His brand is well placed.

Murads have been featured the past week in half page newspaper ads. The new 18 cent price is made very noticeable.

S. M. Frechie, who sells Gretchens for Louis Ash & Co., New York, made the rounds booking orders for this brand.

Bert Christian, general manager of the cigar department of Steele Wedeles & Co., is up and around again. He had quite a siege of sickness.

Harry Alces was here on his first trip for the year. He sells for Chas. S. Morris & Co. and says La Integridad and Kingdales are going bigger than ever.

Other visitors were Louis Reisenberg, representing Rosenthal Bros. and Joe Carlisle, specialist for the Mapacuba Cigar Co. Both have a host of friends in this city.

Sol Bernstein says: "Some patriotic Chicagoans are willing to give their last drop of blood to the cause, but they're d——d particular about losing the first one."

Business is not showing much life at present but with the coming of warmer weather things are sure to pick up. The credit question is causing jobbers and local manufacturers to lose a lot of sleep. Soon, probably, the dealer will have to pay his bills on a 10 day basis.

The Union Leage Club does an enormous cigar business. H. M. Stewart is the cigar manager. Several brands from C. B. Perkins Co., of Boston, get a big play and other leaders are La Venda, Union League and Boldt's Special. A full line of imported brands are carried. Cigarettes also are very important sales producers for the department.

Fred Oakes writes to Shoemaker & Co., that he is booking some fine orders for Gato and American Maids on his eastern trip. Manager Penny is booming the store trade during the absence of Boss Oakes and is showing a big increase this month over last.

Del Moro is a new offering of the National Cigar Store. Del Moros are done up in neat foil packages of 2 cigars and sell for 15 cents. They are made by Gonzales Fisher & Co., of Tampa.

Joe Loeser, the rapid change artist who accelerates Mi Lola sales, says he has had the Fox River Valley territory added to his present field of labor. He further reports that he has been given an interest in the Mi Lola cigar factory of Milwaukee. Joe don't mind a little extra work if it means business. He did wonders in the Chicago market last year and made Mi Lola a staple seller here.

Everywhere you can see Frank's pipes and cigar and cigarette holders. No other line has a better distribution here than Frank's.

Lawrence Barretts are still selling at 10 cents and sales are just as strong as ever. Steele Wedeles Co., are the jobbers and they have the brand placed in numerous stores.

J. L. Frankstine has been added to the Chicago salesforce of Harris-Schwarz & Co., Inc., to do missionary work for the Romeo & Garcia brands of mild Havanas.

A. L. Johnson is a new man behind the counter of store number 12 of Albert Breitung's chain. He formerly was with A. Schulte & Co.

Over on the west side the Le Panto has a big sale. The brand is made in Benton Harbor by the La Kurba Cigar Co.

Shoemaker & Co., have added two sizes of Armas Del Casa made by M. Sacks & Co., of New York.

Popcorn popped up to 8 cents a bag in Evanston a few days ago and dealers told pop it was the increased cost of corn and butter. Before we know it, they'll be charging a dime apiece for those "hot-roasted" double jointed spanish peanuts. There don't seem to be any end to price advances.

Before Joe Banker left the Windy City he booked some fine orders from the Hotel Sherman, the Illinois Athletic Club and a few other accounts who handle Armas Del Casa brand of Sumatra wrapped cigars.

Ruy Lopez & Co., of Key West, make the Altadena brand of clear Havanas for Albert Breitung. The brand has a big sale.

The Fair has taken on the Lord Claire cubans that retail at 5 cents. Murray, of the La Kurba Cigar Co., closed the deal.

One of the busiest men in Chicago is Harry Penny, the manager of Shoemaker & Co.'s store. Not only does he cover his regular duties as manager but also acts as free interpreter for a whole bunch of salesmen who make their headquarters at Shoemaker's.

Ernest Mac Kenzie says, "we don't know who put the germ in Germany or who put the hell in Wilhelm, but we do know that when the 'Yankee Cough Drops' get in their work they will knock it out."

James Craig is now selling Condax cigarettes. Previously he was connected with the cigar department of the Illinois Athletic Club.

Al Johnson, who left the Rameses salesforce a few weeks back, will play a return engagement. He has signed with the Schinasi branch of the Tobacco Products Co., a[nd] will boost Naturals in Chicago.

The Gil Barnard and Chicago Motor Cl[ub] brands are well placed throughout the tow[ns] near Chicago. In Gary, South Chicago, Har[vey] mond and Whiting they have many friend[s].

Do you smoke? Well, if you do, of cour[se] you are not under suspicion, but someboc[y] stole $6,000 worth of cigarettes in twen[ty] big cases from a car in the Pennsylvan[ia] railroad yards at South Chicago a few da[ys] ago. Just backed up a truck and took the[m] all. "Gotta Match."

Albert Breitung got in a 25,000 case [of] Rameses last week (that is the case and th[e] time containers). Somebody got way wit[h] the entire lot of cigarettes in the small pack[-] ages. Another firm received a case of sam[e] that had only 650 left in it. Losses by the[ft] are daily happenings and the railroads ar[e] going to pay out a lot of money in settle[-] ment of claims.

Business is always good at the 3 stores [of] the Brown Cigar Stores Co., Inc. M. Brown who has charge of the main store at 51 North Clark street, says he can't find an fault with trade.

L. C. Widdock, 116 North La Salle street has added the Club Quality and Romeo Garcia Club Life brands of little cigars.

ABOUT 400 ON STRIKE

At the Nashville Tobacco Works—Employes Wante[d] Wage Increase Comparable With Pay In Munition Factory.

When demands for an increase in wages were rejected, almost 400 employes of the Nashville Tobacco Works walked out Tuesday a week ago. Officials of the company plan to reopen as soon as sufficient negro help is recruited to supplant both white and black striking employes, according to an announcement made by C. F. Britton, general manager of the company. It is expected however, that the plant will be idle for some time in view of the disturbed labor conditions. No disturbance attended the strike.

While the strike has been agitated for some time no formal action was taken until Tuesday morning, when a committee composed of Harry Hazel, chairman; W. H. Morrow, Tom Gray and Gene Dillard presented to Manager Britton the demands of the employes. Mr. Britton was given until noon Tuesday to accede to the terms of the committee. Upon his refusal the strike occurred.

Both parties to the controversy insist that there will be no deviation from their present position.

Twist makers who at present receive 22½ cents an hour for 14-size and 35 cents for 9½ twists demanded 24 cents and 42½ respectively. Stemmers sought an increase of one-half cent per pound for natural leaf tobacco and 1 cent advance on sweet leaf.

Laborers who were paid $2 daily demanded $2.50.

This plant, at Nashville, which is a subsidiary of the American Tobacco Co., manufactures approximately 3,000,000 pounds per annum of twist, plug and smoking tobacco from raw leaf.

Of the 375 striking employes 100 are white, the remainder being colored, many of whom are women.

A representative of the strikers stated that the American Tobacco Company in many of its 410 factories had increased its pay scale from 10 to 30 per cent, but no advances had been made at the Nashville plant. It was intimated that the strike resulted not so much from ulterior high offers for labor but by reason of the increased cost of living, brought to a focus by the attractive pay at the powder plant.

EL ROI-TAN

OVER THE TOP

ROI-TAN goes "over the top" of the case faster than any other brand. Year after year ROI-TAN holds the world's championship for quality and popularity.

Live dealers feature ROI-TAN because it spells big volume and quick turnover. From the standpoint of both dealer and smoker ROI-TAN "THE PERFECT CIGAR" is the one best bet—now, tomorrow, always.

TO SERVE THE NATION

Representatives of Capital and Labor Confer at Washington to Prevent Further Strikes During the War.

WASHINGTON, February 25.—Capital and labor to-day began negotiations to bring about a national industrial policy during the war.

In the office of Secretary of Labor Wilson, ten representatives of workers and employers considered an agreement to last until peace is declared. Five speak for capital and five represent labor.

The interests of the people are represented by two additional members of the conference selected by the others. There were protests from the Socialists, who had no representatives, but it was held these workers would be properly taken care of under the general agreement reached.

The need of a national policy toward labor has long been advocated to improve the workers' spirit in the war and increase to maximum the efficiency and production of the men. The causes for general unrest among the workers have been outlined as follows:

Absence of a stable and standard wage.

Too much profiteering by war industries and retailers.

Absence of "idleness insurance"—assured wages for workers forced to idleness by lack of supplies, etc.

The open and closed shops, wages and hours must also be threshed out under the general programme to be agreed upon.

Other questions to be brought before the conference in the order of their relative importance are:

Strikes and lockouts; piecework and price-fixing methods; methods eliminating improper restrictions on the output of war materials regardless of cause; practice to govern dilution of labor; admission of union agents to plants; methods of promptly adjusting disputes at their sources through boards containing equal representation of employers and employees, and right of workers to organize.

The proposition to adjust all strikes at their source through equal representation of the opposing sides is broached as a means of ending all strikes at their inception and making the United States a "strikeless country."

On the results of the conferences may hinge to a great extent the fate of the United States in the war. The men who will decide the questions are:

For the National Industrial Conference Board—Loyall A. Osborn, New York city; B. L. Warden, New York city; W. H. Vandervoort, East Moline, Ill.; W. F. Loree, New York; C. Edwin Michael, Roanoke, Va.

For the American Federation of Labor—Rank J. Hayes, Indianapolis; William L. Hutcheson, Indianapolis; J. A. Franklin, Kansas City, Kans.; Victor Clander, Chicago; T. A. Rickert, Chicago.

SMOKING ON STREET CARS IN SEATTLE.

While making it plain that he looked to the officials of the Puget Sound Traction, Light & Power Co. for the enforcement of his decree of October, 1914, prohibiting smoking upon street cars, Superior Judge Everett Smith on Friday, February 8, told John Mills Day, attorney and seeker after an order punishing General Manager Arthur L. Kempster for contempt of court, that in these war times toleration should be used and that an evasion of the court order before 8 o'clock in the morning and after 6 o'clock in the evening would not be altogether contemptuous.

"I feel that it may be asking too much of the company to enforce the decree during the early morning and late evening hours of traffic," said Judge Smith. "I feel that to enforce it would create disorder that would be more objectionable to the public than the temporary discomfort of the smoke.

"If 90 per cent of the men in the car wanted to smoke and did so it would be physically impossible for the car crew to eject them. The conductor's only remedy would be to stop the car and refuse to transport the smokers further. This would mean that the cars would pile up and thousands upon thousands of persons inconvenienced.

"I feel under an exigency of this sort that the company is right to leave it to the respect of decent people for each other. These early workers are mostly married men and have respect for women. I think it safe to leave it with them."—Smoke.

RESTRICTING TOBACCO ACREAGE.

WASHINGTON, February 25.—Senators and Representatives from Connecticut are receiving petitions from the New England Tobacco Growers Association requesting that the Federal Government restrict the tobacco acreage in order that foodstuffs may be planted this year.

It seems that the Woman's Committee of the Connecticut State Council of National Defense requested the New England association to restrict their acreage of tobacco.

At a meeting a week or so ago in Hartford, Conn., the tobacco growers agreed to do this. They also passed a resolution at the same meeting calling upon the Federal Government to request tobacco growers in other states to do the same thing. Also that the importation of tobacco be restricted to a certain extent. It is understood that some of the Congressmen intend to take the matter up with the proper officials.

Output and Profits in Tampa Will Be Larger

Cigar Manufacturers Believe That 1918 Will Be a Better Year—Jim Burns Hasn't Time to Be Sick—Banquet of Clear Havana Manufacturers Was Postponed —Criticism of the Tampa-Havana Service — Lozano Factory Reports Excellent Business

TAMPA, Fla., February 23.—A. L. Cuesta and family have returned from a stay of several days in Cuba, where Mr. Cuesta looked after his tobacco interests.

Erroneous was the report published last week that Jim Burns, the well known cigar man, was ill. The gentleman ill at the Elk's Club was a Mr. Burris and his name, as it appeared on the register, was taken for that of Mr. Burns. "These newspaper men, by publishing stories of my illness, will have my creditors down on me like a thousand tons of brick," said Mr. Burns. "I'm not ill, haven't time to become ill and don't intend to get ill."

Godfrey S. Mahn, a well known Philadelphia cigar dealer, was in the city this week. He went to Havana and will return north via the east coast resorts.

R. G. Hester, at one time head of the local factories of the Havana-American company, but now a successful real estate dealer in North Carolina, is greeting Tampa friends on one of his occasional visits to the city.

The banquet of the Clear Havana Cigar Manufacturers' association, which was to have been held Wednesday in honor of Chairman T. Ed Bryan and Secretary L. P. Dickie of the board of trade, whose services to the industry have been very valuable, was postponed to Wednesday of next week on account of the entertainment of Gov. Sidney J. Catts by the Rotary Club, which was a most interesting function.

Sol Gans, the veteran leaf dealer of New York, was among the visitors in the city this week.

Criticism of the Tampa-Havana service, resulting from the necessity of transferring all shipments at Key West since the sinking of the Oilivette off the coast of Cuba, continues to grow in volume. The situation is a most unsatisfactory one, yet, because it is difficult to purchase steamships while the war is on, it is hard to provide a remedy right away.

Jose Lozano, of the F. Lozano factory, states that the year is beginning with unusually good business. The old established Lozano brands have been increasing in popularity for a number of years.

Shipments of cigars continue to hold up at a pleasing rate, and it is daily becoming more evident that the record of the present year will surpass that of 1917 in volume, also in profits, owing to the increase in prices made effective by many manufacturers.

RECORD BREAKING SALES IN MADISON.

MADISON, Ind., February 21.—Another record-breaking tobacco sale was held at the four loose leaf tobacco warehouses of Madison, Wednesday, as follows: W. H. Snook & Co., 41,575 pounds for $9,774.67, average, $23.51; Farmers, 61,385 pounds for $13,381.74, average, $21.70; Planters, 106,980 pounds for $26,302.03, average, $24.57; People's, 28,200 pounds for $7,119.12, average, $25.24. The total day's sale amounted to 238,140 pounds, for $56,302.56, with an average of $23.08. The condition of the offerings was generally good, but common tobacco still constitutes the greater part of the sales. Prices on all grades of common are gradually getting better, while the fine tobacco and good reds are selling from $2 to $8 higher than in January. The market is flooded with tobacco this week, and many wagons stand two days before they are unloaded. All tobacco now being offered comes from Indiana farmers, and when navigation is opened on the Ohio river the Kentucy tobacco will predominate, and make the market stronger. All sellers Tuesday, were well satisfied with prices obtained, which run from $9 for trash to $52 a hundred for fine grades.

ROBERT McGINNIS PASSES.

Robert McGinnis, a retired tobacco merchant of New York, died at his home in Sound Beach, Conn., Saturday. He was born sixty-nine years ago in Oliver street, New York city. He was graduated from the Christian Brothers College and the College of the City of New York. As a young man he became associated with the firm of Buchanan & Lyall, in which concern he rose to the post of manager and won the reputation of a tobacco expert. He retired fifteen years ago. For thirty years Mr. McGinnis had lived at Sound Beach. He contributed liberally to New York charities, was president of the St. Vincent de Paul Association, vice-president of the Planet Mills, one of the founders of the Xavier Association and Catholic Club, director of the Guild of the Infant Saviour, and a member of the Downtown and Delmonico Clubs in New York.

Not Enough Drying Sheds in Santa Clara

Is the Report Now Concerning the Remedios Crop—Which Promises to Be Both Big and Good—Censorship and Shipping Permits—Considerable Leaf Is Being Bought in Havana for Shipment to South America—Factories Not Complaining

HAVANA, February 22.—President Menocal has issued a proclamation, directing that all foreign correspondence be subject to censorship.

Through press cables comes news that in future all importations, as well as exportations, are subject to permission, to be granted by the War Board at Washington, to the importer, or exporter, and in consequence thereof the Tampa and Key-West lines refused to accept any tobacco shipments from Havana, unless the exporter here could produce a permit, from the War Board at Washington. So far, the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Line has accepted all cases of cigars and packages (bales, barrels and packs) of leaf tobacco. For all countries other than the United States, it has been customary for some time to exact a permit, from our National Defense Board, before the goods could be taken on board of the steamer. It causes a delay in the despatch of goods, and particularly in the beginning it happened, where the exporter did not get the permit in time, he lost his chance to forward goods on the steamer, but at present matters are working smoother, and the delay does not amount to more than 3 days, as a rule.

The leaf market, during the past week, continued fairly active. The heaviest demand came from the South American republics which, despite all existing difficulties, high cost of the leaf, scarce tonnage and exorbitant rates, as well as marine insurance and extra war risk, do not seem to have exhausted their buying capacity. In fact, if the South Americans had not lifted the market so much, on the first capaduras of Remedios, we might not have seen such high figures this winter. As the coming crop of Remedios promises to be very large, there will be enough for all parties concerned, and probably leave a surplus.

Sales during the past week totalled 5,419 bales, viz.: Vuelta Abajo and Semi Vuelta, 2,387 bales; Partido, 1,168; and Remedios, 1,864 bales.

Buyers were: Americans, 1,420; exporters to the Argentine Republic, 1,769; to Uruguay, 275; to Chile, 881; to Great Britain, 160; and local manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes, 914 bales.

As there was no Ward Line steamer from here to New York, there were no exports of cigars, or leaf tobacco, on February 9.

Exports of leaf tobacco, from the port of Havana, for the week ending February 11, only totaled 563 bales, which were all shipped by the S. S. Miami, to Tampa.

Crop exports are still uncertain, so far as Vuelta Abajo is concerned, but the news from Santa Clara province is more cheerful every day. It is said now, that there may not be enough drying sheds to hold all of the crop. The quality is declared to be good.

Leaf buyers arriving were: Enrique Pendas, a Vice-President of the Havana-American Company; Angel L. Cuesta, Sr., of Cuesta, Rey & Co., and Manuel Alvarez, of the Porto Rican-American Co. There returned from Spain, by the S. S. Reina Maria Cristina, Eduardo Gonzales and Enrique Gonzales, both of the house of Sobrinos de A. Gonzales; and Saturino Miguel, of Lozano & Miguel.

The new representative for the United States and Canada, of the Belinda factory, N. E. Nichols, arrived last week from New York, and returns today to his headquarters in New York, after a conference concerning the future campaign.

The prominent buyers were: Walter Sutter & Co., 963 bales; Por Larrañaga, 800; Leslie Pantin, 750; and the American Cigar Co., 643 bales of leaf tobacco.

Among the sellers were: Herrera, Calmet & Co., 1,151; Leon & Delgado, 590; F. Ezquerro, 450; Tomas Benitez Leon, 300; and Suarez Hermanos, 290 bales.

Romeo y Julieta continues as busy as ever in filling orders for Great Britain, United States, South America, South Africa, and in fact for all countries which are consuming our cigars.

Partagas is no less busy executing orders for all of the above named countries, as well as for the home demand.

Punch is working as steadily, being well supplied with good substantial regalia size orders.

Hoyo de Monterrey, while not as busy for the American market as during the holiday season, nevertheless has fair orders from the States and elsewhere.

The Eden factory, Por Larrañaga, Belinda, and Ramon Allones are all doing a fair trade.

Benoit Wasserman cabled to one of his friends here, that he was prevented from leaving last Saturday, but might come later.

"Business as Usual" Encourages Boston

BOSTON, February 25.—"Business as usual" is the slogan to-day, from Maine to Connecticut. New England Fuel Administrator Storrow, in announcing last week that it had been decided to abolish the Garfield Holidays said that "the advancing season has brought us, we think, to the point where conditions are causing discomfort rather than danger to the householder, and this, we think, has removed the strongest reason for continuing the fuelless Mondays."

This, of course, means that the Tuesday ban on theatres is removed.

Another of the important reasons for the removal of the Monday holidays is the fact that last week when the adjoining States were allowed to continue six days, while New England was operating upon only five, a flow of labor was started from the industrial plants in many of the States.

This month, with a number of holidays, and shorter hours of closing, makes February average down to about fifteen working days.

Jobbers here are yelling for money from the retailers, but the poor retailers can't give up what they failed to get, so February will go down into history as one of the quietest months the retail cigar business in New England ever knew.

Prices of cigarettes have advanced about one dollar per thousand. This means another change in retail prices, and I was informed yesterday by a prominent retailer that all new prices will go into effect on cigarettes, and little cigars, the first of March. What will be done on the popular New England brands is a question. A number of stores are now selling such cigars for ten cents straight, but in the War Zone the cut-rate stores are offering three for a quarter.

Hi Hammer, representing Corral-Wodiska y Ca., was with us recently. Hi got a nice bunch of business in this town. They all say he has some of the best Clear Havana goods now on sale.

There has been a shortage of Copenhagen Snuff here during the past two or three weeks.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Dolly Madison Cigar has increased in price to the retailer, E. E. Steeves, the New England representative of the brand says that the sales show big increases. Dolly Madison is now handled by some of the biggest jobbers in New England.

Marie Antoinette is featured in a variety of sizes at the cigar stand at the South Station. The Marie Antoinette also obtains favor in some of the leading clubs in Boston.

Charles B. Perkins, of C. B. Perkins & Co., is in New York City this week.

Claude Turner, representing Salvador-Rodriguez, is in the city this week, calling on the jobbers. Cobb, Bates & Yerxa, the Summer street retailers and jobbers, have handled Charles the Great successfully for a number of years.

Cigar Makers' Union 97 is endeavoring to raise $10,000 to send cigars, cigarettes and tobacco to U. S. soldiers in France. The campaign is progressing favorably and it is promised that the entire sum soon will be subscribed.

William Ahearn, who resigned as manager of the cigar department of G. W. Armstrong, Dining Room & News Co., has passed the examinations for ensign in the United States Navy. "Bill" served for a short time on the Training Ship Ranger, and at the outbreak of the war took a special course at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and was appointed on the Merchants' Marine Service, making several trips abroad.

Wisconsin Notes

EDGERTON, Wis., February 22.—Another brief casing spell ushered in with a heavy fog early in the week has furnished an opportunity for growers to clean out their sheds and strip the balance of the crop. The condition of the country roads has made it difficult to proceed with the deliveries to any great extent and the inability to get cars at interior points for transshipment has further delayed the work. This has compelled packers to secure temporary storage when receiving has occurred outside of packing points, so receiving is proceeding slowly. Zero weather has again interfered with the work of stripping in the country for a time.

Carload shipments out of storage to eastern factories are not yet accepted to eastern points owing to the railroad congestion.

The Spitzner warehouse began the season's work of packing this week, employing about fifty hands.

J. A. Jenson left for Ohio Sunday evening to look after business connected with the putting up of a packing of tobacco at Dayton.

A. E. Thoreson, a large tobacco grower of Beloit, was in town Wednesday making a settlement for his 14-acre crop sold to the Otto Eisenlohr & Bro. firm at 25&5c.

R. L. Henry, of New York, and Mr. Dart, of Richmond, Va., both with the P. Lorillard Co., have visited the Wisconsin headquarters of the firm this week.—Edgerton Reporter.

The Wellington is made of genuine French Briar, seasoned by our own special process. It breaks-in sweet and mellow. The bowl is guaranteed against cracking or burning through. The "well" catches the moisture as well as all stray crumbs of tobacco. Any tobacco tastes better in a Wellington.

W. D. C. Advertising Campaign 1917-1918

W. D. C. advertisements are now appearing in "The Saturday Evening Post," "Literary Digest," "Collier's Weekly," Railroad Men's Magazine," "Country Gentleman," "Hoard's Dairyman," "Breeder's Gazette," "Army and Navy Journal," and in many college publications.

The campaign will run for nine whole months. Generous space is being used in all mediums—all half pages and quarter pages. More than four million people will read these W. D. C. advertisements in the magazines alone.

Another big Wellington advertising campaign is now running in the Canadian newspapers.

The pipes of all nations are introduced and illustrated in the magazine advertisements—the Peace Pipe of the Indian—the Hooka of the Turk—the old Church Warden of the pioneers—the Whalebone of the Esquimaux, etc.

Watch for these W.D.C. Wellington advertisements in the magazines—cut them out and paste them in your windows.

Go over your stock and see that you have a full line of W. D. C. pipes—feature the Wellington in your counter displays—cash in on this big country-covering W. D. C. advertising campaign.

Don't let another season go by without carrying a full line of W. D. C. pipes—the Wellington in particular. Tie up with the largest pipe manufacturer in America and your pipe business will grow in a way you never thought possible.

Gladly will we send you further information on request.

SHIPPING CONDITIONS

WASHINGTON, February 21.—Cable advices on government requirements, according to word reaching officials here, space for commercial cargo to English ports is inadequate. In British steamers no space is available. American steamers have a small amount of space which is assigned to small lots of essential commodities. Charters of neutral tramp steamers are under negotiation, but are difficult of consummation.

Space is entirely controlled by the French Commission to French ports, which authorizes shipment only of essential commodities or of government cargo. Space is obtainable for measurement cargo, to Italian ports, but is scarce for dead-weight material, of which there is more offered than steamers can handle.

The situation is reported as unchanged to Greek ports, there being no ships immediately in view. Greek liners can accept only such cargo as is authorized from Athens. Conditions are somewhat better to Switzerland. A recent steamer for Catte has taken away a large quantity of cargo which had accumulated, and a further steamer to that port is under negotiation. Conditions remain unchanged to Holland and Scandinavian countries. Rates are reported steady to South American ports.

MANILA TRADE GROWS.

WASHINGTON, February 21.—Cable advices just received by the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department state that the total imports into the Philippines for the calendar year 1917 amounted to $65,796,074. This was the largest value ever recorded in the trade of the islands, and exceeded by twenty million dollars the low level of 1916. The cotton trade reached remarkably high values and was the leading factor in the large increase, while iron and steel recovered in a measure from the reduced figures heretofore prevailing in the war period. Though import quantities were in a number of instances larger than in the previous year, soaring prices were a conspicuous element in the exceptionally large total.

The export trade in 1917 under war prices and increased production was even more phenomenally large, the total of $95,604,307 being $26,000,000 more than the already high record established in 1916. Of this increase $20,000,000 was in the single item of Manila hemp, which dominated the islands' export trade as never before and represented practically half the total value for the year. High prices stimulated production, and the quantity exported increased from 135,000 long tons in 1916 to 167,000 in 1917, closely approximating the largest ever recorded. Shipments to the United States amounted to 94,000 tons. Exports of coconut oil almost trebled in quantity and assumed new importance, ranking next in value to hemp and sugar among leading exports, though shipments of copra—the raw material for manufacture—were also larger than in 1916. Exports of sugar amounted to 203,000 long tons, a decline of a 130,000 tons from the unprecedented output of 1916, while shipments of cigars greatly increased owing to the growing American demand.

The diversion of Philippine trade to the United States was a feature of the year's returns, 57 per cent. of the value of all imports being of American origin while 66 per cent. of all exports were to the United States, in comparison with 50 per cent. of imports and 51 per cent. of exports in the previous year.

LIBERTY LOAN ESSAY CONTEST.

The National Committee of Patriotic Societies during the Second Liberty Loan campaign instituted a prize essay contest on the subject, "There should be a Liberty Bond in every home."

More than three thousand essays were submitted and the first prize, a Fifty dollar Liberty Loan Bond, was awarded to Morris Wolf, of the Business High School, Washington, D. C. Other contestant schools ranking high in order of excellence were the Dunbar High School of Washington, the Joliet (Ill.) High School, the McKinley Manual Training School of Washington, the Gilman School, Roland Park, Md., the Northwestern Military Academy, Wisconsin, the Deerfield High School of Highland Park, Ill., the Eastern High School of Washington, and the Hindman Settlement School of Kentucky.

The essays were limited to 600 words and every school competing was required to have a campaign for the sale of Liberty Bonds. The total sale of bonds resulting from these campaigns went into the millions. The Gilman Country School of Maryland led the list, purchasing $60,000 worth of bonds.

The National Committee of Patriotic Societies, which has its headquarters in Washington, will hold a similar contest during the Third Liberty Loan campaign and hopes to have every high school in the United States competing.

Excerpts From Col. Rafferty's Report

Relative to the U. S. Market for Manila Cigars and Philippine Leaf Tobacco

"A year ago the Manila cigar was generally known as a two-for-a-nickel cigar, and a good value at that price. Indeed it was a good value, as the American smokers have very quickly discovered. But its value is entirely too good and the cost too great to let it remain in the two-for-a-nickel class. It had become associated by analogy in price with the stogie, to which it is far superior. However, matters are improving as during my present journey I encountered dealers in all parts of the country selling Manila Londres at from 3 to 5 cents United States currency each, although the manufacturers were receiving prices low enough to enable the importer, jobber, and retailer to make a profit by selling them as most at three for 10 cents. The great mail order house, Montgomery, Ward & Co., of Chicago, are selling a brevas shape, quite similar to the Londres, by the box at 49c each. Other importers, jobbers, and retailers have found that the cigar is worth 5 cents to the public, and charge accordingly. This fact convinces me that no Manila cigar should be sold at such a low price as will enable it to be sold at retail at less than 5 cents, or 6 for 25 cents. Manila Londres have been extensively sold at that price and by comparison with the domestic American cigar sold at the same price, the Manila article has much to its advantage.

"Philippine leaf has had a phenomenal market in the United States during the past two years. In those sections of the country where it had been tried, barring some very musty leaf which had been put through by unscrupulous dealers in the beginning of the leaf trade, I heard words of high praise for the superior burning quality of Philippine tobacco, as well as for its agreeable aroma and its adaptability to blending with Porto Rican, Havana, and domestic leaf. The praise is not limited to Cagayan and Isabela leaf, by any means. The tobacco grown in the Provinces of La Union, Pangasinan, Cebu, and Oriental Negros has also found great favor. There appears to be developing in the United States an unlimited market for stripped, or stemmed leaf, this partially manufactured product being much preferred to the whole leaf. It is certainly to the advantage of this country to send the partially manufactured leaf, as it means the furnishing of suitable light, and profitable employment to thousands of unskilled women and youths of the Islands. It is highly desirable, therefore, that in such thickly populated districts as Cebu, La Union, and Pangasinan, and in the Cagayan Valley as well, packing and stripping establishments be opened, where can be found that favorable combination of supply of raw material and supply of labor.

"There is no doubt but what Manila cigars are arriving in better condition than they were two years ago. It was admitted on all sides that the Government had made good its guarantee by limiting the number of defective cigars exported to a very low figure, by following up the cigars after they had reached the United States and having them reconditioned when necessary at the Government's expense, and also by preventing in so far as possible the placing of cigars that become damaged by mold or beetle during the long voyage on the market. The manufacturers in most instances have shown much greater willingness to reimburse the dealers in America for losses incurred by reason of damaged cigars, while on the other hand they are protected against inordinate claims by having a Government agent in the United States to inspect the cigars. In the past the inspection work in the United States has been carried out by officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, but better to systematize the work arrangements are being made to have this duty performed by a regular agent, as provided by law, stationed in New York. While the proportion of damaged cigars has been greatly lessened, there still remains much to be done in further cutting down this item of expense and annoyance. Most of the factories in Manila can do their part, as some have in the past year, by taking greater precautions against infestation and reinfestation by the tobacco beetle. Again, more scientifically constructed drying rooms will greatly reduce the damage from mold.

"I am of the opinion that it is a mistake to pack Manila cigars 100 to the box.

"The manufacture of Manila cigars for the United States is in the hands of some twenty-two factories in Manila with branch factories in its suburbs, there being twenty-two such branches in Malabon alone, and these factories are owned and operated by Americans, Spaniards, Filipinos, Chinese, Swiss, and others."

Organizing Tobacco Workers in St. Louis

Employees of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. Said to Comprise the Largest Unit—Educating Smokers Concerning the Value of Six Cent Cigars—A Mexican Cigar and Cigarette Exhibit—Office Annex and Dining Hall Built as Annex to the Big L. & M. Factory.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., February 23.—Many smokers here do not yet understand why cigars that formerly sold for 5 cents should now be sold at 6 cents. And so, the Stickney-Hoelscher Cigar Co. has started a campaign of education to acquaint the consumer with the exact facts of the cigar situation, to inform him fully the reasons for the advance of one cent. Dr. W. A. Hoelscher, vice-president of the company, has prepared a statement of conditions, which is being distributed generally with effective results. The statement is headed, "6c. Cigars! Why?" and gives these reasons:

"Tobacco—Sumatra wrappers prior to the war, average per pound, $2.50. Last sale this year, an average of $4.50 a pound.

"An average increase of 40 cents a pound for Havana tobacco increases the cost for the tobacco alone from $7.00 to $8.00 per thousand cigars (18 to 20 pounds of leaf to the thousand).

"Connecticut shade-grown tobacco, former average, $2.25 per pound; now, $4.00.

"Porto Rican tobacco (wrappers), former average, $1.85; now, $3.25.

"Burley (Virginia) cigarette and pipe tobacco, former average, 17c per pound; now, 45c.

"Imported Turkish tobacco before the war, from 35c to $1.50 per pound (according to grade); now, $1.00 to $3.00, plus charge for freight and war-risk insurance, 60c to $1.00 a pound. Duty, 35c per pound additional.

"Labor—An average increase of $2.25 per thousand paid cigar makers for making cigars in the best factories.

"Clerical work, selling expenses, etc., all increased for like reasons.

"Boxes and Packing—Former cost of a cigar box, 6 cents; present cost, 10 cents.

"Manufacturers now charging from $4 to $5 per thousand extra for cigars packed in boxes of 25 instead of in boxes of 50. A charge seldom made before.

"Average increase in cost of packing material, 25 per cent.

"Tax = Plus Tax—Total internal revenue collected on tobacco in the United States for the past fiscal year, $103,201,592.16.

"Additional revenue levied under the new law, now in force, $70,000,000, making a total tax of $173,000,000, over 67 per cent. increase in taxes."

The general distribution of this circular is expected to result in a much better understanding among smokers.

Anthony McAndrew, of Cincinnati, president of the Tobacco Workers' International Union, has been in St. Louis for the purpose of organizing a branch among the tobacco workers of this city. He addressed a meeting Saturday afternoon, at which 700 employees of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. were said to have been enrolled. Sixty of those who paid the $1 initiation fee were girls. Most of the 4,000 tobacco workers eligible to membership are employed by Liggett & Myers. The organization will have a charter separate from the union, in existence here for the last twenty-five years and which has a membership of 300.

The next meeting of the local union will be held next Wednesday night, when officers will be elected, and a committee appointed to prepare a wage scale and schedule of working conditions for presentation to the company.

President McAndrew stated that the International organization had only 3,700 members in the United States previously and that the Liggett & Myers employees formed the largest unit ever taken in. He said that steps would be taken at once to unionize the American Tobacco Co., Richmond, Va., which has 20,000 employees; the R. J. Reynolds Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., 4,000 workers, and the companies at Durham, N. C., 3,000 employees.

Cigars and cigarettes are included in the Mexican National Industrial Exhibit now on display at the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, and which is attracting a great deal of attention. C. I. Luque, representative of the Mexican Secretary of Commerce, is in charge of the display, which is valued at $5,000.

C. Edgar Terry, who represents Bayuk Bros. in the Northwest, was in St. Louis this week, having been called here by the death of his mother. He has returned to his territory.

Arnold Tietig, of Arnold Tietig & Sons, Cincinnati, was a recent visitor in St. Louis, pointing out the superior qualities of La Siesta.

Jimmie Handler, representing J. Klorfein, was here for several days in the interest of Garcia Grande.

The Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. is completing a new office annex and large dining-room at their plant on Folsom and Tower Grover avenues. The building is two stories high and is 350 feet long by 50 feet in width, and is being built at an approximate cost of $50,000. The dining hall is for the use of the company's employees, and is considered one of the best appointed in the city. A large kitchen is attached to it.

A NEW HAVEN CONFERENCE.

A special conference was held last week between the New Haven war board, representatives of the Winchester Co., a committee of cigar manufacturers and Mayor Fitzgerald, regarding the employment of striking cigarmakers at the munition plant. The session was the result of a claim by some cigarmakers that they have been refused work at the Winchester shop and that the cigar manufacturers have sought to prevent their employment there. New Haven's cigar manufacturers are indignant at this assertion and told the war board that they had absolutely no objection to the employment of the striking cigar makers, who have been out of work for many weeks, any place they desired to work. In no way have the cigar makers tried to prevent them getting work at other lines of endeavor, the cigar manufacturers insisted. In cases they explained, where the Winchester company, following out its employment bureau system, sent a query to a cigar maker for facts concerning an applicant they simply replied truthfully that the man concerned was a cigar maker and that he was out of work at his trade because of the strike. The Winchester company, it is assumed, has not employed the cigar makers because it was feared that they yould soon leave when the cigar strike was settled. The net results has been, however, the spreading of the story that the cigar manufacturers were to blame for the strikers not getting work and the cigar manufacturers at the meeting today were prepared to give the strikers a clean slate recommendation so far as character and ability were concerned and to state that they in no way wished to keep them out of any employment they desired to enter.

The session was in no way an arbitration meeting as the phases of the strike did not enter into the purpose of the meeting, the sole purpose being the desire of the war board to know exactly what the situation was so far as the employment of the strikers at Winchester was concerned.

The strike seemed no nearer settlement than ever, at the conference. About 400 men are out.

During the past three months approximately $25,000 has been distributed throughout Wilkes County, N. C., by the Golden Belt Manufacturing Co., in payment of labor for stringing tobacco sacks.

SAN FRANCISCO CIGAR TRADE BECOMES MORE CONTENTED

Distributors Were Afraid of Drouth—Orders Dependant on Rain—In-B-Tweens Were Desired in Yokahama—Chuck in Oregon—Judell Receives a Big Shipment of T. & O. Cigars—Ehrman Bros. Report That Six Cent Sizes Are Selling Well.

San Francisco, February 20.—The tobacco trade of San Francisco is in a contented mood. Retail dealers find that their business is maintaining the even tenor of its way and the usual number of customers are spending the usual amount of money, notwithstanding the excitement over advancing prices or shrinking packages of tobacco or sizes in cigars. The distributors have been worried over the long protracted drought, which has prevailed with only two or three breaks in the dry spell since last summer. Now the rain has come in earnest, not in a rush but gentle and ample. As a consequence traveling men from all over the State are sending in much larger orders. A few days ago one of them sent in a large order to be shipped "if over an inch of rain fell before Washington's birthday." The goods were shipped today. So, one might say that the trade is in the condition of a man who has seen an exciting play, (the play of Public Sentiment as prices were adjusting themselves,) and now that the curtain has descended upon a pleasing denouement, (Good business,) sits back in contentment and says, "Let's have a smoke."

Orders reach the local distributors from all sorts of places, but one reached H. L. Judell & Co., this week from a field not often invaded from this country, and by the chance of heavy import duty it will not be invaded with the goods on this order. A gentleman in Yokohama happened to have some In-B-Tween cigars handed him by Harry Green as the latter was on his way to Manila. He liked them so well that he immediately sent the money for a large consignment of the cigars. Between the order and delivery stood an import duty of 250 per cent imposed by the Japanese government and like many another thing about cigars the deal went up in smoke and the money was returned.

J. C. Chuck, of Frankel, Gerdts & Co., left this week for Portland where he will visit with Rosenfeld, Smith, distributors for La Natividad cigar in that territory. Mr. Chuck will remain in Portland for a while working up the trade in that vicinity and later will go to Seattle, where he will spend several weeks in the city and territory adjacent to Seattle.

Monroe Falkenstein, vice president of S. Bachman & Co., has just returned from a several weeks visit in the east.

Horace Y. Kelly of Horace R. Kelly & Co., the New York Manila house has been spend- a little time in San Francisco, visiting the trade and seeing the sights.

H. L. Judell & Co., reports that they have recently received a shipment of 150,000 T. & O. cigars, of which they were in sore need. Some of the cases came through in very quick time. They have also received a shipment of 100,000 Fighting Bobs from Manila.

Milton Glass is visiting Fresno and since it began to rain in that section of the State he is sending in some fine orders. Fighting Bob is proving a winner in that section.

Alexis Ehrman of Ehrman Bros. & Co., is preparing to make a trip to New York and other eastern centers.

I. I. Hess, the Optimo man has been working up the trade in his specialty in San Francisco for several weeks. He expects to leave in a short time for the north.

Ehrman Bros. report that they have just received a much needed shipment of Optimo cigars. They find that the 6 cent cigar, especially the Philadelphia Hand Made and Havana Ribbon, are going as well as before the raise was made. There is also a good demand for the Santaella, the 5 cent cigar made by the Optimo people.

Edgeworth tobacco which has sold so long at 10 cents a package has been advanced in this market to 13 cents.

The 5 cent Bull Durham package which was formerly 7/8 ounces is now being distributed here in 3/4 ounce packages.

William Brush, a sub jobber of this city has been ill in the hospital for the past two weeks. He is reported to have improved in health and expects to be discharged from the hospital in the near future.

The cigar counter in the Chancellor hotel in this city is now presided over by Miss M. Harris. She is making friends quickly.

Beachnut gum, one of the favorite side lines of the cigar dealer, has been advanced in price to 70 cents and is hard to get.

The Valley Tobacco Co., of Fresno, which was formerly owned by Charles Brown, has been sold to Glasser Bros. of this city. They have installed Mr. Brown as manager.

Frank Muther, a cigar manufacturer and retail dealer of Santa Rosa, was in San Francisco this week visiting the trade.

The house of M. Blaskower is featuring successfully Popper's Seven Center, of E. Popper & Co., which includes an individual humidor case for boxes of 50s to stand on retailer's counter. It goes to the trade at $49.

Ed Cohn of the General Cigar Co., returned to New York recently to resume his duties as publicity man from the fountain head of publicity.

Louis Erdt, Pacific Coast representative of the Tobacco Products Corporation, has been laid up with an attack of rheumatism and recently left for Hot Springs for treatment.

GROUND GLASS IN CHEWING TOBACCO.

Says the Bisbee, Ariz., Review: "The authorities are withholding information relative to the investigation being made concerning a quantity of tobacco shipped into this city, containing a considerable percentage of ground glass. The authorities are determined to get to the bottom of the mystery and do not wish to reveal their plans until certain clues in their possession are more thoroughly worked on. The tobacco, chiefly of the chewing variety, was contained in cartons bearing a well known brand, which is believed to be a ruse to disguise its actual origin. The stuff was shipped into Phoenix on the Arizona Eastern."

Reports that persist in keeping in circulation have it that some of the wiseacres who thought they could put one over on the government by shipping anything but what they agreed to give the government are getting their cigars back from France.

The seventh annual smoker of the Chicago Greeters will be held on April 8, 1918, at the Hotel Morrison. Arrangements are now being completed by the committee, of which B. E. Wider, of the New Jackson Hotel, is the chairman, and the present expectations are that this will be the biggest and best event of its kind that has been held.

The Dry Chicago Federation, endeavoring to make the city dry this coming Spring, has employed A. S. Eastman, who helped the "wets" win the election in Ohio last year, to aid them in their fight. Since his successful campaign against prohibition in Ohio, Eastman has become "converted" and is now willing to help the "dry" campaign in Chicago.

The New York Central and the Pennsylvania lines have discontinued the practice of allowing the holder of one railroad ticket to purchase an entire section in a Pullman car, instead of one berth. Two railroad tickets, as well as two berth tickets, are now required to control a section on the cars of these lines. The custom of making Pullman reservations in advance, without advance payment, is also being done away with. Many lines are now requiring the purchase of the railroad ticket and the berth if the reservation is to be made.

HUSTLIN' 'ROUND

last both Aries an' Taurus, ram-an'-bull-like, helped Gemini, the Katzenjammer Kids, blow a particularly strong gust of blitzen against the big glass front of the corner window of the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., South Pearl and Division streets, Albany.

When the Insurance Protectives picked up the pieces a few moments later, patching the gap with a boarded canvas, there were cigars, tobaccos an' things blown somewhat aroundabout. In ten days, however, the glass men say they'll have another sheet of the same size in place for the ventose winds to get its Capricornus.

"For two whole weeks before I took up this paper selling game I stayed right there in the Fischel Paper Co. warehouse on Hudson avenue in Albany and just tore paper in little bits." So said W. J. Hare, who used to be with Thompson & Hare, the Clinton Square tobacconists.

"Yes sir," continued Hare, "I tore paper all that time just for tests of stock and feel. For you've got to get used to the weights and qualities of this material, just as you do with leaf for cigars. Since then, I've been connected with our New York office."

Ever been to Ravena? Jake Fulder has. Uh-huh, Jake went to Ravena, alright. And he called on the trade. Fact of the matter is, Jake sold some 512 cigars down there, too. Likewise, several other brand specialties for the House of S. E. Fulder, of Albany.

Well, Jake finished his business 'roundabout, then sauntered down to the railroad station. He got there about three of the clock, all set for the mid-afternoon train. Accordin' to the World Almanac this here local to Albany was due an' presentable.

"Howsumever," rasped the Station-Agent, "lots an' lots of things be due an' don't come."

So Jake waited. Right there he waited, 'longside of the nice, warm fire of the great an' good New York Central & Hudson River R. R.

Three-thirty came. So did four. Then, in proper order, four-thirty. And five. Jake sat there an' smoked, an' smoked, an' smoked. Would it be wise to strike in to Coeymans or New Baltimore, an' take a cross-country stroll down the pike to Albany?

Jake could do it. And he was just upon the point of tiein' a handkerchief over his ears an' startin' when those same ears heard sumthin'.

What! Couldn't be possibeel. That there Yardmaster surely wasn't makin' up a Special to take Jake back to North Pearl street? But som'thin' was a-comin' right up to the gangway of the lil' brown station. There was a clang an' a clatter, with a pile of sissin', an' in limped engine, tender an' cars, all covered with the white cobwebs of a frosty night.

And the very last thing the Ravena Station-Agent saw of Jake was a streak of shadow as the conductor waved a chautauqua to the engineer, an' Jake settled down in the smoker to finish the stubb of his very last sample of the 512 Aristocrats.

"How's biz?" hallooed Harry Stearns, as he passed thru town on his way to Watervliet. "I'll be back Monday next, so shove the Estabrook & Eaton Rockefeller to beat the band, and then I'll write you up for a nice little order which ought to arrive before the stock is entirely cleaned out."

You don't see 'em, do you? Even if the store floors and sidewalks are covered with boxes and bands representing the purchase of various cigars, you'll seldom find a band or an empty box of Q & Q cigars.

Why? Simply because the Quin Brothers, of Troy, who make the Q & Q, have started a voting contest. Bands and box covers count big for points, sought by many people in the Capitol District to the considerable advantage of the advertising plan.

"Mondays and Saturdays are heavy delivery days," said John King, city transport man for the Dearstyne Brothers Tobacco Co., Albany. "Many other days in the week also have frequent rushes, but you can figure every time on a large start and a flying finish to the orders of the first and the last of the week. But I'll have to hurry with that Franklin Rex Armas tank if I expect to get thru to take the last bus for Delmar."

Since Myer Azie was old enough to walk he has been connected in some capacity, with the tobacco business. First, for many years, with L. Herschberger & Son, the Albany jobbers. Then on the road for Spaulding & Merrick, now the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

And now he's goin' to leave us. That's right, Myer has sliced off a good job with the meat packing house of Armour & Co., and he will soon sell "That Ham What Am."

"Jobbers are still stocking up, prices are also going higher," reported Wilkinson, the Capitol District representative for Bennett, Sloan & Co., New York. "All my brands are now obtainable at recent quotations, but no one knows exactly how long they will stay on the sheet at the now low marks."

Down on Broadway, Albany, at the Stanwix Hall hotel, Mrs. Piper reasons the cigar stand will be much improved with the advent of early Spring and Summer travel. Conditions are now only fair.

Another lady who finds the hotel cigar trade a trifle dull right now is Mrs. Branche, who operates the New Kenmore privileges.

CIGAR DEALER DISAPPEARS.

Considerable concern has been aroused in Yarmouth, Me., during the past few days by the mysterious disappearance of Chester A. Quint, the proprietor of a cigar and confectionery store. Mr. Quint left town Tuesday morning a week ago, for a short trip to Portland, expressing the intention of being back by noon the same day. When he did not return that night, his widowed mother, Mrs. Alonzo Quint, feeling that something ill had befallen him, notified Deputy Sheriff C. W. Gerow requesting that a search be made for Quint. Up to this time no trace of the missing man has been found.

Frank E. Coblens, aged 32, formerly a city councilman and president of Frank Coblens & Co., cigar manufacturers, 221 South First street, Louisville, Ky., died last week at the Norton Memorial Infirmary. He had been ill of locomotor ataxia and oedema of the brain. He made his home at 1809 South First street. He is survived by his father, Daniel Coblens; a brother, Zach Coblens, and three sisters, Misses Lottie, Florence and Dorothy Coblens.

URGING HEALTH INSURANCE.

"Health insurance is going to come just as sure as workmen's compensation came. To us, as wage earners, there are two courses open. Either we may hold back blindly until a bill is passed which is disadvantageous and burdensome, or we may have a bill so drafted as to protect and promote the interests of organized labor." This declaration is made in a comprehensive report on workmen's health insurance, issued for general distribution among interested unions, by the committee on health of the New York State Federation of Labor, of which Commissioner James M. Lynch of the state Industrial Commission is chairman.

HUSTLIN' 'ROUND.

This house, too, will be better patronized with the coming of more agreeable weather.

"Business is some upset at this time," acknowledged Jimmie Baker, of the Directory Hotel, Albany. "It is always so at this season, however, so we hope for better times in the summer, especially at the cigar stand."

"Changes in our personnel and policies will be very few for the present," confirmed Sir Arthur W. Dixon, Bart., "as the new Falk Tobacco Co. of New York and Richmond will retain Mr. Falk as president and Mr. Hoffman in his original capacity. Brand business, both factory and private labels, will remain as previously. Our Capitol District representative, Mr. Farrell, will work with the local trade on Herbert Tareyton tobacco and cigarettes, Serene, Vintage and others.

Someone with the Union News Co. has the brainy bean of a United scout. Otherwise, how can you account for the new branch of the Union News in the Albany railroad station?

For, there it is, right at the strategic entrance to the smoking room! While the other stand is way off in the diagonally opposite corner, prominently placed against the restaurant approach and exit.

In the new stand, the Union has set aside even more space in the cases for cigars and cigarettes than is given to the business at the main location. Fixtures correspond with the marble trim of the station, wall and other woodwork in mahogany.

Everybody who saw Tom McGowan hangin' around the Ten Eyck Hotel last week thought he was flashin' with the crowd talkin' camshafts an' carburetors to the overflow of the Albany Auto Show.

Jes' like th' annimal shows, when the boys crowd close to the cages to see the foxy ones, so these older boys congregated at M. J. Canaday's cigar cases in the Ten Eyck, ramblin' along on seven cylinders, bettin' millions of dollars on just how much smoke comes out of Ford's five stacks every day, an' whether or not gas can be bought on a smileage book.

So, seein' Tom edgin' in an' out of the throng, listenin' but sayin' mighty little, why folks got to thinkin' maybe Tom would exchange a block of Anndora Cigar Co. stock for a seat in a sedan.

But no, he wouldn't. For why should he? Hadn't he just been killin' time in the pleasant companionship of the motor-nuts merely to get an opportunity for a wise-word to Canaday?

He had. And the result of the opportunity was a deal to the Ten Eyck stand on a word-to-the-wise quantity of Anndora cigars which wouldn't look numerous in plain ten-point type unless accompanied by a cut of the factory exterior, up there on Albany's Broadway, tryin' to load the goods on an auto truck never bought in the auto-show annex.

"In a place I was in the other day," related Joe McElveney, "I saw a sign like this:

"Ladiees and Jents: Smokin' not aloud heer ennymor.' And, off in a corner, a guy puffin' a cigar in flagrant violation of the rule. So I spoke to him about it. 'Oh, that's alright,' he said, 'I'm not smokin' a-loud—I'm simply smokin' quietly'!"

SPOKANE'S CIGAR SALESLADY.

"Well, I don't smoke myself," says Spokane's only woman cigar drummer, "but I can certainly recommend a good cigar.

"I tell them that a good cigar smells like plum preserves and it ought to smoke just as well. The marvel of it is the jolly smokers believe it and my recommendation makes good."

Mrs. Robert Fairley, widow of a former city commissioner, has entered upon a new vocation, and holds the distinction of being the only successful woman cigar drummer in the northwest.

After two months of actual test Mrs. Fairley has demonstrated beyond question her ability to "handle the trade" and has materially increased the business of the Charles F. Barth Company, a 15-year-old Spokane cigar firm in which she acquired an interest four months ago.

"Spokane spends $1,000,000 for smokes annually," states the hustling saleswoman, "and I'm after a quarter of it for 1918. Seems like a big sum, but the sky's the limit with me. In the two months I have been testing out the business I have found out how to sell cigars and I'm certainly going to make use of this knowledge."

For many years Mrs. Fairley has been superintendent of the fine arts and women's department at the Interstate fair, and enters her new business role as one of the best known pioneer women of the city.

"She's the best solicitor we ever had in the city," said Mr. Barth today. "I had no idea a woman could sell cigars. We had the best business for Christmas in our history and a large part of the increased trade is due to the work of Mrs. Fairley."—Spokane Chronicle.

DON'T CARRY THINGS TOO FAR.

There are some people in different parts of the country who are urging little children to "give up their candy" and their gum "to buy cigarettes for the soldiers" or to help swell the amount that is needed for buying wool for sweaters and socks.

One thing alone should stop the cry for children to give up their candy and the other things of their little child days, and that is that there is not a single American soldier who if he knew that his cigarette, sweater or his socks represented the deprivation of one single little one, would not throw it away and swear at the hardness of the hearts that could send him a cigarette or a sock at so great a cost. Our soldier boys are expecting us to make sacrifices for them, but they are not going to be a party to any misguided fanatic imposition on children to this, or to any other extent. —Tampa Tribune.

RESTRAINT AS AN ADVERTISING ASSET.

Restraint, always recognized as a desirable quality in purely literary compositions, is almost never a characteristic of advertising copy.

Yet advertising, we are told, is principally a matter of good writing.

The belief seems to prevail that in order to attract attention and get the business, the tom-tom must be sounded and the cymbals clashed.

And in the meantime Restraint goes off and hides herself in the attic.—Class.

"NEVER AGAIN"

The announcement that the "heatless Mondays," which were to have lasted until March 25, have been suspended will be welcome; but the recurrence of the necessity for suspending industry should be rendered impossible.

It is absurd that means should not be found to prevent a coal famine at points within easy reach of an abundant supply. The shortage which has proved such a burden this winter was due largely to almost unprecedented weather conditions; but measures should be adopted to make even a recurrence of these conditions powerless to interfere with a plentiful supply of coal.

The coal famine was only one manifestation of the breakdown of the transportation service at the Port.

There is no reason why rearrangements cannot be made and new facilities installed that will preclude such a breakdown next winter, or in any winter yet to come.—Bulletin of the Merchants' Association.

Bills Now Before the New York Legislature

Workmen's Compensation Act to Apply To All Employments.

(Assem. Int. No. 560, Pr. 603)
(Mr. Karlin)

To amend Sections 2 and 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Law.

The word "hazardous" is stricken out, thus making the Act apply to all "employments" specified in the various groups in Section 2, whether hazardous or not.

Employes in restaurants and in wholesale and retail establishments where five or more persons are employed are added to group 34 of employments.

The provision of existing law excluding farm laborers and domestic servants from the definition of "employe" is stricken out.

Hours of Labor for Women.

(Assem. Int. No. 434, Pr. 458)
(Mr. Link)

To amend Sections 77, 78 and 161 of the Labor Law in relation to hours of labor of women.

The amendments proposed by Mr. Link reduce the maximum hours of labor for women in factories, mercantile establishments and restaurants from nine hours to eight hours in any one day and from 54 hours to 48 hours in any one week.

Monopoly Contracts Labor Not a Commodity.

(Sen. Int. No. 433, Pr. 467)
(Mr. Wagner)

To amend the General Business Law in relation to exceptions of contracts for monopoly.

A new clause is added to Section 340, providing that the labor of a human being shall not be deemed or held to be a commodity or article of commerce.

New Sections 347 and 348 are added, excepting labor, agricultural and horticultural organizations from the prohibition against contracts for monopoly, and providing that no person shall be indicated, prosecuted or tried in any court of this State for entering into or carrying on any arrangement, agreement or combination between themselves made with a view of lessening the number of hours of labor or increasing wages or bettering the condition of workingmen, or for any act done in pursuance thereof, unless such act is in itself forbidden by law if done by a single individual.

Drugged Cigarettes Prohibited.

(Assem. Int. No. 532, Pr. 535)
(Mr. Everett)

To amend the Penal Law in relation to the adulteration of cigarettes.

Adds new Section 437a, effective September 1, 1918, making it unlawful to sell, offer or expose for sale in this State cigarettes containing any drug, other than tobacco, and providing that every manufacturer of cigarettes shall cause to be made by the Department of Farms and Markets an analysis of the ingredients of the cigarettes made by him. The result of such analysis showing the ingredients and proportion of each ingredient must be plainly marked on each box of such cigarettes.

Violation is made a felony.

DOING YOUR DAILY TWO BITS.

The first sale period for those war stamps is now gone by and the price has risen one cent each. The Government is now charging $4.13 for each five dollars that it will pay you on January 1, 1923. If that seems too much on days when you are short, just squeeze out twenty-five cents and keep yourself reminded of the greatest bargain in small-sized Government bonds that has ever been offered to the rank and file of us. If we, the people of the United States, do not take up those two billions of War Savings Certificate Stamps during this year of grace, 1918, it will be because we don't know what thrift is nor how to practice it. Probably the trouble is that those two Liberty Loans went over the line in such huge drives of a few weeks each that it seems as if this project, spread over a year, ought to come through on time more or less by itself. But, if everybody thinks that, will it? You know the answer.

STUDY YOUR POLICY AND SEE

How Another Merchant Lost His Fire Insurance

(Copyrighted, 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

After a hot fight, a case has just been decided by a State Appeal Court which reveals another of the numerous ways in which a merchant can lose his fire insurance by his own fault. Litigation is constantly going on between fire insurance companies and business concerns who hold policies, and whenever a court hands down a decision which should be helpful to other business men whose insurance comes to them through the same policy as the one in litigation, I like to report it.

Such a case is the one referred to in the first paragraph. A retail merchant held a policy of insurance on his store building and his stock. His policy contained the following provisions, which every reader hereof will also find in his policy, whether it covers stock and fixtures or real estate:—

This company shall not be liable beyond the actual cash value of the property at the time any loss or damage occurs, and the loss or damage shall be ascertained according to such actual cash value,.....and shall in no event exceed what it would have cost the insured to repair or replace the same with material of like kind and quality; said ascertainment or estimate shall be made by the insured and the company, or, if they differ, then by appraisers as hereinafter provided, etc.....It shall be optional, however, with this company to take all or any part of the articles at such ascertainment or appraised value and also to repair, rebuild or replace property lost or damaged with other of like kinds and quality within a reasonable time on giving notice within thirty days after the receipt of the proofs herein required of its intention so to do, etc.

The loss shall not become payable until sixty days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate and satisfactory proof of the loss herein required shall have been received by the company, including an award by appraisers when appraisal has been required..... No suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustainable in any court of law or equity until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements.

A fire occurred, badly damaging both store building and stock and fixtures. Two weeks later an insurance adjuster went to the spot and demanded an appraisement for the purpose of ascertaining the loss. The company had a right to this appraisement under the above provision of the policy. The merchant paid no attention, but went ahead and filed his proof of loss. Shortly after this the insurance company made a written demand for an appraisement, so it could decide whether to pay the loss in cash or repair, rebuild or replace. Still the merchant ignored the demand, and about a week later he decided that the building was too bady damaged to be rebuilt, and tore it down—without the knowledge or consent of the insurance company. A few days after this he filed a second proof of loss in which he just about doubled the amount set forth in the first proof.

The insurance company refused to pay anything on account of the loss, on the ground that the merchant had denied them the chance to exercise their option, and the court upheld them. I reproduce a part of the decision:—

Of his own volition the plaintiff took aw from the insurance company its optio right to repair or replace the building as t fire had left it. By this action of the plai tiff, he deliberately violated those provisio of the contract which secured to the insur the valuable rights we have before referr to.

With the demolition of the building, t insurance company could no longer have t loss estimated by appraisers and was d prived of its optional right to rebuild or r place the property.

In Post vs. American Central Insuran Company, 51 Pa. Superior Ct. 352, t learned court below, in his opinion which w practically adopted by this court thus re ognized the question that is here materia "Did the plaintiff, by opening his store December 21, 1908, deprive the defenda company of its option to take all or any pa of the articles at the appraised value, or r place the same with other of like kind quality? If he did, then there can be no r covery in this case.

Our conclusion rests on the propositi that it had been denied the opportunity f an intelligent determination whether would have its loss appraised or whether would determine to rebuild. In other word the plaintiff cannot recover on these policie and the reason is he tore down his buildi before the companies could investigate.

took the lion's share of the proceeds, for one case, where over $200 was stolen, gave his assistants each $17.47, and told the it was a fair division. And they seemed be satisfied.

"Tucker also made a full confession a admitted that he had been in all of the thr Brooklyn stick-ups. And Irving Zipowi has also admitted his participation in two the Brooklyn cases."

Tampa Pays Honor to T. Ed. Bryan

Chairman of the Cigar Manufacturers Bureau Boomed for Presidency of Board of Trade—Mayor McKay, Enrique Pendas, Jerome Regensburg and Other Speakers Lay Stress on Things Necessary to Be Done to Insure Prosperity for the Cigar Industry.

TAMPA, March 2.—With the honoring of T. Ed Bryan, chairman of the cigar manufacturers' bureau of the Tampa Board of Trade, as its inspiration, and with Mayor D. B. McKay and L. P. Dickie, secretary of the Board of Trade sharing the honors, the local cigar manufacturers tendered a banquet at El Pasaje restaurant Wednesday evening which was, in many respects, the most notable of the kind in the history of the industry. The Cigar Manufacturers' Association, as is generally known, joined forces with the Board of Trade as a special bureau about a year ago, and the innovation has resulted in decided benefits—in the easy solution of problems that have heretofore been very difficult. It has cemented the manufacturers into closer union and at the same time provided a better method of settling labor disputes in a manner fair to both employer and employe.

Principal among the announcements made at the banquet was that Mr. Bryan probably would be the next president of the Board of Trade, the statement being made by Mayor McKay, who also suggested that it might be well to continue his leadership of the cigar manufacturers' bureau. Whether the gentleman can work to advantage in both positions, however, is a matter that is open to discussion. If so, he will undoubtedly assume both. Needless to state, he has the strong support of the cigar manufacturers for the presidency of the Board of Trade.

Secretary L. P. Dickie of the Board of Trade acted as toastmaster at the banquet, arrangements for which had been made by Celestino Vega of Celestino Vega & Co., and Mike Foley of F. Lozano Sons Company. Mr. Dickie, who is the youngest trade board secretary in Florida, made a decided hit in his method of introducing speakers.

From a manufacturers' viewpoint, the principal speech was made by Jaimie Pendas of Y. Pendas & Alvarez, who had been selected to pay tribute to the men who had been foremost in working for and protecting the industry. He spoke eloquently of the work done by Col. Hugh C. Macfarlane, "father of West Tampa," in founding the industry, also of the protection given for more than twenty years by Mayor McKay. Both gentlemen, he said, had more than once risked their lives in behalf of the industry. In an equally pleasing way he expressed appreciation of the work done by Mr. Bryan and Secretary Dickie during the past year, and included Miss Grace Lay, the efficient assistant secretary of the Board of Trade.

Mayor McKay, who was first introduced, spoke of his many years of interest in the cigar manufacturers, of their high character, and of the fact that the Tampa of today was builded upon them. He complimented Mr. Bryan highly, stated that he was confident he would be the next president of the Board of Trade and expressed the hope, also, that he would continue as chairman of the cigar manufacturers' bureau. He stated that he saw no cloud on the horizon of the cigar manufacturers, and hoped none would arise. Mr. McKay closed by calling attention to the fact that a veteran cigarmaker of West Tampa had just died, leaving a wife and several children destitute, and the matter of giving them immediate assistance was referred to the executive committee. Regret was expressed at the fact that Salvador Rodriguez, the veteran of the Charles the Great factory, and Matthew W. Berriman of Berriman Bros., could not be present.

Enrique Pendas, now manager of the Havana-American factories, and the dean of the manufacturers in point of service in Tampa, spoke in his usually interesting and direct vein. He referred particularly to the protection given the industry in Tampa in the past, and expressed appreciation therefor. Mr. Pendas' services to the manufacturers generally have been of such a character that his brother, Jaimie Pendas, was forced to include him among those to whom tribute was paid. It would have been unfair to have done otherwise, for Mr. Pendas' wise counsel has more than once pulled the industry over tortuous shoals.

One of the outstanding features of the utterances and attitude of the leaders of the industry was a desire to be absolutely fair with their employes, and a knowledge of their condition and needs during the present period of strife. While struggling with momentous problems themselves, the manufacturers appreciate the fact that the high price of necessities have put them "up against it," and are more deeply interested in their welfare than the general public of Tampa possibly could be. The need of carefully and continually considering laboring needs and conditions, both before and after the war, was particularly stressed by Jerome Regensburg of E. Regensburg Sons Company, who made one of the best speeches of the evening. Mr. Regensburg also referred to Tampa's prospects for reaching the mark of 400,000,000 during the present year.

Among the other speakers were Clyde Glenn, representing Tobacco Leaf, who spoke of the necessity of co-operating; Jorge Leon, on crop conditions in Cuba; Frank L. Huffaker, editor of the Tampa Times and correspondent of Tobacco, on the blessings conferred by "My Lady Nicotine"; John L. McWhorther of the Tampa Tribune, on the attitude of the press toward the industry; Henry Abrams, representing the United States Tobacco Journal, who advocated price increases; Mariano Alvarez, of A. Santaella & Co., who was thinking more of golf than smokes; Andres Diaz of Andres Diaz & Co., who pleaded to be let off till next time; Henry Leiman of the Tampa Box Factory, who spoke of conditions in the box manufacturing industry; Jose Lozano, resident manager of F. Lozano Sons Company, who proved a laugh-producer. and Ben Cosio, who said he could not make a speech and proved that he was "camouflaging" by doing so.

At the close of the banquet A. L. Cuesta, Jr., of the Cuesta-Rey factory, proposed a rising vote of thanks to Mr. Bryan, which was given with a cheer.

The speech of Mr. Bryan, the guest of honor, which abounded in good advice, is as follows:

"Friends: This bureau was organized just one year ago tomorrow, and it gives me great pleasure to be your guest tonight and to have worked with you throughout these 12 months. I do not feel that any particular honor is due me as your chairman, but that you have reason to feel very grateful to your executive committee and for the cooperation of all your members. During the past 25 or 30 years the cigar industry in Tampa has had many ups and downs. These troubles have been caused largely through lack of cooperation of the manufacturers. The only organization in existence for a number of years was the organization of clear Havana manufacturers. That organization was all right when it was formed years ago, but the industry has developed and become more diversified and we have today not only the clear Havana industry, but the shadegrown industry and the scrap or cheroot. The clear Havana manufacturers' association only reached those manufacturers of clear Havana cigars, and in case of trouble or irregularities it was impossible to reach the entire industry.

"Something over a year ago, a movement was started to organize all the manufacturers through the board of trade. This was done through the cigar manufacturers' bureau on February 28, 1917, and I am glad to say this bureau now has as its members every cigar manufacturer in Tampa of any consequence. As your chairman when the bureau was first organized, it was easy for me to see the petty jealousies and distrust among yourselves, and it was my first work to bring you together. At each meeting it has been my pleasure to note the disappearance of this jealousy and distrust until today I believe you men are working in almost perfect harmony and that you have really just gotten to the point where you can accomplish great things for the industry. During this past year, by working together, we have avoided any serious labor troubles. I feel you have been fair to the workmen, much more so than would have been possible had you not been organized. Many perplexing questions have come up before you, all of which have been solved, reasonably satisfactory.

"You must bear in mind that you hold in your hand the living and welfare of some 16,000 workmen; your business cannot be successful with dissatisfied workmen, and it is necessary for your success that you should always bear in mind the necessity of paying them wages in keeping with the labor they perform and with the increased costs of foodstuffs and wearing apparel. I hope during this coming year to see an agreement reached between yourselves and your workmen, covering every branch of the industry, that will be satisfactory to both parties, so that we may not only hold what we have, but that we may steadily increase the industry that each of you shall profit thereby, as well as the entire city.

"I realize the increased cost of production. Knowing that raw material is costing you many times what it did a few years ago, that you are paying higher wages, higher internal revenue tax, as well as the war taxes that are paid the government for the carrying on of our great war. If I am correctly informed, it is costing you anywhere from $10 to $16 per 1,000 more to manufacture cigars today than a few years ago. To overcome this, it is necessary that you increase prices on the present sizes, or readjust your sizes to conform to the increased cost of production. I do not believe in fixed prices; do not think any agreement among yourselves should be made as to prices. I have had considerable experience along this line and find it does not work out.

"I do think, however, that it is wise that you discuss prices among yourselves and get some general idea as to what prices will be charged on the different sizes. There has always been a difference in price between different manufacturers on the same size cigar, but this difference was not great enough to work any great hardship. Good salesmanship can overcome a slight difference in price. No doubt, every one of you think you make better cigars than the other, and if you can instil this in your salesmen, getting them to believe that your cigars are better than your competitors, they will not have much trouble in making their customers think the same. Quality and service, coupled with a good product, will win, and I hope you gentlemen will gradually elevate your prices to such an extent that you will have a good, liberal profit in your manufacture. Organization, coupled with quality and service, and satisfied workmen, will keep the industry running not with a purr, but with a buzz and a hum.

"I want to thank you for the great pleasure you have given me by having me with you tonight, and to say that you can count on my unqualified support where it is possible for me to serve you."

Matthew W. Berriman of Berriman Bros. who has been in New York several weeks has returned to the factory.

Ludwig Lasker, sales manager for the Perfecto Garcia factory, which is introducing its cigars in the south for the first time spent the greater part of last month in Texas and is still in the Lone Star State. He has secured a number of excellent contracts, and will shortly move upward through the northwest.

"Bobby" Clark, for a number of years office manager for Jose Lovera & Co., has taken a similar position with the Cuesta-Rey factory.

OELRICHS SENTENCED

Hoboken Saloonkeeper Sent to Prison for Three Years —Lighter Penalties Imposed on Others Who Sold Liquor to Soldiers.

Emil Oelrichs, a Hoboken saloonkeeper, received the maximum penalty—a sentence of three years in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta—for selling intoxicants to soldiers within the barred zone, when he faced Judge J. Warren Davis in the Newark branch of the United States District Court Monday.

He was also denounced as an enemy alien who played a part in the great German propaganda, seeking to demoralize the country and its armed forces.

"An enemy alien such as you are could inflict upon this country incalculable injury by such acts as you are convicted of," snapped Judge Davis.

"For nine years you have enjoyed the unrivaled opportunities and shared the blessings which this country affords. Like a leech you have used them to demoralize it. Apparently it would be your desire to see William Hohenzollern on the throne at Washington and London and Paris."

Mrs. Annie Lindenhauer, a barmaid employed by Oelrichs, escaped with a fine of $50. Judge Davis declared she was a mere tool of her employer.

Richard Schwart, another Hoboken saloon keeper, was fined $100 and his bartender $25 for selling to civilians in the barred zone.

The other saloon keepers convicted of similar offenses escaped with light fines because their places were on the boundary line of the barred zone, and they did not know they were included in it. Some other saloon keepers and waiters and bartenders who were rounded up for selling to a soldier in isolated cases were given light jail sentences by the court.

ISSUE TOBACCO RATIONS

To U. S. Soldiers and Sailors—Representative Gallivan Urges—Two Bills Introduced.

Washington, D. C. March 4.—Representative Gallivan, of Massachusetts introduced two identical bills in the House last week providing for tobacco for the sailors and soldiers.

In the one "providing for the issuance of tobacco in its various forms as part of rations to the United States troops as the Secretary of War may direct," and referred to the House Committee on Military Affairs he says:

"That in the issue of rations to troops tobacco in its various forms shall be provided in such quantities as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War as a part of the ration."

The other bill "providing for the issuance of tobacco in its various forms as part of the rations to the United States Navy as the Secretary of the Navy may direct," has been referred to the House Committee on Military Affairs, and is identical with the above bill only giving the power to the Secretary of the Navy.

MEETING OPPOSITION

McAdoo's War Finance Measure Don't Suit Some Influential Senators—But the Secretary of the Treasury Is Persistent.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—The unexpected snag struck by the War Finance Corporation bill brought Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo to the Capitol in a hurry today in an attempt to have members of the Banking and Currency Committee, who form the backbone of the opposition to the bill, abate their opposition and permit the bill to go through the Senate.

In secret session with the members of the committee, Secretary McAdoo urged strongly the desirability of the War Finance Corporation bill as it now stands, asserting that the vital changes which the Banking and Currency Committee members wish to make would ruin the purpose of the bill.

Their opposition, it is learned, is based on two vital features of the bill:

First, the proposal to permit the War Finance Corporation to issue its own short term securities to the extent of $4,000,000,000, and

Second, the proposal that the Secretary of the Treasury, through appointment of the directors of the corporation, control its activities absolutely.

Objections of the members of the committee, which had no voice in the framing of the original bill, to the first proposal is based on the theory that the issuance of such securities would lead to inflation. Senators are unwilling to grant authority for the issuance of such a large amount of securities until they are satisfied that the corporation scheme would work without a hitch.

The objection to the second proposal is the old objection to the centralization of power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is no secret that many Senators look with suspicion on the efforts of Mr. McAdoo to gather all the financial authority of the nation in his hands, and they fear, at least some of them, that he might use this authority to attain personal ends, and—that it is unwise to permit him, a possible candidate for President in 1920, to exercise the power of life and death over the great corporations of the United States.

Those opposing this feature of the War Finance Corporation feel that it would be best to delegate the authorities under the bill to the members of the Federal Reserve Board by making them directors in the corporation. To this Secretary McAdoo is strongly opposed, declaring that there might be differences of opinion between the Treasury Department and the board, which would mean disaster for the Government's financial policies.

It appeared today that the upshot of the whole thing would be that either Secretary McAdoo would have to yield some of the authority which he proposes to exercise under the bill, or that he would have to summon the White House and Administration forces in an effort to put the bill through the Senate, even over the objections of the Banking and Currency Committee, some of the members of which are the most influential in the Senate.

The opposition in this committee is not at all of a partisan nature, since Senator Owen of Oklahoma, Democrat, and chairman of the committee, started the fight yesterday which resulted in today's conference. Senator Owen's attitude on the bill is backed by other Democratic and Republican members.

TOBACCO AS A MONEY CROP.

The tobacco sales in the Greenville, Tenn., market up to the past week aggregated about three million pounds, and the average prices at which the tobacco has been sold has been about 25 cents per pound. During the past season a market has been established at Johnson City, where probably from 700 pounds to 1,000,000 pounds of tobacco will be sold this season, this all coming from territory heretofore controlled by the Greeneville market, but, notwithstanding this loss, it is believed that the sales in the Greeneville market will show an increase over the sales during the last season, which were about 4,000,000 pounds.

A greater acreage to be planted this year than was planted last year. As a money crop it has been shown that tobacco very much excels any other crop that can be raised. It is also true that small farmers can plant a few acres in tobacco and cultivate the same with but little loss of time from the attention demanded for other farm crops.

DECEMBER PRODUCTION

Washington, D. C., March 4.—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue gives the figures relative to the manufactured snuff, tobacco, cigars and cigarettes manufactured in the United States during the month of December, 1917. The figures show that in December, 1917, there were only 590,398,691 large cigars manufactured as against 691,733,163 the preceding December. However, the manufacture of small cigars increased from 67,489,200 in December, 1916, to 74,317,876 in December, 1917.

The manufacture of large cigarettes increased from 2,853,050 in December, 1916, to 3,756,539 in December of last year and also the manufacture of small cigarettes increased from 1,969,319,760 in December, 1916, to 2,316,901,570 in December, 1917.

There were 3,167,769 pounds of snuff manufactured in December, 1916, which was reduced ot 2,653,401 in December, 1917.

The manufacture of both smoking and chewing tobacco decreased from 33,082,917 pounds in December, 1916, to 30,327,877 in December, 1917.

ARIZONA SCARE OVER

Report That Powdered Glass Had Been Found in Plugs of Chewing Tobacco Proved to Possess Scant Importance.

Regarding a recent scare in Arizona, caused by a report that ground glass had been discovered in plugs of chewing tobacco, the Phoenix Republican says:

"G. C. Wimer, whose work in the distribution of samples of chewing tobacco was stopped by the authorities in the claim that it contained ground glass, has his crew of samplers on the job again and the matter has been entirely dropped by the department of justice.

"David Proctor, special agent of the department of justice, said: 'After a very thorough investigation of the charges that had been presented to us we have returned the tobacco which we had confiscated. We found nothing that would indicate intent to do harm in any fashion. In fact, I took a great bunch of the tobacco to the pathological laboratory and secured a thorough analysis and only two minute portions of some substance which probably was glass were found in the entire lot and they would have done no harm. When soaked in water no sediment showed which would indicate powdered or ground glass.

"'I have told Mr. Wimer that he has carte blanche to do what he wants with his tobacco samples. We can't find anything to hold it for. In fact, one of the officials who was connected with the case is consuming some of the suspected tobacco himself.'"

TOBACCO FACTORY SWEPT AWAY.

LANCASTER, Pa., March 5.—The receding flood waters of the Susquehanna River upset the Washington-Borough tobacco factory, owned by E. S. Smith, and it was swept away in the creek.

E. P. Oakes, representing the E. H. Gato Cigar Co., is attending to business in Chicago; G. W. Thompson is busy in Pennsylvania, and H. A. Schwartz is down in Louisiana.

Some dealers on the Pacific coast are putting up a stiff kick against the six and eleven cent cigars. Many of them, sensing the jump in prices, loaded up with stock at the old prices. One druggist who handles cigars has 400,000 nickel cigars stored away.

AMERICAN EFFICIENCY

The searchlight of war has brought out many interesting facts, and one of these is that the vaunted German efficiency will not always stand the test of comparison with American efficiency.

The Germans boasted of being the greatest farmers on earth. Investigation shows that in efficiency in agriculture, measured by the produce per acre, America being graded 100, Belgium leads the world, at 205; Great Britain comes second, at 164; and Germany third, at 155; America comes fourth.

But the better test is the man test rather than the acre test, and here America leads the world by over 2 to 1. Again, grading America at 100 per farm worker, Great Britain produces 43 and Germany 41. The American farmer cultivates 27 acres, the German farmer but 7. With the aid of vast quantities of fertilizer the German produces more per acre, but he produces at a much greater cost per bushel and he produces much less than half as much per man.

REGARDING "GREENBACKS"

The enormous increase of governmental expenditures made necessary by war has been so often the occasion for issues of paper money that many people are ready to assume that a great war cannot be carried on without them. That idea is strengthened in this country by the fact that this Government resorted to paper money during the Civil War, was victorious in the war, and eventually brought the "greenbacks" to par with gold, and has retained them as a part of the permanent currency stock. A great many people were so favorably impressed by the apparent services of these paper issues during the war that they could see no reason for retiring or redeeming them at any time, and for fifteen years after the war was over the political life of this country was intensely agitated by controversies over them. There were proposals to pay the bonded debt by further issues, on the theory that what was good enough for the soldier was good enough for the bondholder, with numerous variations of the idea that the Government should furnish an adequate supply of money for every laudable enterprise, and it took a long, and at times doubtful, struggle to get this paper, originally issued as a temporary expedient to tide the country over a dire emergency, definitely established on a gold basis.

In the eyes of many people the "greenbacks" had become hallowed as an agency by which the life of the nation had been saved. They were lauded as means by which the country had escaped from the clutches of the money-lenders, and suggestions for their retirement were usually attributed to bankers, who were supposed to want them out of the way for selfish reasons. The influence of the paper money upon prices and wages was too obscure to be traced by the average man, but he thought he could see that the Government got something for nothing when it issued them, instead of hiring money from bankers, and this was held to account for all antagonism in that quarter. It was a difficult question to deal with in popular discussion. As the publicist of the National City Bank says: "No issue could be injected into politics that would be more easily subject to misrepresentation or that would better serve the purpose of demagogues than the paper money issue which dominated our politics from 1865 to 1879. It is one of the most serious objections to any departure from sound principles in dealing with money, credit or banking that the controversies which inevitably result are sure to be distorted into the form of class conflicts—of antagonism between those who have capital and those who have not."

The insurance people have some very interesting figures by now on the remarkable increase of incendiary fires in this country since we declared war on Germany, If you have anything the Kaiser wants burned, guard it night and day. He has plenty of scoundrels at work over here trying to burn it. A case in point was that big fire at Port Newark, N. J., where some huge shipbuilding yards are getting under way. But, above all, don't lay the fire yourself so that the boches need only touch a match to it. That is precisely what was done at Port Newark. After doubling the guards and taking every other precaution, the men in charge anchored a loaded oil barge up against their big pier, and the fire started there just as anyone with common sense would have expected.—Collier's.

FUMIFERA JAPONICA

[From the Japan Mail, August 28, 1874.]

Like butterfly in sunbeam gay,
Or precious gem of dazzling ray,
Ohana is the brightest fay—
  The sweetest flower in Yedo;
Almost as fair she is as those
With eyes of blue, and cheeks of rose,
Who dance, till happy daylight goes,
  On daisied English meadow.

Her eyes—dark wells of passion deep
Whene'er her soul is stirred—now sleep
In sunshine, and her fancies leap
  Like wavelets soft and stilly;
Her hair is bound with skill and grace;
Upon her laughing lips a trace
Of saffron flower is seen; her face
  Is powdered like the lily.

As many-coloured is her dress
As that entrancing loveliness
Which spans the rain-swept sky to bless
  The Earth—a gladsome duty;
With samisen upon her knees,
And gaudy fan to coax the breeze,
She sits beneath embowering trees—
  A little Eastern beauty.

But, smiling, from her sleeve she takes
A tiny pipe, and gently breaks
A tiny pipe, and gently breaks
The Kokubu's beloved flakes,
  And lights a morsel gaily;
A whiff or two—the joy is done,
But scarcely ere again begun;
She smokes, I trow, if she smokes one,
  Of pipes a hundred daily.

INFLATION AND DEFLATION

Roughly speaking it is said that the debtor class will gain by inflation and the creditor class lose, and it is usually assumed that the debtor class is composed of poor people and the creditor class of rich people, but this classification is widely erroneous. The owners of property, the employers of labor and operators of business belong with the debtors rather than with the creditors, so far as the effects of rising prices are concerned. What they own and what they sell is not ordinarily fixed in price, although that is true of most public utilities. The great bulk of private property usually responds in nominal values to changes in the prices of the products. The laborer for fixed wages is in the creditor rather than the debtor class, and while wages in some lines follow more or less closely the general state of business activity, in many instances they lag seriously behind advances in the cost of living. The salaried class and all who for any reason are least independent and able to help themselves are sufferers by rising prices.

Along with these is the great body of people who are not in business but who have saved something for old age or a rainy day, and have it out at interest, or in a bank, or who have made provision for dependents by carrying life insurance. If it is assumed that the present level of prices and cost of living is permanent, then it must be allowed that since 1914 nearly one-half the value of all such savings have been wiped out as with a sponge! Do we realize what is taking place, and are we content for the sake of maintaining for a time the useless effort to do business as usual to allow this process to go on?

But it will be said that this situation is only temporary, that after the war prices will subside and those losses which now appear on paper will be recovered. Very well, suppose we take that horn of the dilemma, and face the task of reducing wages to the pre-war level, and of paying the debts and taxes inherited from the war out of the pre-war profits and earnings. Is that outlook so much more encouraging as to reconcile us to going still further on the path which must be retraced?

There are many uncertainties about the future but one thing is certain, and that is that the gravest dangers will be connected with the inflation of wages, prices and indebtedness. It is granted that a degree of inflation is unavoidable, and a degree great enough to cause serious concern has already occurred. With another great loan pending more is unavoidable and the end is not in sight, but it is of the highest importance that the tendencies shall be understood and that the remedy shall be applied so far as possible. That remedy lies in concentrating the energies and resources of the country upon necessary work to the exclusion of work which is not necessary—either to the prosecution of the war or to sustain the health and strength of the people, and in finding purchasing power for the Government by conserving and transferring to it the purchasing power of the people.

What McAdoo Will Do

Director General McAdoo has announced that while the railroads are under the control of the Government it is futile to impose fines upon them for violations of the law and of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it therefore becomes the duty of the Director General in the enforcement of the law and said orders to impose punishment for wilful and inexcusable violations thereof upon the person or persons responsible therefor.

It is also announced that when the prompt public transportation service requires it, employes will be required to work a reasonable amount of overtime, but excessive hours of employment will not be required.

Pending a disposition of the question of wages and hours, all requests of employes involving revisions of schedules or general changes affecting wages and hours will be held in abeyance. The question of wages when determined will be made retroactive.

The Director General states that if he is notified of the location of specific supplies for transport to Europe and the port or ports in the United States to which such supplies should be sent he will guarantee the necessary transportation subject alone to interruptions from blizzards and floods.

All officers and employees of the railroads, says the Director General, now serve the Government and the public interest only. He asks them to get the spirit of this new era—a supreme devotion to country and an invincible determination to perform the imperative duties of the hour, co-operation, not antagonism; confidence, not suspicion; mutual helpfulness, not grudging performance; just consideration, not arbitrary disregard of each other's rights and feelings; and an earnest desire to serve the great public faithfully and efficiently. To save America, to save the world from despotism, we must work together.

If State areas were in proportion to population a map of the United States would be drawn this way

In making plans for trade campaigns the above map may be of assistance. It shows, practically at a glance, the relative importance of States so far as possible sales are concerned. The cigar and tobacco business may not be circumscribed exactly by State lines. Nor is the amount of trade obtainable for a named brand always proportionate to population. In general, however, in selling goods, it seems wisest to go where the most people and money are.

Time and effort should be expended on population and not so much on area. Manufacturers who have had to wrestle with this problem, and have found that certain parts of the country warrant little attention, concentrate on East and the Middle West as the big buying States. Three years ago a mail order house covered the entire country with advertisements by carrying copy in twenty-five magazines of all types. The article advertised sold for ten cents, and a person had no occasion to write in unless he sent along the dime. There was and is a universal demand for the article, and the manufacturer used the magazines to find out just where his salesmen were likely to get the largest amount of business. For every reply that came from the South twenty were received from the Middle West, and the replies from Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts and California outnumbered all that came from the rest of the States combined. Two insertions in a Southern magazine brought one reply, and a magazine that circulated mostly in the Middle West brought in 570 replies for two insertions. The Western magazine had a circulation about ten times as large, but even so, the Southern magazine should have made a much better showing. From then on the manufacturer followed magazines that circulated in the East and Middle West, and in so doing he was keeping on the trail of population, for where you have the population you have the markets for goods, provided, the inhabitants are of a wage earning kind, and this applies to the cigar business as well as any other.

Assertion of 100 Per Cent. Patriotism

Perkins, President of Cigar Makers' Union, Writes to McAdoo

Writing to Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, regarding freight embragoes and other matters pertaining to the war, G. W. Perkins, president of the Cigar Makers International Union, Says:

"Tobacco, especially the raw material, should under no circumstances be classed as non-essential, or an embargo in so far as transportation is concerned placed thereon, except of course in absolutely unavoidable instances. The cigar industry ranks about twelfth in the value of its total production. The total annual value of cigars produced is about $450,000,000. The wages paid amount to about $85,000,000. The industry gives employment to about 140,000 people, fully 80 per cent or more of whom are outside the draft age.

"It is true that our first concern should be the maintenance of military efficiency in the highest degree. It is equally true and secondary only in importance that we must maintain intact our economic and financial system. That is absolutely necessary in peace or in war. It is just as important that we maintain confidence in our financial system as it is that we make guns for the men in the trenches. The breaking down of the economic and financial systems of Russia is more largely responsible for the present chaotic condition existing there and the serious consequences than any other single item. Destroy confidence in our financial system and you will bring about a panic, consequent unemployment, and distrust in our government, and start us on the downward pathway, overshadowed with doubt, confusion, and discord. Draw 150,000 men out of an industry such as ours and you will pull one of the bricks out of the economic and financial structure which may tumble the rest like a pack of cards, and precipitate a financial panic and consequent industrial depression.

"We are one-hundred per cent American, one-hundred per cent patriotic; we stand squarely back of our government; we endorse its course in this war. We realize that this is war; we expect to suffer, to undergo hardship and privation, and to make the supreme sacrifice when called upon. But we earnestly protest against singling out our industry with others and placing an embargo on it, or declaring it as non-essential. We have shown you that it is just as much an essential as anything else if our economic and financial system, and confidence in our government and in ourselves is to be maintained. Destroy our economic and financial system, and all chance of winning the war is absolutely lost.

"While it is true that we must, and we will furnish men for the trenches, our chief duty at present, however, is to furnish food and money to our allies; hence then the maintenance of our economic and financial system at present is equal in importance to the maintenance of industries necessary for military efficiency.

"We hold that it is highly important, even necessary, that we maintain the morale of the masses at the highest point. Men who make a living in any one industry earnestly consider that they have a right to continue to make a living at that industry, and look with disfavor upon what would seem to them to be discrimination, and this would have a consequent damaging effect upon the morale, which in time would have a depressing effect upon the enthusiastic support and loyalty.

"We urge that great care be taken to avoid singling out of any particular industry to the extent that will have a tendency to dislocate or even temporarily destroy it.

"With assurance of absolute loyalty to our country, which nothing can shake. I am "Very respectfully yours,

(Signed) G. W. PERKINS."

Trade of the United States With Cuba in 1917

Trade of the United States with Cuba in 1917 was $445,000,000 against $198.000,000 in 1913, the year preceding the war. A compilation by the National City Bank of New York shows that the United States is now supplying 76 per cent of the imports of Cuba against 53 per cent in 1913, and taking 75 per cent of its exports against 80 per cent in 1913, this reduction in our share of the exports being due to the heavy European demands for Cuban sugar, due to the shortage of beet sugar in Europe since the beginning of the war.

Sugar, tobacco, bananas, cocoa, tropical fruits, iron ore, manganese oxide, and cattle hides are the principal articles imported from Cuba, while our exports to the island include meats, lard, flour, corn, eggs, cheese, condensed milk, temperate zone fruits, coal and all classes of manufactures.

The more important of the manufactures exported to Cuba in 1917 are approximately ten million dollars' worth of cotton goods, about five million dollars' worth of automobiles and parts, approximately six million dollars' worth of railway supplies, including rails, cars and locomotives, over two million dollars' worth of structural iron and steel, six million dollars' worth of boots and shoes, nearly two million dollars' worth of pipes and fittings, wire, tinplate, typewriters, sewing machines, agriultural implements, cement, paper, wire nails, steel plates, barbed wire, rosin, lubricating oil, illuminating oil, gasoline, newsprint paper, wrapping paper and many other articles.

The flour exports to the island alone are about ten million dollars in value, corn nearly three million dollars, lard and lard compounds approximately ten million dollars, meats over five millions, eggs more than two million dollars, condensed milk over one-half million dollars, and cheese nearly one-half million dollars. The cotton cloths aggregate about eighty million yards, the eggs over six million dozen, lard and lard compounds about fifty million pounds, crude mineral oil about ten million gallons, boots and shoes nearly four million pairs, paper over fifteen million pounds of newsprint and ten million pounds of other paper, chiefly for wrapping.

CAPT. GEO. RENO
The "Hoover of Cuba"

The sugar imports from Cuba in 1917 are in round terms 4,500,000,000 pounds, being slightly less than in 1916 by reason of the very heavy demands upon the island for shipments direct to Europe, for the reasons above stated. Other imports from the island include over twenty million pounds of tobacco, valued at approximately fifteen million dollars, approximately thirteen million pounds of cattle hides, valued at three million dollars; nearly two million bunches of bananas, valued at $750,000, and a million pounds of crude cocoa, over a million and a half dollars in value, and the manganese oxide and ore, over half a million dollars.

Trade between the United States and Cuba since its independence has shown very rapid growth. It aggregated in the fiscal year 1895 $65,000,000; in 1905, $125,000,000; in 1910, $176,000,000; in the calendar year 1913, $187,000,000; in 1915, $293,000,000; in 1916, $409,000,000, and in 1917, $445,000,000.

Thos. J. Farrell, of the Hotel Plaza, New York City, president of the Greeters and one of the special representatives of the Hotel and Restaurant Division of the Food Administration, has organized the Greeters of the country into a volunteer corps to call upon the smaller eating places and enlist them in the food saving campaign of the government.

M. J. Tropauer, now associated with the Themelis Bros. Co., fairly astonished other officials of the company, selling so many cigarettes recently.

A FACTOR IN THE WORLD'S TOBACCO TRADE

The International Planters' Corporation

Recently organized, but already doing a tobacco business running into millions, the International Planters' Corporation bids fair to be a more conspicuous factor in world-wide trade.

Of the big company, Amos J. Mace, formerly vice-president of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., is vice-president. In itself the fact that he heads the enterprise is a prediction of continuous success for the International Planters' Corporation. For Mace has shown great ability. He has won the confidence and high esteem of some of America's shrewdest and most successful financiers. How well he stands is attested by an excerpt from the G. W. W. Bulletin descriptive of the presentation of a loving cup:

"Ostensibly Mr. Mace was present for the purpose of discussing tobacco matters with the officers of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., but in reality, and wholly unknown to him, he was to hear words of praise about himself and be presented with a Loving Cup as a token of the esteem in which he was held by his former fellow officers.

"When Mr. Mace had finished his remarks about the tobacco business, Chas. H. Sabin, Chairman of the Board of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., spoke and among other things said:

"'Years ago myself and some friends invested in a business concern in the upper part of New York state. One day we discovered that this concern was on the verge of collapse. We decided upon changing the management. Mr. Mace had come to my attention while a clerk for this concern. I then believed he had the qualifications to pull that concern through. We put him in charge, and no man ever worked harder or more loyally than he did. In the end he made a success of it. I became convinced then that he was what we call "a comer." He has ambition, energy and courage, is absolutely loyal and conscientious, so I fully expect him to achieve an unqualified success in this new undertaking.'

"W. H. Williams, Vice President, spoke next with special reference to Mr. Mace's constructive imagination and enthusiasm. M. J. Budlong, Vice President and General Manager, concluded his apt remarks by paying a tribute to Mr. Mace as a student.

"G. A. Gaston, President, in concluding his remarks, related how, while Mr. Mace was busily engaged in building up the Tobacco Department, he had also been creating admiration and affection among his fellow officers, which they desired to express in the symbol of a Loving Cup. The cup was then presented to Mr. Mace.

"In response Mr. Mace said: 'I severed our uniformly pleasant relations with real regret. Your advice and support in my work has been most considerate and helpful. My new undertaking calls for patience and hard work in no common measure, but I shall undertake it with the confidence your good wishes and God-speed gives me. I shall always cherish this loving cup as a symbol of our past association, as well as a constant reminder of the many pleasant days spent as one of your co-workers. I am deeply appreciative of the friendship which has been demonstrated by the Gaston, Williams & Wigmore organization, and which organization I firmly believe to be one of the greatest of its kind in the world.'"

F. Theyskens, vice-president of the International Planters' Corporation, is a tobacco expert having an international reputation. A Belgian by birth, and associated importantly with European tobacco trade prior to the war, he was in Antwerp during the siege and there received injuries that exempted him from further military service.

In Holland later, associated with the great house of A. Meyer & Son and other big Dutch tobacco merchants, Mr. Theyskens was identified with a number of important operations, including the purchase of large amounts of tobacco that England had seized because it was consigned to German accounts.

In the United States, on the following year, Mr. Theyskens was a tobacco buyer who astounded the trade by the magnitude of his purchases for export. Next he proceeded to the Philippines and China, inspecting market conditions in the Orient and arranging for extensive developments of the tobacco trade. Returning to the United States in February, he was made vice-president of the International Planters' Corporation. In that capacity he will be one of the world's largest and most active tobacco buyers.

Besides connections in the United States, the West Indies, South America and the Orient, the International Planters' Corporation has representatives in Great Britain, France, Holland, Italy, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway. It will be active in procuring tobacco for various European regies during the war, and afterwards who can say how tremendously important the corporation will be in international tobacco trade.

La Giralda in Manila After the Fire That Occurred on Nov. 19. A Big New Factory Will Replace the Burned Structure

After the fire that occurred on November 19, 1917, La Giralda cigar factory in Manila was the ruin here shown. But, on the old site, to replace the burned building, a new factory capable of an output of 3,500,000 cigars a month is now being erected.

The Philippine Co., Ltd., which operated La Giralda factory is in course of liquidation, preliminary to reorganization on a stronger basis.

Bowring & Co., the general sales agents in this country for La Giralda cigars, report that some shipments are just arriving in the United States from Manila. But no more consignments will be obtainable for several months.

Being stored elsewhere, the reserve supply of tobacco, which the operating company had, was not destroyed when La Giralda factory burned. To this tobacco reserve has been added considerable quantities of very desirable Cagayan tobacco, representing recent purchases.

So, immediately on completion of the new factory, the work of manufacturing begins again and brands made by La Giralda will be kept up to the previous high standard. Bowring & Co., about the middle of the year, again will be in receipt of shipments from La Giralda factory and the trade will have an opportunity to see how excellent is the distribution.

BIG VAUDEVILLIAN HELPS SMOKE FUND.

Charles Withers, the prominent vaudeville star, anxious to do his bit for the boys in France, has planned to cooperate with the newspapers conducting campaigns for smokes for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

The success of the recent get-together luncheon of the New York Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade prompted the directors to send cards to members asking for comments on the luncheon, and if the members were in favor another on the last Saturday of the month.

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has notified stockholders that $5,000,000 of the $10,000,000 class B stock, the issuance of which total was authorized February 7 last, will be issued at once. Holders of the $10,000,000 old common stock now outstanding may subscribe at par to one share of the new B stock for every two shares of the common stock held by the respective holders. The privilege for such subscription will end April 1. Holders of class B stock will have all the rights belonging to the holders of common, except voting power.

Gassing the Price Situation in Philadelphia

Intimations of Increases Intensify Discussion at the Retailers' Meeting—Stephano Bros. Reincorporate for $3,100,000—Schulte Opens in Trenton—A Series of Deals Planned—The "United" Does Some Quick Work—A Little Squeal from Hog Island—Police Round Up About 200.

PHILADELPHIA, March 4.—Another mystery has busted into the limelight hereabouts. What is worse, or better, depending solely upon the point of view, is the fact that the said mystery has also horned its way into the well known pocketbooks of smokers of various brands of cigarettes. Old D. Rumor seems to have been responsible in the first place, but at the time of skidding to press a partial explanation has been found in notice sent to managers of chain stores here by their head offices in New York and elsewhere that in the near future cigarette prices are due for an increase. Pending formal notice of the said increase, a lot of retailers in Philadelphia have already added two cents a pack to the price of Camels, particularly, making the sum total that one must hand over for one pack fifteen cents. The other brands to be increased, according to the dope received by retailers who wait for definite information before putting on the tax, include nearly everything that formerly sold for fifteen cents and has recently been going for 17. These will go to 18. Sweet Caps are scheduled to move along from a nickel for eight to six cents, and so with other five cent brands.

Be that as it may, the retailers have got to do something. Dan Ostrow suggested after the meeting of the association last week that if the government don't do something to improve the shipping situation so dealers here can get chewing and smoking tobacco without committing assault and battery on the jobbers, there'll be nothing else to it but for the retailers, backed by smokers of all ages, sexes, colors, nationality and shades of opinion to take over the railroads. Incidentally, everything but assault and battery was handed to the jobbers at that last session of the association, which was held as usual in the Adelphia hotel and which wound up with an excellent buffet lunch.

It seems, according to the loud wails emitted by nearly every one of the fifty members who attended, that everybody has been running shy of smoking and chewing brands. Wires have been kept hot to the jobbers' offices, but it didn't seem to do any good to make threats, to plead or to cajole. The situation has been so bad within the past few weeks that many retailers, even some of the big fellows, have been forced to do the high and lofty borrowing act with each other. "You lend me a case of Prince Albert and I'll lend you three cans of Edgeworth," and so on. All the accumulated annoyance of all the retailers at the last meeting gathered itself into one big gas bomb, and this was exploded for the benefit of the jobbers. Nobody had anything to say about just how the jobbers can remedy the situation if they don't get the shipments. But there seemed to be a feeling on the part of some members that the jobbers have not been distributing properly. No formal action was taken, the consensus of opinion being that the association ought to stand aside and see what happens after the jobbers get an earful of what was said about them at the meeting. Then, if they don't do something, blooie will go another gas bomb.

After getting all this off their chests, members of the association made such a howl about the necessity for higher cigar prices that it got into the newspapers. It was made clear that nobody not equipped with a Rockefeller roll should be selling popular brands at a nickel in these days of the H. C. of L. and the H. C. of War. Likewise it was made quite plain that before long, what with increased costs of production and so on, the six cents now being garnered by the wise dealer will grow to seven if he stays wise and don't become altruistic. This is another rumble of the rumor that the $43 a thou. price maintained by most of the big producers here is to be increased to $48, as a maximum. No manufacturer has had anything definite to say about it to the public as yet.

Horace W. Leach, president of the Association, took occasion to bounce hard on the story which has been circulated among jobbers and salesmen that the organization is intended to develop into a cooperative buying association that would jut the jobbers and salesmen out of business. E. A. Geipel of Bayuk Brothers sales force put the yarn officially up to the association and asked for some assurance that it was all wrong. He got it.

Perhaps the most important action taken by the association since its inception a few months ago, however, was the appointment of a Price Committee to work up recommendations for resale prices upon all standard brands of cigars, cigarettes, chewing and smoking tobacco. Nearly every big retail industry in the country with any organization is taking steps in this direction nowadays, the Philadelphia Stationers' Association having lined up on a re-sale catalogue a few weeks ago. L. W. Erlichman brought up the question and after some discussion made a motion that the price committee be appointed. President Leach named Franklin K. Sterner, Samuel Corson and Charles B. Lloyd to make up the catalogue.

New members admitted at the session were: J. J. Henry, of 4801 Wayne avenue; "Nifty Ben," of 133 South Tenth street; C. W. Reynolds, of 52nd and Haverford streets; H. W. Kreh, of Hilbronner and Jacobs, Joseph Kaufman of the G. H. P. company and Nat Rosenheim of San Martin & Leon.

Stephano Brothers, Inc., one of the largest manufacturers of turkish cigarettes in this district, have just been re-incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania. The total capitalization of the company is now $3,100,000. No changes have been made either among the officials or in the board of directors. The company was formerly incorporated under the laws of Virginia.

A. Schulte has at last invaded Trenton, N. J. With Stanton M. Harris, from the New York office, on the job, along with Robert Reed, formerly an assistant in one of the Philadelphia string of Schulte stores, the Trenton stand was pried open last Sunday just across the street from the United. According to reports received here business has been coming in with a rush.

Word has been received by Schulte managers here of a series of big deals to run from 3 o'clock Friday afternoon, March 8, until the close of business the next day. Here's the way they line up:

Deal No. 1: 10 per cent discount on all sales of $1 or over.

Deal No. 2: Five per cent of total receipts to be equally divided among salesmen of the store.

Deal No. 3: $1 per hundred off every brand of cigars we sell.

Customers will not be given both of the above discounts, however. But they can select the one that looks best to them and take it along home. As for the salesmen, next Friday and Saturday will be a little Spring Christmas.

The Schulte company will not appoint a district superintendent for Philadelphia at present, it is understood. Each store manager is to be in complete charge, reporting to Mr. Harris on his frequent trips through this territory.

Pending alterations to the United store at the southwest corner of Eighth and Chestnut streets, which was considerably scorched up, not to say deluged, by fire and water a few weeks ago, the store will operate from 821 Chestnut street. That address happened to be vacant at the time of the fire. A remarkably quick piece of work was done by the United force in turning the empty store into an up to date cigar stand.

Another change has taken place in the ownership of the lease holds for the string of cigar, candy, and news stands in the Market street subway-elevated stations here, formerly controlled by the Central News Company. The Union Company is now in charge. It has announced that it will add considerably to the lines of cigars and tobaccos.

Bobrow Brothers have announced that their factory at Binghamton, New York, has been sold to E. M. Schwarz and Company, of New York, makers of "Mozart" and other high grade brands. The Philadelphia firm had difficulty in getting supplies to the Binhamton plant during the past winter and came to the conclusion that its business could be better handled if centralized at the big plant here and others near the purchasing offices. One of the terms of the sale, it is understool, was that the Schwarz company would continue the factory, thus caring for the force of employes at Binghamton.—"Suits everybody."

Recent visitors to the trade in this city included E. Kleiner, of E. Kleiner, Inc., New York, who stopped off with Mrs. Kleiner on his way for a short vacation at Atlantic City; H. S. Lederer, of A. Oppenheimer Company, New York, manufacturers of G. B. D. pipes; Nat Rosenheim, of San Martin and Leon Company and Harry F. Adams, of the John W. Merriam Company, New York.

Kuenster Brothers, formerly of 712 Arch street, have moved into their new cigar store and pool room at 812 Arch street. L. N. McBride, a cigar dealer formerly of 26th and Toronto streets, has opened a new stand at Germantown avenue above Lehigh, closing the old place.

An awful dent has been put into somebody's business by Rear Admiral Francis A. Bowles, who was sent to this city a few weeks ago to find the Hog in Hog Island, which is the site of the 50 way shipbuilding plant being put up by the American International Shipbuilding Corporation. The Admiral issued a lot of rules. He was about running out of 'em a week ago when he suddenly realized that men were still smoking on the island, so sez he, "cut that out." And they did—some of 'em. Hog Island being a large place with a lot of buildings, shipways, railroad cars and other things on it, a fair percentage of the weed is still being consumed here and there.

Cigars are a little safer in this town since the cops decided to do a little work and in three hours one night last week rounded up about two hundred thieves, near thieves and ordinary hangers-on in the central section of the city. Before this there were so many robberies that the pressure was getting terrific on the safe deposit boxes where dealers had to stack all their stock o'nights.

"Ah, Bill, This Is Democracy"

By R. V. Wright of the Pioneer Division

It was early in the morning. A large, handsome $1,000 Bill turned one of the corners in Washington, and hurried up the avenue which leads to the Treasury Department. Far off in the distance a small brown object was furiously growing up a little cloud of dust, and was literally "burning up" the road.

"Well, well!" exclaimed $1,000 Bill. "I'm a Dutchman if that isn't little old 'Red' Copper Cent. Wonder what the little devil's up to now?"

In a few minutes $1,000 Bill, moving along with his magnificent stride, was within hailing distance of "Red" Copper Cent.

"Hello, 'Red,'" called $1,000 Bill. "What re you doing here?"

"Hello, Bill," came back the answer, Haven't time to stop and talk, old fellow; Frank Vanderlip has just sent for me to come nd help win this war. I'm bound for the Treasury. Where are you going, Bill?"

"Same place, 'Red.' McAdoo has sent for ne. They're going to make ten Liberty Bonds ut of me, I understand."

"By Jove, that's interesting, Bill, Uncle Sam's going to make a Thrift Stamp out of me. Twenty-four of my comrades will be along in few minutes. I'm hurrying to let Vanderlip now that they're mobilizing and will soon be here."

Bill has now caught up with "Red." The little fellow's legs are vibrating like a tuning fork, and he was utilizing every ounce of his energy to keep up with his big brother Bill.

"Your legs are longer than mine, Bill, and you'll no doubt get the edge on me before we get to the Treaseury," apologized "Red," between breaths.

"Tut, tut, 'Red,' we are going in together, even if I do have to slack up a bit. This is the big lesson, we are learning in this war how to keep step, how to march shoulder to shoulder and present a front united to the last man, the ast dollar, the last penny. Ah, 'Red,' this war s working wonders, old fellow. The folks back home had planned for me to go into a touring car this year. I heard them talking about t. Mother and the girls wanted the biggest car in town. They said that the Jones' had just ordered a $7,500 car, and that we would have o order a $10,000 one to retain social leadership. I didn't relish the idea a bit—of spending he remainder of my days speeding down the road and dusting every poor old chap that has o walk. The biggest car in town will almost nake anyone an autocrat, 'Red.'

"Well, before the decision was made, war was declared. Both of the boys in the family are young and brimming with patriotism. They enlisted, and my, but it changed things at home! One of the girls has gone as a nurse. The other wo are busy at the first peep of day, knitting, knitting, knitting. Mother has actually gone back into her own kitchen. There is no meat on meatless days, either. She says she is going to save enough in the kitchen to buy several Liberty Bonds. Father has always said that he was going to retire this year, but he has changed his mind. He is now one of Uncle Sam's $1-a-year men. I am on the way to the Treasury to let Mr. McAdoo know that five hundred more of us are on the way. I am happy this morning, 'Red.' After all, it's not what you get out, but what you put into life that counts. Now, 'Red,' what's your story?"

"Well, Bill," smiled "Red," "I didn't run the hazard of going into a $10,000 touring car, certainly. However, I did come dangerously near to falling in with bad company. You know some 1,600,990,000 of us go into chewing gum every year. Well, little Jack, who delivers papers to buy his clothes and school books, stopped at a slot the other day, and I fairly shuddered for a few minutes. I thought that I, too, was sure to go for chewing gum. Fortunately, his school teacher came along and in a friendly way said: 'You had better save that penny, Jack. We are going to organize a whole company for Uncle's Sam's Army of Thrift tomorrow, and you'll want to join.' Jack laughed and replied: 'Sure I'll join. My big brother is "over there" now, and I want to be a real soldier in Uncle Sam's Army of Thrift.' Little Jack then took his hand out of his pocket and started down the street with his teacher. My, but I was relieved, Bill. I'll tell you it was a close call.

"The next night, father and mother, little Jack and his sister Mary, who works at the telephone exchange, were sitting around the fire. 'Daddy,' said little Jack, 'teacher told us this morning how we could help my big brother and the other boys' big brothers win the war.' Daddy was reading his paper and pulling on a cob pipe. He lowered his paper, looked over his 'specs' and demanded: 'How's that?' Then Jack explained how the Thrift Stamps can help you win a future for yourself, a future for your country, a future for democracy, and a future for civilization, and help bring back big brother all with the same penny. That night the family, made the decision. Mother said that she would save expenses in the kitchen. Sister said that she would walk to work. Jack said that he would cut out gum. And Daddy clinched his big fist, pounded on the table and declared, 'By Golly, I'll save a dollar a week if I have to bust a button in the trying.' So, Bill, we haven't anything on each other after all. We are both soldiers for Uncle Sam. It is just like 'Daddy' said the other night. 'By Golly, the world ain't big enough for the Kaiser and Woodrow Wilson, too, and I have a hunch that the Kaiser'll have to light a shuck and leave these parts soon.'"

"Well, well, 'Red,'" philosophized Bill, "who would have thought it? Who would have thought it!"

"Hold on there, Bill!" shouted little "Red" as he grabbed his big brother Bill by the coat tail, "We're about to pass the Treasury!"

"By Jove, you are right," replied Bill.

"Now, listen, Bill," whispered little "Red," half choked with fear, "you'll have to help me along a bit, old fellow. I've never been here before, and I don't know what to do. You're used to it."

"Oh, never mind that, 'Red,'" replied Bill. "Give me your hand and let me help you along. Frank Vanderlip will make you feel at home. Don't worry about that."

"Ah, Bill, old pal," chuckled little "Red" with a big smile from ear to ear, "this is Democracy."

A Tribute to Tampa Cigar Manufacturers

(Paid Editorially by the Tampa Times.)

Any one who was so fortunate as to have attended the banquet given by the manufacturers in honor of T. Ed. Bryan, chairman of the cigar manufacturers' bureau of the board of trade, with L. P. Dickie and the mayor and owner of this newspaper partially sharing the honors, would quickly have seen why the Times has always been attached to these men as well as to the great industry upon which the real Tampa was founded. Practically every manufacturer is a man of education and wide travel, is interested in Tampa's development, and each is a business man of the first order or he could not survive in a business in which competition is so keen and present conditions so adverse.

These men have passed through some deep waters in marching to the positions they hold in the business world, and but for their integrity and courage, combined with the support of the press and public at Tampa, the local industry might more than once have gone on the rocks. For years, though, it has been so firmly founded that it cannot do other than grow and continue to add to the wealth of the city.

The Times has had knowledge of all phases of labor troubles through which the manufacturers have passed for nearly thirty years, has generally played a part in bringing about a settlement of these difficulties, and invariably justice has prevailed in these settlements. It has only been when the cigarmakers were swayed by scheming, grafting agitators into making unjust demands that such demands fell on deaf ears—and that will continue to be the case when demands of such character are made.

In view of the strikes that have occurred during the period mentioned the outstanding feature of the banquet was the interest manifested by the manufacturers in seeing to the fair treatment of factory workers of all classes—in adjusting all differences justly. While wrestling with fearful problems for a number of years, the manufacturers, individually and collectively, have not for one moment lost sight of the needs of their employes—of the fact that rising prices of food, wearing apparel and all necessities have made conditions hard for them. Therefore they have exercised all the liberality possible, even suffering losses in order that their workers might live under the best possible conditions, and from now on that problem will receive increasing consideration from the manufacturers as well as the manufacturers' bureau of the board of trade.

The Times is glad that the cigar manufacturing clan of Tampa is singularly free from grasping men, and that each, while standing firmly against imposition, regarding the Biblical decree, "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

Serious labor troubles were threatened during the latter months of the past year, but these were avoided principally through the fairness of the manufacturers and the work of mediation done under Mr. Bryan's chairmanship. The Times hopes the present year will be even more free from disturbances, for there is absolutely no reason therefor.

The Times took pride in the character of the men manufacturing cigars in Tampa on the first day of its publication. It takes the same degree of pride to-day.

Business of the Strand Cigarette Co. is exceeding expectations. Orders from all parts of the country are coming in so fast that President Grashof is seriously thinking of looking for larger quarters in addition to the present ones. Philadelphia has sent orders for 50,000 cigarettes; Atlantic City, 25,000; St. Louis, 50,000, and those with orders from other cities bring the total to 750,000, which speak well, considering the length of time that this high-class brand has been on the market.

WHEN THE BOYS CAME HOME IN "65"

Manila cigars then held a firm place on the American Market. SIX and NINE cents were popular prices for smokes at the close of the Civil War, and Manilas sold for exactly the same money—size for size—as the Imported Havanas.

High Tariffs, made necessary by the public debt and the cost of war, excluded Manila cigars from the United States until Free Trade was again established with the Philippine Islands in 1910. SINCE THEN THAT TRADE HAS GROWN FROM 67,261,-545, IMPORTED IN 1915, TO 215,693,368 IN 1917.

SIGNING UNREAD CONTRACTS

(Copyrighted, 1918, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Every once in a while I like to get back to the subject of signing contracts without reading them. I have written several articles on this subject, but no point of law needs more emphasis, and no legal requirement is violated oftener ,or by a greater number of business men. Every time, therefore, that such a case arises in my own practice, I like to say something about it if it has any interesting features. I will report a case like this in this article.

A retail merchant, with a good-sized store, much experience, and large intelligence was busy one day when he was accosted by a solicitor. The solicitor was selling a puzzle advertising scheme which was supposed to attract children to the store. He endeavored to interest this merchant. The latter wasn't interested. The puzzles were to be delivered every week for a year, with a fixed charge per week, and in the course of a year the cost ran into considerable money. The salesman talked and the merchant fended him off, and finally the solicitor said, "Well, let me send it to you for one week. That won't amount to much, and you can see how it goes." The merchant, to get rid of him, agreed to this, and the solicitor then produced a printed form, filled with fine type. "All right," he said, "I'll just send it to you for one week. You sign this." The merchant hastily signed in order to have done with the matter. He did not read what he signed.

Several days later he received word from the solicitor's employer acknowledging receipt of contract for one year, and stating that four weeks' supply had been shipped. The four weeks' supply duly came and was rejected by the merchant in high indignation. When he got his copy of what he had signed—the solicitor left him one—his indignation changed to doubt, and he then consulted counsel.

"Is that your signature to the contract?" I asked him.

It was.

"Did the solicitor give you plenty of chance to read it before you signed it?"

"I suppose so; he gave it into my hand."
